Unannranriated surplus carried over to the following year

The figures for years prior to 1901 are not given above, because we have not had them revised to conform to the present system of accounting, but from 1895 onward they tell practically the same story—that is, the charges to maintenance of way from 1895 to 1904 were abnormal as compared with the years 1905 to 1910. During this 10-year period the density of tonnage per mile of line has increased about 30 per cent. Three of the large items of operating expenses, namely, maintenance of equipment, compensation to labor and material, fuel, and supplies, show an increase somewhat proportionate to the increase in density of tonnage, while the fourth large item of operating expense—maintenance of way and structures—has decreased from $3,057 per mile in 1901 and $3,340 in 1902 to $2,404 in 1910. The only inference which can be drawn from these figures is that in the period from 1895 to 1902 the shareholders elected to devote surplus earnings to rebuilding and improving their road instead of distributing the earnings to themselves in the form of dividends. The excess of the maintenance of way item alone for several years prior to 1903 over that for 1910 was sufficent to pay a 2 per cent dividend on the stock. The devotion of earnings to permanent improvements and betterments was no doubt a wise policy on the part of those in control of the road. But the indications are that the shareholders have already received the benefit of that policy, even though it has not come in the form of cash dividends covering the period in question. From 1894 to 1903 the average market value of Lehigh Valley Railroad stock was in the neighborhood of $75 per share. At this writing the same stock is quoted at $178. Thus a person who had invested in Lehigh Valley at par prior to 1904 has benefited by an appreciation in value of his stock to the amount of 5 per cent per annum since 1894 and has received dividends gradually increased from 2 per cent to 5 per cent since 1905. The earnings in 1910 were sufficient to pay a dividend of 20.12 per cent, but the company elected to increase its unappropriated surplus from $19,212,252 in 1909 to $27,-219,890 in 1910. Moreover, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company has been carrying amongst its assets certificates of indebtedness of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company amounting to $10,537,000, upon which no interest is collected. Interest on this indebtedness would be sufficient to pay a 1 per cent dividend on the stock.

We should hesitate to assent to defendant's first proposition, that present shippers must bear the burden of earlier misfortunes of the road, but it is unnecessary to decide that point in this case, because it has been sufficiently demonstrated that the shareholders have received a fair return on their investment, taking into consideration the money actually received in dividends, the increased value of their shares, the increased value of the property, and the large unappropriated surplus. It follows, therefore, that the allowance in the Wilgus estimate of 10 cents per ton to make up for this alleged deficit should be eliminated from the calculation.

Defendant's second and third contentions that the rates should be sufficient to guarantee a fair annual return on the investment and to provide reasonably for keeping the property up to improved modern methods are sound, but have little bearing on this case, in view of the summary of the road's finances above set forth. It will be noted by referring to that tabulation that defendant's corporate income was sufficient to pay a dividend on the capital stock of 16 per cent in 1905, 17 per cent in 1906, 20 per cent in 1907. Instead of paying such dividends it has paid 5 per cent on its capital stock, appropriated to additions, betterments and improvements sums ranging from $5,0,000 to $2,005,500 per sansing, and has becreased its unproprieted surplus from nothing in 1902 to $27,213,780 in 1910. Certainly if must be conceded that the proper maintenance of the property.

The present rates provide liberally for a fair annual return on the investment and the proper maintenance of the property.

Sacris $10,37,000 nonlinerest bearing certificates of indebtedness of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company. At 5 per cent per annum the interest on these certificates would be $22,850. The latter sum is in all substantion of the total tomange from the anthractic field shipped by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company does not appear, but it is of record that it ships about 95 per cent of the coal to tidewater. If its proportion of the total tomange from the anthractic field shipped by the Lehigh and the state of $2,000,000 tons; and the net result of the transportation as between it and its competitors was the same as if it had add its coal transported for 5 cents per ton less than the independent dealers. Referring to the same matter in Coxe Brothers Co. c. L. V.

"The rallroad company advances to the coal company nearly $7,000,000 with which to transported for 5 cents per ton less than the independent dealers. Referring to the same matter in Coxe Brothers Co. c. L. V.

"The rallroad company advances to the coal company, rearly $7,000,000 with which to transact its business, and for the use of which the rallroad company receives a realized of the coal company. The value of the annual use of such advances at 5 per cent interest amounts of the disadvances to company perference given to said coal company, to the disadvances of any other competitors of company and other shippers who receive no advances. The advantage of like advances if made to company and the same perference and unjust discrimination. The fact that the road was interested in the coal company, as the owner of its capital stock, does not make lawful what would be unlawful without such interest."

ORDER

At a general session of the Interstate Commerce Commission, held at its office in Washington, D. C., on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1911. Present: Judson C. Clements, Charles A. Prouty, Franklin K. Lane, Edgar E. Clark, James S. Harlan, Charles C. McChord, Balthasar H. Meyer, Commissioners.

No. 1180. Henry E. Meeker and Caroline H. Meeker, copartners, trading as Meeker & Company, v. Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

This case being at issue upon complaint and answer on file, and having been duly heard and submitted by the parties, and full investigation of the matters and things involved having been had, and the commission having, on the date hereof, made and filed a report containing its findings of fact and conclusions thereon, which said report is hereby referred to and made a part hereof:

It is ordered, That defendant Lehigh Valley Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, notified and required to cease and desist, on or before the 15th day of August, 1911, and for a period of two years thereafter to abstain, from charging, demanding, collecting, or receiving its present rates for the transportation of anthractic coal in carloads from the Wyoming coal region in Pennsylvania to Perth Amboy, N. J., as follows, to wit: Upon prepared sizes, $1.55 per gross ton; on pea coal, $1.40 per gross ton; and on buckwheat coal, $1.20 per gross ton; which said rates have been found by the commission in its said report to be unreasonable.

It is further ordered. That said defendant be, and it is hereby, notified and required to establish, on or before the 15th day of August, 1911, and for a period of two years thereafter to maintain, and apply to the transportation of anthracite coal in carloads from the Wyoming coal region in Pennsylvania to Perth Amboy, N. J., rates not in excess of the following, to wit: $1.40 per gross ton on prepared sizes of said coal; $1.30 per gross ton on pea coal; and $1.15 per gross ton on buckwheat coal; which said rates have been found by the commission in its said report to be reasonable.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,

I. John H. Marble, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, do hereby certify that the papers hereto attached are true copies of the complaint and answer filed in the case of Marian Coal Company against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, docket No. 3592, and reports and orders filed by the commission in said case on June S. 1912, and October 19, 1912, the originals of which are now on file and of record in the office of this commission.

In testimony whereof I have hereanto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of the commission this 9th day of December, 1912.

JOHN H. MARBLE, Secretary,

(Before the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, Marian Coal Company v. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company. Docket No. —.)

Complaint.

The petition of the above-named complainant respectfully shows:

The Marian Coal Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office in the city of Wilmington in the State of Delaware.

The said complainant is engaged in the business of cleaning, preparing, shipping, and selling that character of anthracite coal known in the trade as washery coal, reclaiming from the refuse discarded in the early history of anthracite mining the small pieces of coal which, at such early period were not marketable, but which are now valuable, particularly for steaming purposes. Its washery is located in the borough of Taylor, Lackawanna County, Pennsylvania, distant 2,500 feet from the Bloomsburg Division of the defendant carrier and is situate upon a switch serving three collieries supposed to belong to the defendant or to the D., L. & W. Coal Company, an organization affiliated with the defendant carrier. Large quantities of fresh-mined coal, as well as other washery coal, is transported over this switch for shipment intra and inter state.

The defendant railway is a common carrier organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, engaged in the transportation of passengers and property by railroad, or by rail-and-water transportation, by continuous carriage or shipment between the plant of the complainant located in the State of Pennsylvania aforesaid to points designated hereinafter situate in the States of Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey, over its own road, and it operates, leases, owns, and controls certain railways which are part of its system and are made subject to this complaint, issuing tariff sheets over such line as part of its system, and is subject to the provisions of the act of Congress to regulate interstate commerce of the 14th February, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. More than half of its business is the transportation of anthracite coal, and of the anthracite coal transported more than uniety per cent (90%) is produced by the D., L. & W. Coal Co., the capital stock of which defendant owns, or is coal purchased by said coal company from individual operators under contracts covering all coal produced or to be produced by them.

The defendant carrier has established rates for the transportation of the product of the complainant from its plant in the borough of Taylor aforesaid to the destinations hereinafter specified, which severally constitute an unjust and unreasonable charge for the service rendered to the complainant, and are in violation of the first section of the act of Congress to regulate interstate commerce of the 14th February, 1887, and the acts supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof. These several destinations are specified as follows, to wit:

All stations between the borough of Taylor and the several terminals of the defendant railway in the city of Hoboken and Jersey City, in the State of New York, and to points between the plant of the complainant and the city of Buffalo, and the city of Oswego, New York, and in the vicinity of said cities in the State of New York.

of New York.

All points alluded to will be found in I. C. C. Tariff No. 6095.

The complainant avers, that from April 6, 1907, to August 1, 1909, the defendant railway violated section four (4) of the act to regulate commerce, in that it charged and received a greater compensation for the transportation of property for a shorter than for a longer distance, over the same line or route and in the same directions, the shorter being included within the longer distances. By its Tariff I. C. C. No. 6995, the defendant railway, after this complainant had complained to the defendant of the unjust rates, reduced slightly certain of its rates, but is still violating the spirit and intent of the section of the act mentioned, by charging and receiving as great a compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance. The complainant makes specific reference to Tariffs I. C. C. No. 4222-No. 4223 and to joint freight Tariff No. C 3449, D., L. & W. R. R. in connection with Bangor and Portland, the two first mentioned having been cancelled by I. C. C. No. 6095, hereinabove mentioned.

The rates charged to all points on the line of the defendant railway are unjust and unreasonable, particularly so at intermediate points, both intra and interstate, as shown by the tariff mentioned. The rates charged for the transportation of rice and barley coal are also particularly unjust and unreasonable, as shown by Tariff I. C. C. No. 6095, and are burdensome to the complainant, 75 per cent of whose product is rice and barley coal. The defendant railway has recognized that on account of the slight value of rice and barley coal, at origin, it should bear a less rate of freight than coal of a greater value. The freight rate charged upon barley coal being, for example, from origin to Hoboken, one dollar and thirty-five cents ($1.35) per gross ton, while the price of said coal f. o. b. at Hoboken is one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50). The actual cost of preparing barley coal is about thirty cents ($30 cents) per ton, cost of selling ten cents (10 cents) additional. This size is selling locally at from forty to forty-five cents (40 to 45 cents) per ton, cost of selling ten cents (10 cents) additional. This size is selling locally at from forty to forty-five cents (40 to 45 cents) per ton. The freight rate charged upon rice coal, which is a size larger than barley coal, for example, is from origin to Hoboken one dollar and thirty-five cents ($1.35), while the selling price of coal f. o. b. at Hoboken, is two dollars ($2.00) per ton. The actual cost of preparing rice coal being about forty cents (40 cents) per ton, plus ten cents (10 cents) additional for selling expense. The price locally being from ninety cents (90 cents) to one dollar ($1.00) per ton.

It thus appears that taking the actual cost of barley coal, which amounts to about sixty per cent (60 per cent) of complainant's output, at tidewater, freight added, is one dollar and seventy-five cents ($1.75); it sells at Hoboken at one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50), at a lose of twenty-five cents (25 cents).

The rice coal costs the complainant forty cents (40 cents) per ton to prepare, ten cents (10 cents) per ton for selling expense, and the freight, one dollar and thirty-five cents ($1.35), showing a net cost of one dollar and eighty-five cents ($1.85). It sells at Hoboken, the intrinsic value of which is from ninety cents (90 cents) to one dollar ($1.00) per ton at origin.

The defendant also ha

($1.43); buckwheat coal, one dollar and twenty-eight cents ($1.26), and for rice and barley, one dollar and thriteen cents ($1.13), and such charge for transportation includes the service of transfer from car to vessel.

The coal company affiliated with the railroad company charges for barley coal at its mines at Taylor one dollar ($1.00) per gross ton; for rice coal, one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per gross ton; and for buckwheat, two dollars ($2.00) per gross ton.

By reason of the injustice complained of the complainant is unable to ship his product to points on the line of the D., L. & W. R. R. at a profit except as to pea coal and sizes larger.

The defendant carrier owns the capital stock of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Company, which also mines and ships from the Lackawanna and Wyoming coal regions of Pennsylvania via the defendant road coals of the various sizes shipped by this complainant, and by reason of the conditions imposed upon complainant by the defendant subjects the latter to unjust conditions of competition.

The defendant has charged the complainant a switching charge in addition to the charges for hauls on the main line to some of the destinations lying between the points hereinabove designated to which it has not subjected other shippers of the like product shipping the same under similar circumstances and like conditions, the said switching charges having been absorbed in the haul to such destinations.

In some instances the defendant carrier has imposed a switching charge upon some shippers much less than the switching charge imposed upon complainant's product for much more expensive service. The complainant avers that the defendant has no right to impose any charge whatever upon its product for much more expensive service. The complainant avers that the defendant has no right to impose any charge whatever upon its product for much more expensive service. The complainant avers that the defendant has no right to impose any charge whatever upon its product as a switching cha

The complainant has been and now is compelled to ship its product over the defendant's road by reason of the refusal of the defendant and other carriers to establish reasonable and just through joint rates, which should absorb the switching or transfer charges to connecting carriers, and complainant avers that the defendant carrier or its coal company has enjoyed a transfer charge as low as three cents (3 cents) per ton for similar service to interstate destinations, rates to which were requested by this complainant to be put into effect, and has performed service more expensive for competitors affiliated with other railroads constituting the Anthracite Coal Trust at much less than has been exacted of this complainant. In some instances, as complainant believes, the switching or transfer charges have been absorbed in the through joint rate. By these unjust and discriminatory acts the complainant has been unable to secure equality of conditions with competitors constituting the Anthracite Coal Trust, and has been and is at a great disadvantage as a result thereof.

The complainant avers that the defendant carrier has willfully violated the sixth section of the act of Congress, in that it has not printed and kept open to public inspection the schedules required under this section of the said act of Congress, nor has it observed the modified requirements of the commission, which requires common carriers to permit shippers to have access to such schedules in the hands of the freight representatives of carriers subject to the act, and has not filed and published in conformance with the provisions of the act mentioned the rates, fares, and charges imposed upon the product of the complainant as required by said section. The complainant made application at the proper freight offices at Taylor, Pa., and Scranton, Pa., three miles from Taylor, and to the freight office in the city of New York for the rates of freight applicable to his product, and further requested the defendant carrier to exhibit to him certain agreements for switching services performed in interstate traffic, for competitors of the complainant, such competitors being coal companies affiliated with various railroads transporting anthractic coal and other products as common carriers over their lines, under like circumstances and similar conditions, specifically stating to the freight agents of such company the particular agreements or freight traffic contracts in force, either written or in parol, existing between such companies and the coal companies specified. The railway freight agents denied the existence of such agreements. The complainant then requested Mr. E. E. Loomis, vice president of said railroad company, in charge of the coal department, to whom the complainant's letter was referred for a reply, to furnish him the information requested of the freight agents.

The defendant railway freight officials instead of giving to the complainant the information which would enable him to ascertain the rates of freight charged to various destinations, referred him to the officials of the coal department, which fixes the rates upon anthracite coal, and is a competitor of your complainant.

VI

VI.

The rate of freight as shown in the tariff cited hereinabove is not a rate imposed upon all shippers alike. The rate obtained from the D., L. & W. Coal Company and from individual operators who sell all their coal to the said company, is based upon a monopoly, maintained through the device of the Temple Iron Company, the directors of which are presidents of the railroad company constituting the Anthracite Coal Trust, and it in effect fixes the price of coal, the freight rate upon such coal is fixed by a percentage of the average price of coal as reported by a bureau maintained by the Coal Trust, to have been received by the various companies constituting the Coal Trust for coal sold at tidewater. The railroads formerly and now the coal companies affiliated therewith sell the coal, making no charge therefor to such operators as enjoy the benefit of the contracts, while complainant must sell its own product and suffer its own losses for bad accounts. The effect of this illegal system of rate making is to enable the Coal Trust to maintain a rate to one class of shippers different from that imposed upon another class, and the rate changes many times each year to one class without notice of change to the other class. In April it decreases, and then the price of coal advancing each month, each month the freight rate advances, thus constituting an illegal device and subjecting the complainant to conditions prohibited by the act to regulate interstate commerce. The rates on complainant's coal have been fixed by the coal company's representatives.

VII.

In deliveries locally the defendant coal company sells delivered at Scranton at the same price it charges at the breaker, which is located within a few hundred feet of complainant's washery, the complainant being subject to a delivery charge of thirty cents (30 cents) per ton. The defendant, the D., L. & W. Coal Company, sells coal delivered along the line, intra and interstate, at a price much less than the freight with the price charged for the coal at its said breaker added, which prices are: For buckwheat, two dollars per ton ($2.00); rice, one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per ton; and barley, one dollar ($1.00) per ton; thus preventing the complainant from competing at line points. The unjust amount charged for freight is sufficient to prevent competition by complainants, or other independent shippers, and ultimately must drive the few remaining operators out of the field. When complainant has attempted to ship on the line of the defendant railroad, the defendant's officials have protested to complainant's agents, claiming the line trade as its own.

VIII.

The complainant believes and therefore avers, that the defendant carrier has charged it a compensation greater for services rendered it in the transportation of its commodity, than it has charged, collected, or received from other persons, firms, or corporations for contemporaneous services in the transportation of like traffic under substantially the same circumstances and conditions in violation of the second section of the act of Congress hereinabove recited.

IX.

The several acts in violation of the act of Congress, your complainant believes, together with other acts upon the part of the defendant company, were done for the deliberate purpose of driving the complainant out of business as a producer of coal in competition with the coal company affiliated with the defendant carrier. The acts, in detail, are as follows:

ant out of business as a producer of coal in competition with the coal company affiliated with the defendant carrier. The acts, in detail, are as follows:

A. The defendant attempted to compel the complainant to sell its coal to it upon an agreement which would require the complainant to restrict its output to such an extent as to make it impossible for the complainant to exist, at the same time compelling the complainant to rate its capacity at much less than its actual capacity.

B. It refused to quote the complainant rates, local or intrastate, and stated that they did not have the tariffs required under the law to be posted at its freight stations, which complainant did not then understand, so that complainant could use the same. During the entire period that this continued the complainant was obliged to sell its product to the defendant railroad. Upon the size of coal which could be produced at a profit at the price received by the defendant it wrongfully procured the condemnation of 95 per cent thereof, although said coal was of as good quality as the defendant was producing at its washeries, prepared with machinery equally as good, if not better, than the machinery used in the washeries of said defendant company. Instead of inspecting the coal by ascertaining the average character thereof in the manner in force with other producing shippers, the defendant's inspector persistently took the coal for test from under the lip screens, where of necessity the percentage of foreign matter would be large, and condemned complainant's buckwheat coal, as hereinabove stated. Upon the sizes of coal which are by-products of a washery, to wit, sizes smaller than buckwheat coal, upon which there would be no possible profit at the prices received from the railroad company, it took freely. For example, for the size of coal known as buckwheat, which it sold 2,500 feet distant from complainant's plant for two dollars ($2,00), it paid complainant one dollar and ten cents ($1.10) per ton; and for coal sold at said point of the the names of which the representative of the complainant had given in confidence, that should they purchase the property they would buy a lawsuit, and then immediately theresfere notified the complainant that it is not not all the purchase. The complainant endeavored to sell its coal to wholesale purchasers, who were requested by the coal department of said railroad not to purchase its product under the pain of the displeasure of the defendant carrier.

D. The defendant attempted to compel the complainant to size a defendant carrier.

D. The defendant attempted to compel the complainant to size a product under the pain of the displeasure of the world permit a continuance of the acts mentioned in the second paragraph of this article. The plaintiff suggested that it ought to have the right, in case the defendant campany should condemn its coal, to sell the coal so condemned in the open market, which the defendant is said contract refused to insert a clause governing the methods of inspection, such as the defendant had agreed to do with other individual operators of which it purchased coal, whereby the coal taken for the purpose of test of quality should be taken from various points upon the carried of the product of under the ly screens, when defendant and declined to entering the complex of the complex of the complex of the said of the coal under the conditions exacted by the defendant.

E. After the defendant relivary, without any duty upon its part to open market the defendant part of the said of the coal under the conditions exacted by the defendant.

E. After the defendant relivary, without any duty upon its part to open market the defendant part of the said of the coal under the conditions exacted by the defendant.

E. After the defendant relivary, without any duty upon its part to open market the defendant part of the said of the coal under the conditions exacted by the coal taken the part of the said of the coal under the coal data that the part of the said of the coal under the coal that the part of the Complainant has repeatedly protested against the several unjust and illegal acts complained of and sought to secure a fair adjustment of the several complaints, and has asked the defendant to create an equality of the conditions of competition with defendant's coal company and others, but has been unable to secure the same.

By reason of the refusal upon the part of the defendant company to absorb the switching charge in its through rate to interstate points, and by reason of its discrimination in the switching charge for interstate and intrastate shipments, and on account of the acts herein complained of, the complainant has been prevented from marketing its product in such quantity as would enable it to continue its business except at an enormous loss. Its competitors were enjoying switching rates tabulated as follows: as follows

Five cents (5 cents) per gross ton for a distance of about nine miles. One dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per car for a distance of about

One dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per car.

One dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per car.

Inine miles.

Twelve cents (12 cents) per gross ton through a crowded and expensive yard, distant about two and one-half miles.

Two dollars ($2.00) per car for varying distances from three to five miles. And at numerous other points as your complainant is informed and believes rates are equally as discriminatory against the defendant as the rates hereinabove quoted.

This petition is presented upon behalf of the complainant and such other persons, firms, or corporations as may hereafter by proper petition become parties in interest to this sult. And the complainant hereby claims damages to the amount of fifty-five thousand two hundred and thirty-eight and twenty-seven one-hundredths dollars ($55,238.27) with interest, and demands reparation, and attaches hereto a statement which is made a part hereof, detailing the origin of the freight, destination, date of shipment, car number, car initial, size of coal, weight, rate charged.

Wherefore your petitioner prays:

First. That the defendant carrier may be required to answer the charges herein set out, and that after due hearing and investigation and ascertainment of lawful rates, and of the violations of law herein complained of, an order be made requiring the defendant to cease and desist from the several violations of the act to regulate commerce herein specified.

The defendant answers the complaint of the complainant herein, as follows:

First. It admits the allegations contained in the paragraph of said complaint marked "I," except that it is not advised as to the exact distance of complainant's washery from the Bloomsburg division of the defendant's railroad, and except that it denies that the Delaware, Lack awamna and Western Coal Company is an organization affiliated with the defendant.

Second. It admits that the defendant is a common carrier, organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, engaged in the transportation of passengers and property by railroad by continuous carriage or shipment between the plant of the complainant to points in the States of Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey over its own road, and that it operates, leases, owns, and controls certain railways which are part of its system, issuing tariff sheets over such lines as part of its system, and that as to the interstate part or portion of transportation over such roads it is subject to the provisions of the act of Congress to regulate interstate commerce of the 14th of February, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, in so far as said acts are constitutional and enforceable.

It admits that a large amount of its business is the transportation of anthracite coal. It denies that 90 per cent or any of the coal so transported is produced by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company or that the capital stock of said company or any part thereof is owned by the defendant.

It admits that defendant has established rates for the transportation of the producet of complainant from its plant as set forth in D., L. & W. Tariff, I. C. C. No. 6005.

It denies that any of the rates so established constitute an unjust or unreasonable charge for the services rendered or that they are in violation of the first section of the act of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, or any other law. It denies that any of the rates therein set forth or rice and b prejudice or disadvantage or discrimination.

Third. It denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph IV of said complaint.

Fourth. As to the allegations contained in paragraph marked "V" of said complaint, defendant denies each and every allegation thereof.

Fifth. It denies each and every allegation in paragraph marked "VI" of said complaint contained, except that it admits that this defendant formerly sold such coal as it purchased from independent operators at the mine, making no charge therefor to such independent operators, and that since August, 1909, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company likewise has sold coal so purchased by contract without making charge therefor to such independent operators.

Sixth. Answering the allegations contained in the paragraph marked "VII" of said complaint, this defendant says that it has no knowledge or information sufficient to enable it to answer the allegations of said paragraph, except that it denies that it has any coal company, that any unjust amounts are charged complainant for freight, or that such charges are sufficient to prevent competition by complainant has attempted to ship on the line of the defendant's railroad, or that the defendant's officials have claimed the line trade as its own. Defendant alleges that it is not now and has not been since August 2nd, 1909, in the business of selling coal at any point on its line or elsewhere, except in the State of Pennsylvania.

Seventh. It denies each and every allegation contained in paragraph marked "VII" of the allegations in paragraph marked from the complainant, the defendant admits that it purchased from the complainant, from time to time during the period referred to in the complaint, various sizes of coal at a fair price for such coal, and that it resold said coal at the best price obtainable. Whether the purchase price or selling price of such coal was as alleged in the complaint this defendant is at this time unable to answer, except to say that such prices are immaterial. It admits that considerable water is required in preparing coal at washeries and that complainant had been using water of a stream passing through or near its property. It further admits that its connecting carriers, or some of them, have refused to put in effect a joint through rate which would absorb any switching charge imposed by the defendant upon complainant's traffic. Defendant has no knowledge as to the reason given by the connecting lines for not joining in a through rate, except that such connecting lines for not joining in a through rate, except that such connecting lines for not line refused to absorb any switching charge of the defendant unless such switching charge was added to the charges applicable generally throughout the anthracite region to the transportation of coal therefrom. That it admits that in the latter part of the year 1906 a culm bank on the land of this defendant became ignited, and that there was on or about said time a fire in the culm bank of complainant which consumed considerable material and which was extinguished or cut off by complainant at considerable expense. It further admits that the defendant charged the complainant about 30¢ per ton for hauling its coal from the washery to the connection with the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

It denies each and every other allegation in said paragraph marked "IX."

Ninth. Defendant against mandat and motor of the complainant has reserved and every other allegation of the complainant has reserved.

"IX."

Ninth. Defendant admits that an officer of the complainant has repeatedly and continuously complained and protested against the defendant's alleged ill-treatment of complainant, including some of the alleged illegal acts herein complained of, and has demanded adjustments in respect to such last mentioned complaints without success.

It denies, as it has heretofore denied, any illegal acts or injustice in its relations with complainant.

in its relations with complainant.

Tenth. As to the allegations of paragraph "XI" of said complaint, defendant says that there is no switching charge at point of origin, in addition to any through rate which it has made, applicable to complainant's coal; that it has not unlawfully discriminated against complainant in any switching charge established. It admits that it has established switching charges at 5¢ and 12¢ per gross ton and of $1.50 and $2.00 per car, but it alleges that the circumstances and conditions surrounding the transportation and traffic covered by such charges are substantially dissimilar to those surrounding the traffic of complainant.

Eleventh, As to the paragraph marked "XII" of said complaint it.

complainant.

Eleventh. As to the paragraph marked "XII" of said complaint, it alleges that it has not completed its check of the detailed statement attached to said complaint and is unable to admit or deny the accuracy thereof, and demands due proof thereof.

THE DELAWARE LACKAWANNA & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY,

(Opinion No. 1925—Interstate Commerce Commission. No. 3592. Marian Coal Company v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company. Submitted May 16, 1912. Decided June 8, 1912.)

Upon complaint attacking defendant's rates on anthracite coal from the Lackawanna (Wyoming) coal region of Pennsylvania to tidewater, Held:

Heid:

1. That the rates of defendant per long ton on anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J. (f. o. b. vessel), of $1.58 on prepared sizes, $1.43 on pea, and $1.28 on buckwheat, are excessive and unreasonable in and to the extent that they exceed $1.33 on prepared sizes, $1.24 on pea, and $1.09 on buckwheat, and that for the future the latter rates must not be exceeded for such movement.

2. That the complainant is entitled to reparation upon basis of the rates herein found reasonable as applied to such of the shipments embraced in its claim as were delivered within the statutory period of two years prior to the date of filing complaint. No conclusion as to the amount of the award will be given at this time, and this question will be held in abeyance for determination in a supplemental report.

W. S. Jenney and J. L. Seager for defendant.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

MEYER, Commissioner:

Meyer, Commissioner:

The complaint in this proceeding, filed on October 18, 1910, puts in issue the reasonableness of defendant's rates, local and proportional, on anthractic coal from Taylor, Pa., to all points on that line, and specifically seeks the establishment by the commission of rates from the Lackawanna (Wyoming) coal region of Pennsylvania to Hoboken, N. J., f. o. b. vessel there, of not more than 95 cents per gross ton on sizes larger than pea, 90 cents on sizes known as pea and buckwheat, and 75 cents on sizes known as rice and barley. Reparation in the sum of $55,238.27 is asked for the imposition of alleged excessive rates on numerous carload shipments.

On March 13, 1911, the complainant filed another petition, No. 3931, in which it asks that the commission require the defendant herein and other carriers to establish through routes and joint rates from Taylor to specified points without the State of Pennsylvania. This complaint and No. 3592 were heard together, but before the hearing had been concluded it was announced that certain of the defendants would establish through routes and joint rates in connection with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad. This intention led to an agreement with the complainant to discontinue further proceedings in No. 3931 unless the routes and rates were not made effective as proposed. It appears that only two of the defendants, the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Pennsylvania Railroad, have published joint rates to points on their lines. Under the circumstances we can not in justice to the complainant dismiss this case. If an adjustment of the matter, as outlined at the hearing, is not made by all the defendants, as it has been made by the above-named two, the proceeding will be resumed with the view of making an appropriate order. The reasonableness per se of the rates established or proposed is not in issue, and the agreement in question does not prejudice the right of the complainant to test the reasonableness of such rates by the filing of a new which at such early period were not marketable, but which are now valuable, especially for steaming purposes, owing to improved methods until reference of the market is located in the borough of Taylor, Lackawanna County, Pa., about 2,500 feet from the Bloomsburg division of defendant's line. It is served by a spur track connecting with such division mear Taylor, a point about 3 miles were contained in the property of the prop

That the traffic handled by the defendant has been very remunerative is revealed by the following financial statement and condensed balance sheet compiled from the annual reports of that carrier to the commission for the last four years:

Rate of dividends from both income and surplus, 1911, 20 per cent; 1910, 85 per cent; 1909, 20 per cent; 1908, 20 per cent.

Note.—The capitalization covers both railroad and coal properties.

In former reports an assignment of $10,000,000 was made to other properties, purporting to represent the capital cost of coal properties, etc. The division was purely arbitrary and had no basis. The two interests are inseparable and we do not care to guess how much is applicable to either." (Annual Report, 1908, p. 28.)

This financial statement shows a high degree of prosperity. With practically no bonded indebtedness, the dividends actually paid in four years are nearly one and a half times the par value of the stock. At the same time there have been expended, since June 30, 1907, out of income for improvements over eleven million dollars, leaving a surplus in 1911 of over thirty-five million dollars. It is true that these returns in part come out of the profits of coal mining, but the capitalization covers both the railroad and coal properties. It should be noted, however, that the capitalization of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western per mile of all tracks is low as compared with roads in this territory, including the other anthractic roads.

In the case of Meeker & Co. v. L. V. R. R. Co., 21 I. C. C., 120, the commission reached the conclusion that the rates for the transportation of coal from the Wyoming region of Pennsylvania to Perth Amboy, N. J. (tidewater), of $1.55 per ton on prepared sizes, $1.40 on pen, and $1.20 on buckwheat, were unreasonable so far as they exceeded $1.40 on prepared sizes, $1.30 on pen, and $1.15 on buckwheat. These reductions of 15, 10, and 5 cents, respectively, were on rates which applied for an average distance of 165 miles. The maximum rates established by the commission afford the carrier ton-mile earnings of 8.48, 7.87, and 6.96 mills, respectively. Upon this basis the rates to tidewater of the defendant herein would be approximately $1.31 on prepared sizes, $1.22 on pea, and $1.08 on buckwheat.

Following is a comparison for the past 10 years of the anthracite coal rates per gross ton maintained by the Lackawanna and Lehigh Valley Railroads and the Central Railroad of New Jersey from the Wyoming region of Pennsylvania to tidewater:

It will be seen from this table that the tidewater rates on prepared sizes, pea, and buckwheat over these lines have remained unchanged for 10 years past except over the Lehigh Valley, which reduced its rate on buckwheat 5 cents per ton on January 10, 1905, and on October 15, 1911, established the lower rates on the three sizes in accordance with the commission's order in the Meeker case, supra. In this connection it is worthy of note that this carrier confined the latter reduction to the rates from the Wyoming region alone, although it had always, prior to that time, maintained the same rates from the Lehigh, Schuyikill, and Wyoming regions.

The defendant and the Lehigh Valley Railroad also transport anthractic coal from the Wyoming region to the Lake Eric port of Buffalo for shipment beyond. A comparison of the present rates per gross ton for this movement is as follows:

	Prepared sizes.	Pea.	Buck- wheat.	Rice and barley.
Mines on Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. R. to Buffalo, N. Y	$2.00	$1.75	$1.75	$1.75
llines on Lehigh Valley R. R. to Buffalo, N. Y., f. o. b. vessel	2.25	2.00	2.00	2.00
Mines on Lehigh Valley R. R. to Buffalo, N. Y., for reshipment via rail	2.00	1.75	1.75	1.75

The distance to Buffalo via the line of the defendant from Wyoming, Pa., which may be taken as a representative point of origin, is 277.6 miles, and the rate per ton per mile on prepared sizes is 7.2 mills, or 3.4 mills less than the rate under attack, from Taylor, Pa., to tidewater, a distance of 147.8 miles. Via the Lehigh Valley from Wyoming, Pa., to Buffalo the distance is 273 miles, and the rate per ton per mile on prepared sizes, for reshipment by rail, is 7.3 mills, and f. o. b. vessel 8.2 mills. The Lehigh Valley rate on prepared sizes from the Wyoming region to tidewater, a distance of 165 miles, was, until reduced by the commission, 9.4 mills. This table shows that on coal to the Lakes no difference is made in the rates on pea, buckwheat, rice, and barley.

A study of the anthracite-coal movement of the principal coal-carrying roads shows that the bulk of the tidewater coal goes to the New York terminals, and that this tonnage is greatly in excess of the 2ggregate tonnage to all Lake Erie and Lake Ontario ports, including Buffalo, for domestic as well as Canadian destinations. The following is a statement of the total anthracite movement of eight originating carriers for the last two calendar years:

These figures show the quantities of anthracite coal handled over tidewater docks at New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; also exports from these three ports as well as from Newark and Perth Amboy, N. Some of these exports, especially at New York, may be contained in the totals of tidewater coal reported by the carriers, but as the exports are relatively small the error resulting from either adding or disregarding the export figures would not be very serious.

The lake shipments of anthracite coal during the same calendar years were as follows:

The foregoing tables have been compiled from data in the possession of the commission.

No definite calculation of initial and terminal expenses was submitted by defendant although it endeavored to show that they are "extremely expensive." It is clear, however, that any possible allowance on account of such extra cost would not bring the total operating expenses to a point where rates of $1.33 on prepared sizes, $1.24 on pea, and $1.09 on buckwheat would not be highly remunerative for the average haul of 155 miles from the mines to tidewater. These rates are based on a consideration of the ton-mile rates established by the commission in the Meeker case, supra, making due allowance for the fact that for a shorter distance the ton-mile rate should be slightly higher.

are based on a consideration of the ton-mile rates established by the commission in the Meeker case, supra, making due allowance for the fact that for a shorter distance the ton-mile rate should be slightly higher.

Considering all the facts of record, we are of the opinion that the defendant's rates per long ton on anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J. (f. o. b. vessel), of $1.58 on prepared sizes, $1.43 on pen, and $1.28 on buckwheat are excessive and unreasonable in and to the extent that they exceed $1.33 on prepared sizes, $1.24 on pen, and $1.09 on buckwheat, and that for the future the latter rates must not be exceeded for such movement.

We are further of the opinion that the complainant is entitled to reparation upon basis of the rates herein found reasonable as applied to such of the shipments embraced in its claim as were delivered within the statutory period of two years prior to the date of filing complaint. No conclusion as to the amount of the award will be given at this time, and this question will be held in abeyance for determination in a supplemental report.

The complaint contains numerous allegations not connected with the rate. All of them relate to the manner of conduct of the carrier's business in certain respects. The commission is charged with the duty of keeping itself informed with respect to the manner in which this business is conducted, and therefore this report might well devote attention to such matters. However, the petitioner is primarily interested in the rates in question, and we are disposing of that feature of its complaint at this time to avoid the delay which a fair consideration of the collateral issues might necessitate. The extent to which, if any, such collateral issues might necessitate. The extent to which, if any, such collateral issues will be dealt with in a formal report is a matter for future determination.

An order will be issued in accordance with the conclusions herein expressed.

ORDER.

(At a general session of the Interactic Commerce Commission, held at its office in Washington, D. C., on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1912. No. 3592. Marian Coal Company v. the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company.)

1. This case being at issue upon complaint and answer on file, and having been duly heard and submitted by the parties, and full investigation of the matters and things involved having been had, and the commission having, on the date hereof, made and filed a report containing its findings of fact and conclusions thereon, which said report is hereby referred to and made a part hereof, and having found that the above-named defendant's present rates for the transportation of anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J. (f. o. b. vessel), are, to the extent that said rates exceed those named in paragraph 3 hereof, unreasonable and unjust:

(Opinion No. 2012—Interstate Commerce Commission. No. 3592, Marian Ceal Company v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company. Decided October 19 1912.)

Defendant's rate per long ton on anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J., f. o. b. vessel, of $1.13 on rice and smaller sizes found excessive and unreasonable to the extent that it exceeds 98 cents per long ton.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

MEYER, Commissioner:

Meyer, Commissioner:

The original report in this case (24 I. C. C., 140) found that the rates of defendant per long ton on anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J., f. o. b. vessel, of $1.58 on prepared sizes, $1.43 on pea, and $1.28 on buckwheat were excessive and unreasonable in and to the extent that they exceeded $1.33 on prepared sizes, $1.24 on pea, and $1.09 on buckwheat, and that for the future the latter rates must not be exceeded for such movement. No finding was made as to the rate on the smaller sizes, barley and rice, although the complaint also put such sizes in issue.

The complainant has applied for a modification of our order, requesting that we reduce defendant's rate of $1.13 per long ton on rice and smaller from Taylor, Pa., to tidewater, f. o. b. vessel, Hoboken, N. J., to a degree proportionate to the reduction on the larger sizes. We are asked to establish rates on rice, barley, and culm. The original petition does not involve culm, and no testimony covering it was submitted; therefore we can not in this proceeding consider the matter of a specific rate on that grade of coal.

It appears, however, from further investigation that our original findings should be supplemented so as to include a rate on rice and barley. The record shows that the complainant sought the establishment of a rate on these sizes and introduced evidence in support thereof. Our former report embraced a consideration of defendant's rate of $1.13 on rice and smaller (which would apply on rice and barley) and showed that such rate per ton-mile for the distance of 147.8 miles from Taylor to Hoboken amounts to 7.6 mills; also that on basis of the rate sought by complainant the ton-mile evenue would be 5 mills. We further pointed out that the ton-mile earnings on the rate of $1.13 approximate 7.2 mills when we accept defendant's claim of 155 miles as the average distance to tidewater from all the collieries and washeries reached by its line.

distance to tidewater from all the collieries and washeries reached by its line.

A large part of the shipments involved in the original claim for reparation consisted of rice and barley, and the complainant asserts that it still has a considerable tonnage of these sizes to ship. In our former report we found that the rate on buckwheat should not exceed $1.09, and it is apparent that our failure to fix a rate on rice and barley, which are in size and value less than buckwheat, would leave in force the rate of $1.13 on such smaller sizes, or a rate 4 cents greater than the rate fixed by us on the next larger size.

We based our conclusions with respect to the rates on prepared sizes, pea and buckwheat, upon the evidence of record and the facts adduced from our examination and analysis of the annual reports filed by defendant in their relation to the rates on coal. We think such evidence and facts apply with equal force to the rate on rice and smaller, and in consideration thereof it is our judgment and determination that defendant's rate per long ton on anthracite coal in carloads from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken, N. J., or New York Lighterage Station, N. J., fo. b, vessel, of $1.13 on rice and smaller is excessive and unreasonable to the extent that it exceeds 98 cents per long ton and that for the future the latter rate must not be exceeded for such movement. An order will be issued in accordance with these conclusions.

We further find that the application of defendant's rate of $1.13 per long ton upon such of complainant's shipments of rice and smaller sizes embraced in its claim as were delivered within the statutory period of two years prior to the date of filing the complaint damaged complainant to the extent of the difference between the amount which it did pay on such shipments and the amount which it would have paid at the rate of 98 cents per long ton herein found reasonable, and that it is entitled to reparation in the sum of such difference. An order awarding reparation will be issued following the rece

1. Upon further consideration of the record in the above-entitled case, the cammission having found that the above-named defendant's present rate for the transportation in carloads of anthractic coal, rice and smaller sizes, from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken or New York lighterage station. N. J., f. o. b. vessel, is, to the extent that said rate exceeds the rate named in paragraph 3 hereof, excessive and unreasonable.

2. It is ordered, That said defendant be, and it is hereby, notified and required to cease and desist, on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, and for a period of not less than two years thereafter, abstain from exacting its present rate for the transportation in carloads of anthracite coal, rice and smaller sizes, from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken or New York lighterage station, N. J., f. o. b. vessel.

3. It is further ordered, That said defendant be, and it is hereby, notified and required to establish, on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, upon notice to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the general public by not less than five days, filing and posting in the manner prescribed in section 6 of the act to regulate commerce and for a period of two years after said 1st day of January, 1913, to maintain and apply a rate for the transportation in carloads of anthracite coal, rice and smaller sizes, from Taylor, Pa., to Hoboken or New York lighterage station, N. J., f. o. b. vessel, which shall not exceed 98 cents per long ton. long ton.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD E. LOOMIS.

Edward E. Loomis entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Loomis, state your name and address.

The WITNESS. Edward E. Loomis; house address, 160 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York; office address, 90 West Street, New York.

Edward E. Loomis, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Loomis, please state your name and address.—A. Edward E. Loomis; residence, 160 West Fifty-ninth Street, New York.
Q. State whether or not you are connected with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., and if so, in what position?—A. I am vice president of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. Western Railroad Co.

Q. I will ask you to state, Mr. Loomis, whether or not you had at any time a conversation with Judge Archbald, or he with you, concerning a proposed settlement of disputes between the Marian Coal Co. and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., through an attorney, Mr. Watson?—A. We did. Q. Now, state fully the circumstances of that conversation; tell all about it in your own way .- A. I think it was in the latter part of August, 1911, on one of my inspection trips in Scranton, I met Judge Archbald either on the street or in the club, I do not recollect which, and in the course of conversation the question of settling up the pending difficulties with the Bolands was raised.

Q. By "the Bolands," you mean the Marian Coal Co.?-A.

Yes; the Bolands-the Marian Coal Co.

Q. Their corporation was called the Marian Coal Co.?-A. Yes, sir. I replied to him that it was the policy of our company to settle all cases out of court if we could do so on a fair basis. The judge stated that he thought possibly the case could be settled on a fair basis now, and suggested that I have some one call on Attorney Watson. I agreed to do that, and on my return to the company's office in Scranton our superintendent of the mining department, who would have been the proper party to call on Mr. Watson, as he was more familiar with the case, being away, in his absence I requested our superintendent, or our assistant general superintendent at that time, to call on Mr. Watson and listen to what he had to say.

Q. Please state the name of this official.—A. Mr. Rine was the assistant general superintendent of the railroad. He is the general superintendent now, and I think he was the superintendent at that time. He reported that he had a very short interview with Mr. Watson, but that Mr. Watson wanted to see him again and would let him know when. Mr. Watson did call on him or he telephoned him later. Col. Phillips, the superintendent of our mining department, had returned from his vacationQ. Now, Mr. Loomis, at that point permit to ask you whether Mr. Rine reported to you verbally or in writing?—A. Verbally, as I recollect.

Q. Go on with your statement.—A. Mr. Phillips called on Attorney Watson, discussed the case with him, and reported to me in writing. That letter, I think, is in evidence here; I think it is in the record, and I can read it if you wish.

Q. I am trying to find it. [Handing paper to witness.] Examine that letter and see if that is Mr. Phillips's letter to you.-

Q. Now, examine the note attached to it and explain to us what that is .- A. This letter from Col. Phillips reports-do you wish me to read this letter or to state in substance what it contains?

Q. I want you to identify it and explain what the note attached to it meant, and there seems to be another paper attached to it.—A. There is. On receipt of this letter I turned it over to our legal department with a view of ascertaining there were two claims involved in this settlement; one was the claim

Q. Just wait a moment. I want to get those documents identified. One of those letters is a letter which you received from Mr. Phillips and the other is the note?—A. The indorsement over to our legal department; yes.

Mr. Manager FLOYD (to Mr. Worthington). Do you wish to examine the letter?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, no; we have seen the letter. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we ask that the letter be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence, with the note attached to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be marked and read as requested. Is it the manager's desire that the paper be handed back to the witness?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Yes; he can have it if he desires to refresh his memory. We desire to have it read in evidence at this point. I ask the Secretary to read first the letter and then

Dear Sir: I have had two conferences with George Watson, attorney, relative to settlement of Boland's claim against our company. He came in this morning and stated that he had a long conference with the Marian Coal Co. people, and after going over all the claims they have against us. particularly the claims for excessive freight rates, he stated that Mr. Boland says there were 376,000 tons of coal shipped by the Marian washery, for which he had paid an excess freight averaging 43 cents a ton. The total amount of this claim alone is $161,680, and Mr. Boland would agree to sell us his washery, turn over his lease, satisfy all claims, etc., now pending against our company if we would pay him this $161,680. Mr. Watson intimated to me that possibly this could be shaded somewhat, and that he would be pleased to go over the matter with you at your earliest convenience. Mr. Watson strongly recommends that this matter be adjusted, for the reason that the Boland people have considerable data that would not be well to disclose before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I promised to let Mr. Watson know the early part of next week as to whether he can confer with you further relative to this matter. If there is anything further I can do in this matter, please advise.

Yours, truly,

R. A. Philllips.

The Witness. You notice in that letter he refers to two claims which the Bolands had. One was in connection with the freight rate and pending litigation and the other was in connection with the sale of his washery. Upon receipt of that letter I indorsed it over to our legal department to ascertain what, if any, value there was to the claim in the way of excessive freight rates, in their opinion. They conferred with our traffic people, and replied to me that they thought the claim would amount to approximately $3,700. I then, in order to ascertain the value of the washery which he was trying to sell. wrote another letter to Col. Phillips, or, rather, requested Col. Phillips to make a report as to the value of the washery and the Marian Coal Co.'s plant, which he did, and he reported to me that its value would approximate $11,853. That made the total value of Mr. Boland's claim, first, for the freight claims as estimated by our traffic people at that time, about $4,000, and the claims on account of the washery at approximately between $11,000 and $12,000; so that the total claims, you will note, amounted to only about $15,000, as compared with the claim that they were presenting to settle of $161,000.

Dear Sir: Referring to the additional information relative to the value of the Marian Coal Co. property.

Would call your attention to copy of letter of Master Carpenter Robinson to Superintendent Samson, in which you will note that he places no value on the washery building. Mr. Thornton has made a careful appraisement of the machinery, which, you will note by the statement attached, is $11,853.29.

As to the value of the dump. I call your attention to letter from Chief Engineer La Monte in which you will note there is about from 20,000 to 30,000 tons of coal yet remaining that could be prepared, but the value of it is nothing more than the royalty value, which should not be considered as any value to us as a purchaser.

Therefore the value of the Marian Coal Co. plant to us as it stands would be appraised value of machinery, as made by Mr. Thornton, viz, $11,853.29.

Mr. George Watson has called upon me two or three times, asking for an answer to his proposition. Also if he can arrange to confer with you on the matter of settlement. Please advise me what answer I shall make him.

My Dear Judge: As per our recent interview, I instructed our people to call on Attorney Watson in connection with the Boland case, and I find there is little, if any, prospect of our reaching any settlement of this case, owing to the very great difference of opinion as to the merits of Mr. Boland's claims and the value of his properties.

Mr. R. A. Phillips,
Superintendent Coal Mining Department, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: I send you herewith copy of a letter I have this day written Judge Archbald in connection with the settlement of the Boland case. As you must know, the figures Mr. Watson suggested in settlement are simply ridiculous.

In the first place, you are too familiar with the merits of his claims as to our having set fire to the Holden dump, or diverting water from his washery, or as to our preventing him from selling the washery at an advantageous figure for me to enter into any discussion of them. In other words, I think you will agree with me, he would have a pretty hard time to go into court and make out a case in any of these claims.

Assuming we were obliged to adopt the freight rates which have recently been established by the commission in the Meeker case. In this award the commission reduced the freight rate on buckwheat coal to tidewater to $1.15 per ton. They did not, however, reduce the rates on rice and barley. In other words, they O. K.'d the present rates on these two smaller sizes, and it is fair to assume, after doing so, they will not grant a lower rate to Mr. Boland. Assuming that Mr. Boland is entitled to reparation on the buckwheat shipments he has made over our line since he has been operating his washery, based on the findings in the Meeker case, our freight department state he could not recover but $3,774.64.

As to the purchase of his washery, I think you will agree we are not particularly keen to purchase old washery machinery. We have plenty of that on hand ourselves, and the building and bank seem to be of little or no value.

Taking all the matters into consideration, as enumerated in Mr. Seager's letter, copy of which is attached hereto, I doubt if we care to make any offer to Mr. Watson. I can see no objection, however, to your meeting him and explaining to him our position.

From the above you will note we would not be warran

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Loomis, please state if,

DEAR SIR: In relation to a matter existing between the Marian Coal Co. and your road and coal department, and also a claim against the traffic department of your road which I have had under consideration here and with which I presume you are more or less familiar, I decided after a conference with your Mr. Phillips, of the coal department, to ask for a meeting with you and the president of your road, Mr. Truesdale, if convenient, at the earliest time you could find your way clear to meet me either in New York or Scranton. If you will kindly advise me either by wire or letter, I will hold myself in readiness to meet you on a few hours' notice.

I am, very truly, yours,

My Dear Mr. Loomis: I understand that there has been a suggestion that Mr. Watson meet you and possibly also Mr. Truesdale, and that Mr. Watson has written asking for an appointment. It seems to me, if I may be permitted to say so, that this is a very good idea. It will give you an opportunity to discuss the Boland claim with Mr. Watson upon a somewhat different basis than Col. Phillips could representing the coal department.

I have little doubt but that it will appear so to you, and it may be altogether unnecessary for me to write about it. But I am sure you will not take it amiss to have me do so, and I shall hope that a settlement may yet be reached in that way. There is nothing like a personal interview to bring about such a result.

Mr. E. E. Loomis, Vice President, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 27th instant relative to conference that I have had with Attorney Watson in connection with Marian Coal Co. matters, and would say that I agree with you in this matter and will arrange to handle it as outlined in your letter.

Yours, truly,

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Loomis, to refresh your memory, I will ask you to examine this paper and state if it is a letter from Mr. Rine reporting his action in the matter.—A. (After examination.) It may be; I can not say positively. I assume that it is. It is not on his letterhead, but I assume that it is. I do not recall it.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We will not offer it at this point, then.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Will you let me look at it? Mr. Manager FLOYD. Yes, sir. I say we are not offering it at this point.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understand. Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) I will ask you to state whether or not you had any other conference or conversation with Judge Archbald in regard to this proposed negotiation or settlement except the one you testified to in the beginning of your testimony; and if so, when and where .- A. One short interview in my office in New York.

Q. As nearly as you can, please state the date when it was. A. That was between September 1 and October 5. That is as near as I can come to it. It was during the time that I was investigating the actual value of the Boland claim, when I was awaiting my reports from the traffic department and from the coal-mining department. Q. Then, if I understand you, it was between the 1st of September and the 5th of October?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Judge Archbald say to you in that conference?— A. It was nothing but a friendly conference. We did not enter into the merits or discuss it in any way.

Q. But as nearly as you can remember, how did it come about and what did he say?—A. He simply wanted to know, not having heard from me in any way, what progress was being made, and I told him I would call for these reports, and just as soon as I heard from these people I would let him know.

Q. What progress was being made about what?—A. What progress was being made toward finding out the value of this property. In other words, mind you, Mr. Watson up to that time had received no reply from us. I could make no reply until I received the report of the mining department and the traffic department, and there was some time elapsing, mind you, and it was during that time that the judge wanted to know what progress was being made. I explained to him that I had called upon these people for the reports, and that as soon as I got the reports I would let him know the conclusions.

Q. What I want to bring out clearly is whether or not his onversation related to the attempted settlement through Mr. Watson and himself.—A. I do not remember whether the judge brought up the point or I brought it up. I simply told him that I had received his letter and we would let Mr. Watson know what our conclusions were,

Q. Well, the conversation related to this Watson settlement?—A. Yes; we referred to it in our conversation.

Q. Or the attempted settlement through Mr. Watson?-A.

We referred to it in our conversation; yes.

Q. It related to that; that was the matter you were investigating?-A. Yes, sir. I might add that the judge probably was not in my office 10 minutes, all told.

Q. Do you know what he was doing in New York at that time?-A. I do not.

Q. Did he mention any other business?-A. He did not

Q. Now, Mr. Loomis, state whether or not the conference with Mr. Truesdale and yourself requested in the letter from Mr. Watson was granted; and if so, state when and where it took place.—A. It was. It occurred in Scranton on October 5. Q. Who was present?—A. Mr. Watson; Mr. Truesdale; Mr. Phillips, superintendent of the coal-mining department; Mr. Tobey, assistant superintendent; and Mr. Reese, attorney; and myself.

Q. And that was held on the 5th of October?-A. The 5th of October, in Scranton.

Q. Did Mr. Watson appear there and submit a proposition to the officials of your company—to Mr. Truesdale?—A. He did. Q. What was that proposition?—A. A settlement for $161,000, approximately.

Q. How long did that conference last?-A. I do not know that I remember exactly. It was long drawn out. We got nowhere with it, though.

Q. The proposition was turned down by your company, was it ?-A. It was.

O. Just tell as nearly as you can what took place at the conference, what was said, and what was discussed .-- A. He presented the case from their standpoint. He tried to impress us with the importance of settling it, which we failed to see and declined to consider. That is practically all that occurred.

Q. What was it that he was trying to settle-all the disputes between the two companies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state whether Mr. Watson at that conference presented any data or facts or referred to what is known as the Meeker case as a reason why you should settle?-A. I think he did make some reference to the Meeker case, but I do not remember what it was.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to send up a question which I should like to have propounded to the witness

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri sends up a question which he desires propounded to the witness. It will be read.

The Secretary read the question, as follows:

Q. You state that Judge Archbald was in your office only about 10 minutes. Did he have any other business there except to discuss the matters you have referred to?

The WITNESS. I think that was all that was discussed. He passed the time of day, and we may have had some social exchange of courtesies, and that is all. He raised this point, and I told him as soon as I heard from these people I would let him know.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) I will ask you to state if your company at the time these negotiations were being carried on had a suit pending in the Commerce Court or were interested in any litigation before the Commerce Court?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that is to be shown by the record.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is admitted in the pleadings, Mr. President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then why prove it?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I think-

The Witness, I know only from hearsay. I do not follow that. That is not in my department, and I have nothing at all

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Well, you did know it, as a matter of fact?-A. In a general way, yes. But I never attended any of the meetings.

Q. What was the principal reason that Mr. Watson gave in this conference as to why the settlement should be made?-A. I beg your pardon.

he thought you ought to settle on a basis of $161,000?-A. He tried to convince us that it was a bargain; that is, that it was worth that. He had an exaggerated idea of the value of the washery.

Q. Did he say anything about the necessity of settling this litigation on account of the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Meeker case?-A. I think he did say it was

Q. He urged that as a reason also?-A. I am not clear on that, but I think he did.

Q. In one of these letters, if I remember correctly reading it, you referred to the proposition as ridiculous to settle on the basis proposed by Mr. Watson. Do you so regard it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment, please. I object to what he thinks now about it.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. He said in his letter—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. He said in his letter that he thought the claim was absurd. If you want to ask him if he believed what he wrote, there is no objection to it, but I object to your asking him what he thinks about it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the question to be whether the witness is of the same opinion as to the value at this time.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is the question exactly; whether he regards that as an excessive demand to settle the suits-so excessive as to be ridiculous.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Do you still so regard it?-A. Certainly; his claim as to the value of the washery is ridiculous. As you probably know, the findings in the case of the Lackawanna before the Interstate Commerce Commission were not based on the findings in the Meeker case, so our estimate of the value of the claim from the rate standpoint at that time naturally was not accurate when we got our findings in the Interstate Commerce Commission later. Just what that amounts to I am not prepared to say.

Q. I ask you now if you at this time consider a demand for $161,000 ridiculous or preposterous?-A. I could not answer that without getting a report from our traffic department and see how the findings in the Marian Coal Co. case would work out-the same as I did before.

Q. Then since that letter was written, the case of the Marian Coal Co. has been decided by the Interstate Commerce Comsion adverse to your company, has it not?—A. It has.
Q. And you could not tell exactly about that until you had ascertained the effect of those findings; is that what you mean ?-A. That is correct.

Q. You say the rates in this case, which was decided against your company, were not based upon the Meeker rates?—A. They were different.

Q. If the Meeker rates were applied in your case, would you regard the proposition submitted by Mr. Watson as ridiculous or excessive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state, Mr. Loomis, if the conference on the 5th of October was the end of these negotiations through Mr. Watson, about which Judge Archbald spoke to you?-A. So far as I am concerned; yes, sir. Q. Did either of the Bolands ever afterwards confer with you

Q. To refresh your memory, did C. G. Boland ever call on you afterwards?—A. He called at my office, but we did not go into the details of the settlement of this case, as I testified before.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) How long have you known Judge Archbald?—A. I should say for seven or eight years.

Q. Did you formerly live in Scranton —A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you know him well there?—A. I knew him as a citizen; yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Archbald present at any time at any talk you had with Mr. Watson?-A. No, sir.

Q. What do you mean by the expression in one of theses letters read in evidence about setting fire to something?-A. That is one of the claims that Mr. Boland made.

Q. In order that all may know what I am asking about I will read this, which I find in one of these letters.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. On what page is that? Mr. WORTHINGTON. At top of page 1610. This is your letter of September 27, 1911, to Mr. R. A. Phillips, your superintendent, saving:

In the first place you are too familiar with the merits of his claims-

That is, Boland's claims, I take it-

Q. What was the principal reason or argument that Mr. Watson presented to the officials of the railroad company why

What does that mean?-A. It means what is says. It is a long story. He had filed a lot of claims against us or, rather, he made a lot of claims against us from time to time in connection with all those matters, to which we attached no importance.
Q. You were asked whether this negotiation with Mr. Watson was to settle all the transactions between the two companies. That is what Mr. Watson wanted you to settle. Did you have any transactions between the Marian Coal Co. and the Lackawanna Co. then except the suit in the Interstate Commerce Commission ?- A. Yes, sir. The claims he wanted to settle were for selling the Marian washery as well.

Q. But you did not have any litigation with him about the Marian washery?-A. No, sir.

Q. Was his proposition to you to sell the washery or to sell part of the stock of the Marian Coal Co.?-A. To sell the

Q. Did you ever hear anything about any proposition to you or to your company to have the company purchase two-thirds of the stock of the Marian Coal Co.?—A. No, sir.

Q. In reference to the amount of the claim, did you have any inquiry made as to whether Watson's figures were right when you stated in your letter of September 1 that Mr. Boland said there were 376,000 tons of coal shipped by the washery? Did you have any investigation made to see whether that was true?-A. I did not.

Q. When you say the claim was excessive did you mean to express any opinion as to whether or not there were that many thousands of tons that had been shipped by the Marian Coal Co. over your road?—A. That was our traffic department. I called upon them for the value of the claim, and they based it on the Meeker case, which covered only the buckwheat coal.

Q. You were basing your opinion that it was ridiculous upon the report of the traffic department and did not know yourself?—A. No, sir; I never figured it out. I depended upon them for the value of the freight claims.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire. Do the managers or the counsel desire this witness retained?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I may say it is almost a certainty that we shall be required to recall him, instead of now asking him questions, under the rulings which have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the present summons? Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are perfectly willing that he shall go back to his duties and come here on telegraphic order, if that is satisfactory to him.

The WITNESS. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. So far as the managers are concerned, we are willing to discharge him under our summons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does counsel desire his recall for cross-examination or examination in chief?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think under the rulings which have been made we will have to call him as our witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The witness is then discharged under the present summons, and as the Chair understands it, counsel desires a subpœna for him as a witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I hope we will not be put to that trouble. The witness is perfectly willing to return on telegraphic order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the witness will respond to such a call.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Call Mr. Rine.

TESTIMONY OF EDWIN M. RINE.

Edwin M. Rine, being duly sworn, was examined and testified

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Please state your name and place of residence?-A. Edwin M. Rine, Scranton, Pa.

- Q. Are you connected in any way with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.?—A. Yes, sir; general superintendent.
- Q. Were you connected with that railroad company in August, 1911?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. In the same capacity?-A. Assistant general superintendent at that time.
- Q. I will ask you to state if some time in August, 1911, or about that time, Mr. Loomis gave you directions to confer with one Mr. Watson, an attorney of Scranton?-A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. He asked me if I knew Mr. Watson, an attorney.

Q. What Watson was that?—A. George M., I believe, are his initials. I replied that I did know him. He asked me to see him and see what he had to propose in the way of a settlement of the differences between the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western and the company Mr. Watson represented, which he represented to be the Marian Coal Co.

I called Mr. Watson to my office, and he advised me he had not had time to go over the papers in connection with the case, but that as soon as he had time he would call me up and confer with me. In perhaps 10 days, or perhaps less, he called me up and said he was ready to discuss the matter. I told him Mr. Phillips, the general manager of the coal department, had returned to Scranton, and that he could call him up and confer with him.

Q. Have you repeated all that occurred between Mr. Loomis and yourself when he gave you the instructions?-A. Yes, sir; to the best of my recollection.

Q. Did he give you any information as to why or upon whose recommendation he wanted you to see Mr. Watson?—A. I do not recollect that he did. I would not have asked him. When he asked me to go down and see Mr. Watson I complied with his request.

Q. Did he tell you anything to the effect that he had received information that a settlement could be had through Watson?—A. I do not recollect that he did; no, sir. He asked me to find out what Mr. Watson had to propose.

Q. I will ask you if you did not, when you were before the Judiciary Committee of the House, state in substance that Mr. Loomis told you that it had been intimated to him that a settlement of the case might be made through Mr. Watson and asked you to go to Mr. Watson's office?—A. Whatever I testified to before the Judiciary Committee is correct.

Q. I will ask you to state now, since your attention has been called to it, if you do not remember that Mr. Loomis did tell you that he had some kind of an intimation or suggestion that Mr. Watson was in a position to make a settlement?-A. He may have said so. I can not recollect it at this time. Q. At page 1653 of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee I will read the question and then read the answer. Listen to it, Mr. Rine:

The Chairman. State in your own way, Mr. Rine, all that you know regarding the negotiations for the sale of the stock or properties of the Marian Coal Co. to the Lackawanna Railroad, or for the settlement of the case between that coal company and the railroad company before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Rine. Mr. Chairman, I know very little about the matter, except that one day Mr. Loomis stated to me that it had been intimated to him that there was a possibility of a settlement of the case, and he requested me to call on Attorney George Watson in reference to the matter.

Did you not so swear before the Judiciary Committee of the House?—A. If it is down there, yes, sir; I swore that. I swore to whatever they took down that day I was here.

Q. It is down here.—A. Then I swore to it. Q. Is not that a fact?—A. To the best of my recollection.

Q. Is not that a fact?—A. To the best of my reconcerton.

Q. Now, I will ask you to examine this paper. [Handling paper.] Is it a copy of a letter that you sent to Mr. Loomis in regard to this?—A. (Examining.) I believe it is.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I look at it?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is Exhibit 136. [Handling paper to the witness.] You say you think that is your letter to Mr. Loomis?—A. (Examining.) I believe it is; yes, sir.

Q. Are you satisfied it is?—A. I could not swear to it unless

I had the original.

Q. To the best of your recollection, this is a copy of the letter you sent to Mr. Loomis?—A. To the best of my recollection, I made a report similar to that to Mr. Loomis as a result of my conference with Mr. George M. Watson.

Q. Did you not put this exhibit in evidence before the Judiclary Committee?-A. I do not know whether I put in that or whether it was one similar to it.

Q. Similar to that?—A. Yes; something similar to that.

Q. You put in only one letter?-A. That is all I put in; yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we will ask that it be read, with the notation on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, without objection.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have not seen the notation. Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is just the exhibit.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 49.]

AUGUST 25, 1911.

Mr. E. E. LOOMIS:

In accordance with your request I met Attorney Watson my office this afternoon; conferred with him re subject we discussed. He has agreed to see Mr. Boland and report results shortly.

Respectfully,

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Rine, Mr. Phillips, then, as I understand it, took charge of the matter?-A. I assume he did. I never heard anything more about it.

Q. You did not know more about it yourself?-A. No, sir; I

Q. I will ask you to state whether Mr. Loomis informed you as to who had intimated that a settlement could be brought about through Mr. Watson .- A. He did not.

Q. Did you know?-A. No. sir; I had no means of knowing how Mr. Loomis brought this about,

Q. He did not inform you, then, who had intimated to him that a settlement could be made?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. And you went and did what he instructed you to do and made your report?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that all you know about the case?—A. All, I think. There is another little item here. I do not want to be called back, and you might as well have it all.

Q. You have in your mind what it is?-A. Yes. Before I called Mr. Watson up I called Mr. Boland on the telephone and asked him if Mr. Watson had been delegated by him to represent him, and he said he had.

Q. Tell us which one of the Bolands.—A. William P. Boland. Q. After you received your instructions from Mr. Loomis you called him up over the phone?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And asked him whether or not Mr. Watson was authorized to represent him, and he told you he was?-A. Yes, sir; he told

Q. Why did you do that, Mr. Rine?-A. I can not say why I did it, any more than-

Q. Did Mr. Loomis instruct you to do that?-A. He did not. I know Mr. Boland quite well. I wanted to be sure of my ground before I did it. I had seen from the newspapers that Mr. Reynolds had been handling the case and I wanted to be sure there was no mistake.

Q. You knew or had seen in the newspapers that Mr. Reynolds was handling the case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Reynolds did continue to handle the case, did he not?—A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. You wanted to be sure that Mr. Watson had authority?-Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Rine, did you have any conversation, either verbal or written, with Judge Archbald in relation to the matter at any time?—A. Not to my knowledge. Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. So far as we are concerned, this witness may be discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is satisfactory to us, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally dis-

TESTIMONY OF REESE A. PHILLIPS.

Reese A. Phillips, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Phillips, please state your name and place of residence.—A. Reese A. Phillips, Scranton, Pa.

Q. State if you are in any way connected with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., and if so, please state your connection with it .-- A. I am general manager of the coalmining department.

Q. Were you occupying the same position with the company in August, 1911?—A. I am not quite sure whether I was general manager then or general superintendent of the coal-mining department, either one of the two.

Q. Either one or the other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Phillips, I will ask you to state whether or not, about August 11, you received any instructions from Mr. Loomis in regard to a settlement of the affairs of the Marian Coal Co. and the railroad company, and if so, just state the facts in regard to it.—A. I had no instructions from Mr. Loomis. Mr. Rine, the superintendent of the railroad department, advised me that Mr. Loomis was in town during my absence and stated that when I returned home I was to get in touch with Mr. George Watson, an attorney at law in Scranton, in relation to receiving a proposition from Mr. Watson toward the settlement of some disputes the Marian Coal Co. had against the Lackawanna Railroad.

Q. Under instructions from Mr. Rine you took that matter up with Mr. Watson?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Immediately?—A. Inmediately; yes, sir.

Q. Just state what occurred, what Mr. Watson proposed.-A. I called Mr. Watson on the telephone a day or two after Mr. Rine notified me, and I think Mr. Watson came to my office and stated he was not prepared at that time to give me a proposition, for the reason that the officials of the Marian Coal Co. were preparing a statement showing the amount of money or the total amount of the various claims that they had against our company. A few days later Mr. Watson called me on the telephone and said he was prepared to meet me, and he came over to the office with a large bundle of papers. He started out by saying that he had an itemized list in his possession of the various claims, and called off a number of claims, that is, the amount of the claims-among them was three hundred and some odd thousand tons of coal at forty and some odd cents per ton that Mr. Boland claimed he had been overcharged in transportation-that amounted to over $161,000. Watson said that they would strike off or reduce that amount somewhat, but he said he would make his claim $161,000; that is, make his proposition $161,000 flat.

Q. Now, state if after he made that proposition you had any investigation made in regard to the property looking to a settlement?-A. I told Mr. Watson at that time that from my knowledge of the Marian Coal Co.'s property his proposition was preposterous, and that I would submit it to Mr. Loomis, our vice president, which I did in a letter.

Q. Mr. Phillips, I will ask you to examine Exhibit 43 [handing paper] and state whether or not that is a copy of the letter .- A. (Examining.) This is not the letter I sent to Mr. Loomis.

Q. I asked you if that was a copy of the letter .- A. No. sir; it is not.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is the letter from Mr. Phillips to Mr. Loomis that I wanted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All those letters have been identified, have they not?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Yes, sir. [To the witness:] Have you a copy of that letter?—A. With me?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. No, sir. Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is the letter from Phillips to Loomis making a report.

(Exhibit 39 was handed to the manager.)

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Do you remember the date of your report?—A. Some time in September. I do not recall the date.

Q. I will ask you to examine that letter [handing paper] and see whether or not it is the letter you wrote to Mr. Loomis.—A. (Examining.) That is my letter to Mr. Loomis; yes, sir; under date of September 1, 1911.

Q. And in that letter you reported to Mr. Loomis your views about it?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. The letter is already in evidence, and I do not desire to advert to it further than to identify it.

The Witness. That is not the letter I reported my views That is the letter the result of the conference I had with

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Is there still another letter? Have you a copy of the letter in which you reported your views?—A. I have no copy of any correspondence with me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That letter has been already identified and read in evidence, and it is not disputed.

The WITNESS. I have heard it read.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. It has been read in evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has, and is not disputed. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Very well; that is sufficient. [To the witness:] Mr. Phillips I will ask you to state any further steps that were taken in regard to this negotiation with Watson in which you were concerned in any way. First, I will ask you to state if you ever had any interview or conversation or conference with Judge Archbald about it in any way whatever.-A. I had a conference or a conversation with Judge Archbald; yes, sir.

Q. Just state when that occurred, how it came about, and what was said.—A. It was some time in September; I think the latter part of September. I recall it was on a Friday even-I received a telephone message from Judge Archbald, in which he asked me if I would call and see him the next morning at his office. I told him I did not know he had an office in Scranton, and asked where its location was. He stated in the Government building. I told him I would be very happy to call on him the next morning. The next morning when I got to my office I had some other important matters to attend to and I forgot about the appointment I had with Judge Archbald. Saturday noon, while home at lunch, Judge Archbald called me and said, "You forgot to keep your appointment with me this morning." I said, "Yes; I had forgotten about it, and I will morning." call on you in the afternoon." He said he usually went out to the country and to the woods for a walk on Saturday afternoon. I told him I would call and see him Monday morning.

Q. This conversation was over the telephone?-A. This conversation was over the telephone.

Q. Go ahead.—A. He told me he was going to Washington Sunday and would like to know if I would not come over to his house that evening, which I did about 7 o'clock Saturday evening.

Q. I will ask you to state what occurred. What was said? A. When I got to Judge Archbald's house he greeted me and took me into his parlor. Mrs. Archbald was sitting in the next The doors were open between one room and the other. After talking a few minutes of olden times, old acquaintanceship we had, he finally asked me what was the value of the Holden washery or their plant down at the Holden colliery. I told him I did not think the value of that plant was very much, that if I was going in the coal business I did not know that I would take it for a gift. He finally said, "Boland has a number of claims against you," and I says, "He has stated that he has a number of claims." Says I, "What do you refer to, Judge Archbald, these rate matters, or alleged claims in connection with the burning of the culm bank and diverting water?" He says, "That is what I mean, about the washery; I do not mean anything about the rate question.'

I went on then and explained in detail to Judge Archbald all the alleged claims that Mr. Boland had in connection with the operating of the Marian coal washery. When I got through Judge Archbald said, "If that is the case the settlement between the Bolands and your company is very far apart, because, as I understand it from," I think he said, Mr. Christy Boland, "they place the value of the washery at over $60,000," or something to that effect. I told Judge Archbald that I did not care what value the Bolands placed on it, as to my value I had already told him. That was all the conversation I had.

Q. Now, Mr. Phillips, to refresh your memory, did he not state that was the value put on it by Boland and Watson?—A. No; he never said no such thing.

Q. Mr. Phillips, you testified before the Judiciary Committee of the House, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is on page 1307, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have it.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) I will ask you to state if, in response to the following question by the chairman, you did not testify as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know that it has anything to do with the case, but what position has his son now?

Mr. PHILLIPS. His son now is assistant mine foreman. The next step will be this special engineer.

I went over to his house, went in and shook hands with the judge and passed the time of evening, and he says, "Colonel, what do you know about the claim of Will Boland against your company?"

I says

Did you make that statement?-A. Sure. If it is there; yes, sir. That is just about what I said a little while ago, I think.

Q. I am continuing your answer-

I says, "You mean in connection with his washery or the transportation of coal?" "Oh," he says, "about the washery." He says, "What do you value that washery and culm bank at?" I told him, roughly, what I thought it was worth. Then I recited to Judge Archbald the entire history of the various conversations that I had had with Mr. Boland in that connection from the day he got the lease of the bank up until he filed his suit with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Judge Archbald said, "Well, if that is the case, Colonel, his proposition of settlement, from what I can understand from George Watson and what you tell me, is away off." I said, "Yes, indeed."

Q. Did you not swear to that?—A. I may have said it, but I do not recall ever mentioning Watson's name. I may have done it. If it is in my testimony the chances are that I did say it, because my memory was more fresh then about this transaction than it is now.

Q. I ask you if you did not make that statement before the Judiciary Committee of the House?—A. Sure. If it is there in print there is no question about it. I do not dispute that you have read it correctly, Mr. Floyd.

Q. If you said it then, your memory would be more reliable than it is now?—A. Oh, yes; there is no question about it.
Q. Owing to the lapse of time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So he said that to you in that conversation?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you have any other or further conversation with him about it?-A. With Judge Archbald? Q. Yes, sir .- A. I never had any more conversation with Judge Archbald at all with reference to the matter or any other

Q. You knew or understood that George Watson was attempting to bring about a settlement of this difficulty?-A. Sure; had had a conference with George Watson prior to my conference with Judge Archbald, if I recall it correctly.

Q. I will ask you to state whether you had had a conference with George Watson just a short time before this conference with Judge Archbald?-A. I think it was a few days before

Q. Did you understand from Loomis that Judge Archbald had anything to do in bringing in this settlement or had anything to say?-A. I do not recall that Mr. Loomis ever mentioned Judge Archbald's name to me until after I had this conference at Judge Archbald's residence.

Q. He did after that?-A. He did after that; yes, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you to state, Mr. Phillips, if after you had made your report there was to your knowledge any further effort made to get a settlement by a further conference?—A. I do not know of any effort that has been made to settle this transaction on the part of our company at all.

Q. That is not the question. I am asking, if through Mr. Watson or Judge Archbald there was a further conference held with Mr. Loomis and Mr. Truesdale?-A. Oh, yes. That was after the conference held with Judge Archbald, you mean?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what you know about that .- A. In my letter that I wrote to Mr. Loomis-I think it was in that letter, or else I conferred with Mr. Loomis over the telephone, I am not sure which-I told him that George Watson would like to make an appointment to meet Mr. Loomis and Mr. Truesdale in order to take the matter up with them, and that I had told George Watson that I would try and arrange for such a conference. He said, "Well, maybe I had better write to Mr. Loomis myself." I said, "I think maybe you had better do that, George." Mr. Loomis advised me that he and Mr. Truesdale were coming west on an inspection trip and would be in Scranton a certain evening and would meet Mr. Watson in my office the next morning at 10 o'clock. I called up Mr. Watson on the telephone and told him that our people would be here and meet him in my office at that time, 10 o'clock.

Q. Were you present at that conference?-A. I was; yes, sir. Q. When Mr. Loomis and Mr. Truesdale were there?-A. Yes, sir; it was held in my office, and I was present.

Q. Just state who were there.-A. Mr. Truesdale, our president; the vice president, Mr. Loomis; our counsel, Daniel R. Reese; Mr. Tobey, the assistant superintendent; George Watson, and myself.

Q. Now, state, Mr. Phillips, your recollection of what occurred at that conference, what Mr. Watson submitted, and what reasons he gave for making the proposition .- A. He gave practically the same reason that he gave to me in the conference I had with him.

Q. First state what his proposition was.—A. His proposition was that for $161,000 the Marian Coal Co. would turn over their washery and their bank and withdraw all suits and to put an end to all controversy that was existing at that time between the Marian Coal Co. and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. That was Mr. Watson's proposition.

Q. What reason or what argument did he make as to why the railroad company should accept such a proposition?-A. I do not know. He read from this statement he had a number of items, but seemed to base his argument entirely upon the coal rates, and as that subject was entirely foreign to me, I paid very little attention to it.

Q. Did he refer in any way in his argument to what is known as the Meeker case?—A. I think he did. Either he or one of the party referred to the Meeker case as an illustration. I think it was one of our officials referred to the Meeker case as an illustration that the Bolands could not expect to recover any more reparation than the rates allowed in the Meeker case, and that was a part of the basis on which our company calculated the amount of money they would be willing to pay in settlement of the entire matter.

Q. The effect of the Meeker case as applied in the case of the Bolands was discussed, among other things, in that conference?—A. Yes, sir; as I recall it now.

Q. What did Mr. Truesdale say, Mr. Phillips?-A. Mr. Truesdale said that the proposition was ridiculous and he would not consider it. In fact, Mr. Watson did most of the talking.

Q. The proposition was turned down?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. Rejected?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to refresh your memory—if Mr. Truesdale did not say it was a holdup?—A. Positively he did not.
Q. He did not?—A. At least, if he did, I did not hear it, and I was sitting within 4 feet of him.

Q. I was going to ask you if you remember anything that was said?-A. No; I can not remember everything; I am not infallible.

Q. You say now, then, that if he did say that you did not hear him or do not remember it?-A. I did not hear him or I do not recall it.

Q. I will ask you to state if, when you had your conference with Judge Archbald, you told him about your conferences Watson just a few days before?-A. I do not recall whether I did or not. I may have said that I had had a conference with George Watson with regard to the settlement, and I may not, because all that Mr. Archbald asked me about was the value of the Marian washery and the claims of the Bolands against our company in connection with the operating of that washery. I may have mentioned Watson's name; I do not know. My evidence before your committee ought to disclose it if I did. My memory was fresher then than it is now.

Q. You said, if I understood you, that you went over in detail the proposition?—A. Not the details, bear in mind, of the proposition, but the details of the claims or the alleged claims that Mr. Boland had against our company in connection with the operating of the Marian washery, such as setting the culm bank afire, of which we owned ourselves 27 per cent, and the drying up of the creek or diverting some water from it, and a number of other claims that I do not recall just at present.

Q. From whom did you get the information about their contentions—from Mr. Watson?—A. What contentions?

Q. About them claiming this.—A. I got that from Mr. Boland Mr. Boland was operating a little washery that they had down there, and when they were operating it, if he had any grievance, he would always bring it up with me. He imagined that we were trying to stop the wheels of his washery at work. I would go down there and help him and try to do what I could to assist him with his washery.

Q. I am not asking you about that. You said you discussed that matter fully with Judge Archbald and never mentioned Watson's connection with it?—A. I can not say that I mentioned Mr. Watson's connection with the case at all. I may have mentioned his name; I do not recall. If it is in my tes-timony before the Judiciary Committee, I did; if it is not,

I did not.

Q. I am asking you about your present recollection.-A. My present recollection is, as I have told you three or four times, that I do not recall ever mentioning George Watson's name in the conference that I had with Judge Archbald.

Q. In the testimony quoted some reference was made to adge Archbald's son. He was in the employ of the railroad at Judge Archbald's son.

that time?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Phillips, when you were at the final conference did you understand that Judge Archbald had had anything to do with these Watson negotiations?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to a question about what the witness understood, Mr. President.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Did you know through the officers of your company that had been investigating this matter that Judge Archbald had any connection with this proposed negotiation or had anything to do with it?-A. I do not think I had any knowledge of it at that time. Later on—it may be a day after that conference or a week or two later—Mr. Loomis inquired of me if I knew why—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. We object to subsequent conversations between Mr. Loomis and the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness can answer the question whether or not he knew it.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all I am asking.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. What I am bringing out is that this is something which occurred after these negotiations were all

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I asked him, "at the conferences before they were over"

Mr. WORTHINGTON. At the conferences?
Mr. Manager FLOYD. At the final conference.

The WITNESS. No; I do not think so.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) He did not know anything about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I will ask you to state if, immediately after that conference, you did receive information of Judge Archbald's connection with it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will object to that.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Or the next day?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. It has already appeared that that terminated Mr. Watson's connection with it. The managers have proved by Mr. Christy Boland that Mr. Watson's connection with this matter terminated immediately after that conference. If this was anything that took place in the way of carrying on the negotiations for that settlement, of course I would not object to it. We have not very much objected to that, but, as I understand, any recital of conversation between persons who had been parties to the conference after it was all over-something that occurred after the negotiations were all over-which had reference to a past transaction, of course can not affect Judge Archbald.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumes the purpose of the testimony is to show what influences were brought to bear upon representatives of the railroad at that time, and if he did not know it at that time, of course it is not pertinent that he did know it afterwards.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we have some evidence to show that after that conference Mr. Watson wired Judge Archbald and came to Washington for some purpose. pect to connect that up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If counsel will state that they propose to do that, then they are at liberty—

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Of course, if they propose to show that he had anything to do with that telegram or with Mr. Watson's coming here, we would not rise for a moment to object. But I should like to interpose here and ask a question of the witness, as I have a right to do, I think, to find out when this conversation occurred, so that we may know whether it is anything that is competent or not. If, for instance, Mr. Loomis and Col. Phillips

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object to counsel making a statement. He can ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel can ask the ques-

Mr. WORTHINGTON (to the witness). I want to ask you whether or not you did not testify before the Judiciary Committee in this way:

But several days, or a month, rather, after the conference, Mr. Loomis inquired of me-

To which you referred. Is not that right?-A. That is what I was about to say. It was a week or two afterwards.

Q. It was after the negotiations were all over?-A. After the negotiations were all over; after this conference was over.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was going to say, Mr. President, it would be just the same, it seems to me, as if Mr. Loomis and Col. Phillips should have a conversation out in the corridor now about this matter, and then the managers should offer to prove what it was. If it was after the negotiations were all over, it would not make any difference how long it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that testimony as to general knowledge upon the part of the officials of the company of Judge Archbald's connection with the matter ought to be received, especially under the statement of the manager that he expects to prove that this matter did continue after that time. The Chair has ruled that the question can be asked.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Answer the question, Mr. Phillips.

The WITNESS. What question?

Q. I will ask that the question may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter will read the

The Reporter read as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Now, I will ask you to state if immediately after that conference you did receive information of Judge Archbald's connection with it?

The Witness. No, sir; not immediately after.

Q. How soon?—A. Two or three weeks.

Q. I will ask you to state what information you received touching that matter?-A. I think it was two or three weeks after that that Mr. Loomis was again in Scranton. Mr. Boland had made a statement to me on the street in regard to Mr. Loomis, and I reported the result of that statement or the result of the conference that I had had with Mr. Boland to Mr. Loomis. Mr. Loomis said that he could not understand why Boland was so prejudiced or imagined that he was trying to do him harm; and that he had never had any occasion or cause to do Mr. Boland any harm. I told him that I could not account for it except that Boland was a highly excitable sort of man. Then Mr. Loomis asked me, "How is it that Mr. Archbald is interesting himself in this case in behalf of the Bolands?

Q. Did you understand him to refer to Judge Archbald?-A. Oh, yes; Judge Archbald. I think he mentioned "Judge" Archbald, and not "Mr."

Q. Mr. Loomis inquired of you what?—A. If I knew why.
Q. Did you?—A. I did not, only what I told him what I assumed as the reasons why Judge Archbald was interesting himself in the case in behalf of the Bolands.

Q. You did not know why?—A. No; only my own presumption. Q. We do not care anything about your presumption if you had no knowledge on the subject.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Cross-examination: Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) We do care. What was your answer to the question that Mr. Loomis put to you about Judge Archbald ?- A. I told Mr. Loomis that I thought Judge Archbald was interesting himself in this case from the fact that he and the Boland family had lived in the city of Scranton for at least 30 or 40 years; that, to my knowledge, Mr. Christy Boland and Judge Archbald were always looked upon as being pretty close friends, and that Mr. Boland, being in this litigation, I thought he would naturally, meeting Judge Archbald, tell him of it, or ask him what he thought he had better do under the circumstances, and that Judge Archbald told him, "Well, Christy, I think you had better try to settle this case. I know some of the officials of the D., L. & W. Co.; you know some of them; and if I can be of any service in introducing you or bringing them to you I will do so." That was my explanation to Mr. Loomis. I have no reason to think that was true other than it is customary in towns of the size of the city of Scranton for the smaller people who have lived there for a long time, if they have friends who are influential men, either lawyers, judges, or otherwise, they would naturally go to their friends when in trouble. That was my sole deduction about the matter.

Q. Did Mr. Christopher Boland have any talk with you during these negotiations with reference to them?-A. Mr. Christopher Boland called upon me, I think, after the conference in my office, at which time Mr. Truesdale and other officials were there with Mr. Watson.

Q. After the Truesdale conference in your office?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, did he tell you anything then about the condition of his brother in reference to this claim?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Why can we not have all the negotiations, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There must be some limitation, and the Chair thinks that is one of them.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) The son of Judge Archbald to whom you refer is not the son who has been present during these proceedings?—A. No. sir.
Q. His son Hugh?—A. Hugh Archbald, mining engineer.

Q. He is not in the employ of the company now, I believe? A. No, sir; he resigned his position a few months ago. I think he is editor of Mines and Minerals, published in connection with the International Correspondence School.

Q. Now, with reference to the questions that were asked you and read from the record to refresh your recollection, do you now recall that Mr. Watson's name was mentioned at the time? That was referred to in the question that was read to you from the Record?-A. Judge Archbald-Q. You have stated that your recollection was better then than it is now, and that you undoubtedly gave that testimony; but, as a matter of fact, is your memory refreshed so that you now remember it?-A. I really can not say that I remember it.

Q. I will ask you if during your testimony there you did not refer to it in the same way you did here—that is, in this

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I ask from what page counsel is about to read?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Page 1311, at the bottom of the page: Mr. Phillips. The judge told me after I had stated, as I have repeated twice already here—he says: "If that is the case, the value of that washery and bank, that I understand Boland is claiming it is worth, is far in excess of what you say it is worth."

A. In fact, I am almost positive that Watson's name was not mentioned; and I think you will find in my testimony there that I there say that I did not mention Watson's name, and that my conference with Archbald was between the conference that we had in my office with George Watson our officials, or something of that kind. I do not recall Watson's name ever being mentioned at Judge Archbald's house

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

Manager FLOYD. One moment, Mr. Phillips. Worthington has asked you about your conversation with Christy Boland. Did you have any conversation with W. P. Boland?-A. Oh, I have had several conversations with W. P. Boland.

Q. I will ask you to state if W. P. Boland did not tell you that Judge Archbald was not in this case by his request or consent?-A. I think he did.

Q. Did you not so swear before the Judiciary Committee? A. I think he did tell me at the time. He told me that Mr. Loomis came up and went to Judge Witmer and made him hand down the opinion in the Peale case. That was at the same period, and I told him-

Q. You told about a conversation at Judge Archbald's house? Was that the first time you were ever at Judge Archbald's house?-A. The first time I have ever been in Judge Arch-bald's house in my life.

Q. Before or since?—A. Yes.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, what was it William P. Boland said that you have been asked about? Well, what was it that us hear all about it .- A. I was coming up from Wilkes-Barre same car. Nearly every time that Will Boland would meet me we would discuss some features or part of these alleged claims that he has against our company in operating the Marian washery. He was very excitable on this day, and said that Mr. Loomis, our vice president, came from New York, and had Judge Witmer hand down an opinion against the Marian washery in the Peale case.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must hold there must be a limitation to the examination, and that certainly has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was only asking for the remainder of the conversation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only interposes in the interest of time

Mr, WORTHINGTON. I was only asking him a question to finish the conversation of which the managers brought out a part

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conversation evidently has nothing to do with the merits of this case. Is there any other question of the witness?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We have no further questions. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, this witness may be discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We agree.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN L. SEAGER.

John L. Seager, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Seager, please state your name and place of residence.—A. John L. Seager; busi-ness address, 90 West Street; residence, 256 Prospect Street, South Orange, N. J.

Q. If you are in anyway connected with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., please state the position you hold.—A. I am an attorney in the legal department of that railroad.

Q. I will ask you to state, Mr. Seager, if you know anything about the negotiations or attempted negotiations to make a settlement of certain matters between the Marian Coal Co. and your railroad company through one George M. Watson, of Scranton, Pa.?-A. I knew nothing about it until I received a letter from Col. R. A. Phillips, which was sent me by Mr. Loomis.

Q. You first received your information, then, through correspondence?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. With other officials of the company?—A. Yes, sir, Q. You are acquainted with Mr. Reese?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he at that time representing your company in some capacity?-A. He was, sir.

Q. Please state his position with the railroad.-A. He was known as the general attorney for the State of Pennsylvania for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

Q. Did you have any communication with Mr. Reese in regard to this matter?—A. I did; several.

Q. I will ask you to examine the paper which I hand you, Mr. Seager, and state if that is a letter you received from Mr. Reese in regard to this matter.—A. (After examining.) It is.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, I ask that the letter be marked as an exhibit and be read in evidence at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to reading the paper? If not, it will be marked and read.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Wait a moment until we see what is the date.

The Secretary. Scranton, Pa., July 31, 1911. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have no objection. The Secretary read the letter marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 50," as follows:

(Daniel R. Reese, attorney.)

Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., Legal Department, Scranton, Pa., July 31, 1911. J. L. SEAGER.

Commerce Counsel, New York City.

Dear Sir: For your information I inclose herewith copy of my letter to R. A. Phillips, superintendent coal mining department, in relation to a suggestion made by W. P. Boland in a conference between us for the purpose of trying to arrange amicably the differences between him and this company.

Mr. Phillips has agreed that I should proceed to make the arrangements, and will have a conference some day this week, the result of which will be made known to you.

Yours, truly,

D. R. Reese.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Please examine the paper I on the Laurel line, and W. P. Boland was coming up on the hand you and state whether or not that is a letter pertaining to this matter, and give the date of the letter.—A. A letter dated August 11—a letter which I received from Mr. Reese.

Q. Examine the paper accompanying that. Was that an inclosure with that letter?—A. (After examining.) It was.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we ask that the letter be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence at this point, together with the inclosure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will

J. L. SEAGER, Esq., Commerce Counsel, New York City, N. Y.

Commerce Counsel, New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir: As I wrote to you some time ago, we had a conference with Mr. Boland with reference to adjusting the differences between Mr. Boland and this company. Such a conference was held in Col. Phillips's office, between Mr. Phillips, Mr. Boland, and myself, but nothing of importance developed.

Inasmuch as the adjustment, if it is going to be made, is to be based largely upon matters involved in his action against us before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and consequently as you are familiar with those matters, you are the only one that I know of that can confer with Mr. Boland in relation thereto. Therefore, I am writing to you to ask you to take up these matters with Mr. Boland, either at Scranton or at your office, and I will arrange to have Mr. Boland present, and I understand that he wants his counsel with him. Please advise your wishes in the matter, as Mr. Boland seems to be very anxious to arrange matters amicably, if possible, and has called me on the telephone several times inquiring as to whether I have yet arranged a conference. He advises me that Mr. Reynolds, his attorney, is going away on his vacation soon, and he would like to arrange a conference at once. at once. Yours, truly,

D. R. REESE.

(Inclosure.)

JULY 29, 1911.

Mr. R. A. Phillips,

Superintendent Coal Mining Department.

Dear Sir: While conferring with Mr. W. P. Boland yesterday, concerning another matter, he intimated very strongly that he would like to fix up his differences with the Lackawanna Co. and discontinue further hostilities. He intimated that this could be accomplished by a conference with you and me. I believe Mr. Boland has had a wrong impression as to the attitude of this company, having gotten the idea that we are pursuing him directly and indirectly, but I think he is getting straightened out as to that now and has sent out his flag of truce in order to try and arrange matters amicably.

I believe it is worth while attempting this, and respectfully submit the matter to you for such action as you deem it advisable under all the circumstances to take.

Yours, truly,

R/D.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Did you make reply to that letter, Mr. Seager?—A. If I recollect aright, I did, sir, some time later.

Mr. SIMPSON. What is the date?

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) September 7?-A. I can not remember. I would have to see the letter. [After examination.] I answered the letter just read by one dated September 7, 1911, addressed to Mr. D. R. Reese.

Mr. PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the manager wish this letter read?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I ask that it be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence at this point.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 52.]

SEPTEMBER 7, 1911.

Mr. D. R. Reese, General Attorney, Scranton, Pa.

General Attorney, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: In order that there may be some proper ending to your file headed by your letter of July 31, 1911, relative to proposed conference between W. P. Boland and a representative of this company, I would advise that apparently Mr. E. E. Loomis, vice president, through Col. Phillips, has taken up the matter of Mr. Boland's difficulties with George Watson, attorney, with a view of arriving at some settlement thereof. I say apparently because I was handed a letter from Col. Phillips this morning by Mr. Jenney. dated September 1, 1911, containing a report of a conference with Mr. Watson and a tentative proposition by Watson for a settlement with the Marian Coal Co. people and Boland. I might further say that in a conversation which I had with Mr. Loomis some two weeks ago relative to the advisability of conferring with Boland's representative, with a view of coming to some settlement, it was tentatively agreed between us that he should see what Boland was willing to do. Mr. Jenney has now directed me to give Mr. Loomis my views as to the proposition made by Mr. Watson. Yours, truly,

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) This is a letter from Mr. Reese to Mr. Seager dated September 8. Mr. Seager, will you examine this letter and state whether or not it is a letter you received from Mr. Reese concerning this matter?—A. (After examination.) It is a letter I received from Mr. Reese.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, I ask that it be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence at this point.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 53.]

(Daniel R. Reese, attorney.)

THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA & WESTERN RAILROAD CO., LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
Scranton, Pa., September 8, 1911.

Mr. JOHN L. SEAGER, Commerce Counsel, New York City.

Commerce Counsel, New York City.

Dear Sir: I have your kind favor of the 7th instant relative to the proposed conference between W. P. Boland and a representative of this company and am obliged to you for the information contained therein. Since I have started this matter I have attended one conference, but knew nothing of a Mr. Watson being interested nor of subsequent meetings. However, I have claims against Mr. Boland for $313.32, and I have written him stating that I will institute suit to collect the amount if it is not paid at once. The time limit in which he was to pay this bill has elapsed, and I would like to know whether there is anything in the negotiations referred to in your letter that would interfere with my proceeding to institute suit to collect this amount which he has refused to pay. I would be obliged if you would advise me upon this point.

R/D Yours, truly,

D. R. REESE.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Now, Mr. Seager, I will ask you to state if later, January 12, 1912, you received a further letter from Mr. Reese bearing upon that settlement between you and the Bolands?-A. I can not recollect the date, sir.

Q. Examine this letter which I hand you and state.—A. (After examination.) I did, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we ask that it be marked as an exhibit and that it be read in evidence at this point, with the paper attached, whatever it is.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 54.]

(William S. Jenney, vice president and general counsel; Daniel R. Reese, general attorney.)

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA & WESTERN RAILROAD CO., LEGAL DEPARTMENT, Scranton, Pa., January 12, 1912.

Mr. John L. Seager,

Commerce Counsel, New York City.

My Dear Seager: During a conference which I had with Mr. Boland on Tuesday last in relation to the water proposition that he had in mind, I incidentally mentioned the Marian Coal Co. matters, and intimated to him that if the Marian Coal Co. matter was disposed of it would be easier for me to get the water proposition through, in which latter proposition Boland is very much interested and is anxious to dispose of the land to this company. After a long chat he decided to submit a proposition as to what he would take in settlement of all his claims, both as to freight claims and whatnot and, consequently, he called at my office this afternoon and submitted a letter, of which the inclosed is the first paragraph, the balance of the letter having reference to the water proposition. He declined to give me the letter he had drawn, which was addressed to me, but permitted me to copy the part referring to the Marian Coal Co. matter.

I told him I was going to submit this to our people to see what action they would take in relation thereto, and so I am submitting it to you for such action as you deem advisable, and I would be obliged if you would arrange to advise me whether our people will agree to this proposition or submit a counter proposition.

I hope to be in New York next week and will go over this matter with you, if you desire any further information.

Pours, truly,

D. R. Reese.

Confirming the suggestion you made that an adjustment might be made between the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and the Marian Coal Co. of the differences between them, it is my opinion that the matter might be settled in manner following: For $50,000 of the capital stock of the Marian Coal Co. I believe the persons owning it would be willing to accept $75,000. This would place you in possession of two-thirds of the capital stock of the Marian Coal Co., which would enable you to make such disposition of the Marian Coal Co., which would enable you to make such disposition of the Marian Coal Co. which would enable you to make such disposition of the Marian Coal Co. which would enable you to fine $50,000 of stock all the just obligations of the Marian Coal Co. will be paid. We have always denied the justice of the claim of John W. Peale. This would, of course, be arranged by the Marian Coal Co. after the transfer of the stock, and would be ultimately paid by you if the claim should be finally established in court. With the payment of this we shall have nothing to do with the claim. I need not say that we would regard an offer of this sort as much less than the stock is really worth; but we are desirous, if possible, of ending a complicated and serious litigation which has been waging between the two corporations.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Seager, did you take any action, either yourself or by direction of your superior officers, in regard to that; did you make any proposition?—A. I did.

Q. What was it and on whose authority?—A. I was authorized by Vice President and General Counsel Jenney to make a counter proposition of $25,000, I think it was. I made that proposition, or I telephoned Mr. Reese telling him that that was the counter proposition.

Q. Did anything come of that proposition?—A. No. Q. Matters remained unsettled. Now I want to ask you if you have any knowledge of your own about Judge Archbald being concerned or associated in any way with Mr. Watson in this negotiation that Mr. Watson undertook to bring about between your company and the Marian Coal Co.?—A. I never knew anything about it until the 27th day of May last.

Q. You never knew anything about it until the 27th of this May, when these hearings—A. After I had been subpænaed to attend the Judiciary Committee investigation.

Q. State how you got your information about it then, and from whom.—A. Of course, I had seen—

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if we are going to have the information this witness acquired about Judge Archbald long after all negotiations were over-

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I am asking him to give his informa-tion as a railroad official, if he got information from any of his associates in the company about it.

The WITNESS, I did. Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) State it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that. I do not see how the information that this witness acquired long after all the negotiations were over can possibly affect Judge Archbald. Nobody pretends that any negotiations were going on after the last letter that was written, which was in December prior to May, when the witness obtained it. This investigation was then going on. That would certainly be hearsay evidence. It was nothing that was done in the course of this negotiation.

We have not objected to any testimony as to anything done in pursuance of the negotiation, because Mr. Christopher Boland has testified to a certain conversation that occurred in Judge Archbald's office as to a settlement being proposed, and so we have not objected to any evidence as to what was done in carrying on the negotiation. But the time referred to now is months and months after the negotiation was over and while this inquiry was on foot.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Testimony is already in from Mr. Loomis as to his knowledge. I suppose this is along that line.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I asked him just what knowledge he had in regard to it. However, I am not particular about pressing the question.

O. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Did you, during the time this correspondence was going on, have or not have any knowledge that Judge Archbald was or was not connected with the transaction?-A. I had no knowledge at that time.

Q. None whatever?-A. No, sir.

Q. And yet you were connected with the legal department of your company?-A. I was, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all we wish to ask the witness. We have no questions, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire. Mr. Manager FLOYD. This witness may be discharged, I

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, Mr. Manager CLAYTON informs me that he desires at this point to have Mr. Loomis recalled, for the purpose of asking him two questions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Recall Mr. Loomis.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD E. LOOMIS-RECALLED.

Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) Mr. Loomis, did Judge Archbald ever call at your office in New York about any other matter or on any other mission except the one time he called about the Marian Coal Co. matter?-A. No, sir.

Q. When Judge Archbald called on you at the time you mentioned did he disclose to you his interest in the matter or why he was interested?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is all. The witness may be

Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is another matter to which my attention has been called, about which I would like to ask him a question.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What was it about Mr.
Morgan Davis coming to you to buy the Marian washery?—A.

To buy it? You mean to sell it?

Q. Yes: to sell it, I mean .- A. Morgan Davis called at my office two or three times and asked me if we did not want to change our mind and buy the Marian washery. I told him no, sir; that we did not want to buy it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. My recollection is that this is not cross-examination; that we did not go into the matter at all; and hence I feel constrained to object to the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I thought it might save bringing the witness back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in regard to anything elicited on direct examination, and is not now admissible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. The witness may have to be recalled, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is excused subject to recall under the previous arrangement.

The witness withdrew.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM S. JENNEY.

William S. Jenney, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Please state your name and place of residence.-A. My name is William S. Jenney; my residence is 638 West End Avenue, New York City; my place of business is 90 West Street, New York City.

Q. Are you connected in any way with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.? And if so, state in what way or in what capacity.-A. I am vice president and general counsel.

Q. I will ask you to state what you know about any negotiations looking to the settlement of differences between the Marian Coal Co. and your railroad company in which George M. Watson, of Scranton, participated.—A. Nothing except by hearsay.

Q. Do you know anything through Mr. Loomis, an officer of your company?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just state what you learned about it through Mr. Loomis. A. The only thing I know about the negotiations to which you refer is that a memorandum was sent to me by Mr. Loomis during the summer-some time during the later part of the summer, as I recollect—which has been introduced in evidence. My initials are W. S. J., and that was sent to me. In it Mr. Loomis inquired of our department what, in our opinion, the Marian Coal Co. was likely to get in its proceeding before the commission by way of reparation. I referred it to the commerce counsel of the company, Mr. Seager, and asked him to reply direct to Mr. Loomis on that subject after taking it up with the traffic department. That is the only thing I know personally in connection with any adjustment of that case that was had through Mr. Watson. Everything else I know about it I learned by hearsay either from Mr. Loomis or Mr. Tobey or some other official of the company.

Q. I will ask you what you learned about it through Mr. Loomis, especially whether you heard from Mr. Loomis that Judge Archbald had any connection with that settlement?-A.

Q. State what you learned and what Mr. Loomis said to you on the subject .- A. Nothing further than the fact that Judge Archbald had taken the matter up with him, suggested that we had better take it up, or suggested that our company might obtain an adjustment of the case, and it would be a good thing if we did obtain an adjustment of the case, or something of the kind; I have forgotten just what words Mr. Loomis used. He told me Judge Archbald had taken the matter up.

Q. Mr. Loomis did tell you that Judge Archbald suggested to him to take the matter up with Mr. Watson?-A. I am not sure about that. Mr. Loomis told me that Judge Archbald had spoken to him about the case with a view of having it adjusted. That is about as far as I can say. I can not repeat his language or tell you anything further than that.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not you, in your capacity as a representative of the legal department, made any inquiries as to what interest Judge Archbald could have in that matter; and if so, state the circumstances.-A. All I can say about that is this, that, as I testified before your committee heretofore, on one occasion, when one of my local counsel in Scranton, Maj. Warren, of the firm of Warren, Knapp & O'Malley, was in my office, as I recollect it, during the fall of last year, and some time after I had heard from Mr. Loomis that Judge Archbald had spoken to him about the case, I inquired of Maj. Warren what possible interest Judge Archbald could have in this case, and Maj. Warren gave me his opinion upon That is the only time I ever asked anybody about it.

Q. And that is all you know about it?-A. All I know about it is what Maj. Warren told me. He did not know anything about it; he simply gave me his opinion as to the reason why Judge Archbald had interested himself in the case.

Q: He just gave you an opinion right then and there on the spot?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We do not care anything about that.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think if it is important to know that an opinion was given it is important to bring out what the opinion was; and I will ask the witness what it was, following his answer to the manager's question.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I object. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then I move to strike out the witness's testimony about that. The manager asked the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the manager to inquire whether the witness made any inquiries as to the reason for Judge Archbald's interest in the case.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; he further brought out the fact that an opinion was obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the opinion is evidence at all, of course it should properly be given in evidence by the man who entertained it. It might be given as a reason for the action of counsel, if any action was afterwards based on that opinion, but other than that the Chair thinks it is wholly inadmissible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then I move to strike out the statement that he gave an opinion. How can it be competent to state that an opinion was given and not state what the opinion

Was?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel asks that the answer be stricken out. The Chair will grant the motion.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. There is no objection. We did not ask for the testimony.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do you desire that this witness be retained?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. If there is no question on the part of counsel for respondent, we ask that this witness be finally discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no questions to ask, and he may be discharged so far as we are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM H. TRUESDALE.

William H. Truesdale, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Please state your name and place of residence.-A. William H. Truesdale. My residence is in Greenwich, Conn.

Q. State your connection with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.-A. I am president of that company.

Q. Mr. Truesdale, I will ask you to state whether you know anything about an attempted settlement or negotiation carried on by one George M. Watson to settle certain disputes and differences between the Marian Coal Co. and your railroad company .- A. I have known about it; I think perhaps everything of material importance connected with those negotiations. had very little direct personal dealing with the matter, however, being confined to the-

Q. Well, I will ask you to state it in your own way fully. You got your information or knowledge through the various officers of the company to a certain point?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell all you know about it.—A. All I know personally is confined to the interview with Attorney Watson in the office of the superintendent of our coal-mining department, Mr. Phillips, in Scranton, October 5, 1911, in which Mr. Loomis, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Reese, and myself were present and about which Mr. Loomis has already testified to-day.

Q. I will ask you to state how you got your knowledge of this conference before the conference took place that it was to take place.—A. Through Mr. Loomis.

Q. What did Mr. Loomis tell you?—A. He told me that he had a request first from Mr. Watson for such a conference, and that had been supplemented by a request from Judge Archbald that we appoint a conference with Mr. Watson at Scranton.

Q. He told you that he had first a request from Mr. Watson, and that that was afterwards supplemented by a request from Judge Archbald that you have a conference at Scranton?-A. Yes; that is right.

Q. Now, I will ask you to state, Mr. Truesdale, when that conference at Scranton was held .- A. On the 5th of October,

Q. Now, you can state what occurred. You were present at that conference?-A. I was,

Q. What occurred and what proposition, if any, was submitted by Mr. Watson? Tell all you know about it .- A. There was a discussion, opened, I think, by Mr. Watson, lasting perhaps an hour or a little more, in which in detail we went over the various points that were covered by the correspondence that has been introduced in evidence here to-day. That was elaborated upon, the merits of it discussed pro and con, and, so far as we were concerned, we again stated what had been previously stated in the letters, that we could not see any chance of a settlement being arrived at.

Q. What was the proposition that Mr. Watson submitted there?—A. It was not very definite. In a general way he had submitted what he thought was a just claim, I presume, amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of $160,000.

Q. In the neighborhood of $160,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did that conference last, Mr. Truesdale?—A. An hour or an hour and a quarter, I should say, or something like that.

Q. And the proposition was turned down on your part, was it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any statement in that conference as to the maximum you would offer for a settlement?—A. I do not think we made any offer at all; in fact, I am sure we did not. We stated that we could not figure-

Q. Did you make any statement as to what would be the maximum in case you should make any offer?-A. I think we stated very plainly that we could not see where there was any claim they had that we could consider for more than $15,000 or $17,000, as has been previously explained by Mr. Loomis.

Q. Did you have any knowledge or information concerning Judge Archbald's connection with this negotiation until Mr. Loomis a few days before that conference, told you that Mr. Watson's request had been supplemented by Judge Archbald?— A. I knew of some previous letters that Judge Archbald had written.

Q. You knew of the previous letters that Judge Archbald had written?-A. Yes; I think I saw them. I think Mr. Loomis showed them to me.

Q. I will ask you to state if that conference was not arranged by reason of Judge Archbald's request?-A. Well, I presume so, although Watson also requested it. I can not say but that we might have held it even if we had not received this special request from Judge Archbald to do so.

Q. Would you have granted that conference but for Judge Archbald's request?-A. I do not know that I can say. quently respond to requests like that from people, even when I do not think anything can come of them.

Q. On page 1591, in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee of the House, I will ask you, Mr. Truesdale, if you did not make this response in answer to a question by Mr. Webb:

Mr. Webb. You knew, of course, that the judge was responsible for

Mr. Webb. You knew, of course, that the judge was responsible for this conference?

Mr. Truesdale. I knew that he had requested it. I never heard that any responsibility lay upon him for holding it.

Mr. Webb. I will put it in this way: You had the conference because of the judge's request?

Mr. Truesdale. Yes, sir.

Did you so answer before the Judiciary Committee of the House?—A. I presume that was taken down correctly.

Q. Now, is that true?—A. I think it is. I think I made it because of his request, but we might have had it anyhow. I might have attended a conference even at Mr. Watson's request. I think I explained at that time that I was taking a trip upon the road with Mr. Loomis and other officials, and that made it convenient to have a conference in connection with it.

Q. Mr. Truesdale, you understood, through Mr. Loomis and through the correspondence, that the beginning of these negotiations was at the instance of Judge Archbald, did you not, through a request made to Mr. Loomis?-A. At the beginning with Mr. Watson.

Q. With Mr. Watson. It was through Judge Archbald's request?-A. Growing out of that; yes, sir.

Q. You also knew and understood that this final conference was brought about by Judge Archbald?-A. I knew he had requested it; yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state what was said at this conference on the 5th of October about the nature of the claim that was presented to you on that occasion. Did you refer to it as a holdup in that conference?-A. I do not think I did, sir.

Q. Did you regard it as excessive?-A. I did. Q. Did you so say?-A. I think I did; yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Archbald's connection with the transaction mentioned in that conference?—A. I do not think it was. Q. You do not think it was?—A. I do not.

Q. You knew about his connection with it?-A. I knew he had asked us to have this conference; yes, sir.

Q. What did you understand Judge Archbald's interest in this matter was and what do you understand now it was?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object, unless it is by reason of something said or done directly or indirectly connecting Judge Archbald with it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will sustain the objection. The counsel will limit it to specific facts. Mr. Manager FLOYD. The Chair overrules the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager can address his inquiry as to any particular fact at the conference.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Do you know what his connection was?-A. I do not.

Q. I will ask you to state what you thought about it. Mr. SIMPSON. I object for the reason already given, sir. If anything was said or done, I do not object to it, but to ask the witness what he thought about it is certainly irrelevant to this inquiry.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) I will ask you, Mr. Truesdale, if you know of Judge Archbald being connected with any other. transaction in your company or trying to effect any other settlement between litigants in your company?—A. No, sir; I never knew of that.

Q. Has it by letter or correspondence ever been brought to your attention that he has been connected with any such matter before?-A. It has not.

Q. This is the first and only instance that you know of?-A.

Q. Did your company have litigation pending in the Commerce Court at the time?-A. I really do not know whether it

Q. You do not know whether it had or not?-A. No, sir.

Q. Your company frequently has litigation before the Commerce Court, or is likely to have litigation before the Commerce Court, has it not?—A. We have not had very many, I

Q. It is a court that has jurisdiction over matters in which your railroad is sometimes concerned?

Mr. SIMPSON. Do you think that is a question to ask of the witness?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Truesdale, at this conference was not Mr. Watson's claim first that the Bolands had in fact a claim against your company of three or four hundred thousand dellars. sand dollars?-A. I have no recollection of mentioning any such amount as that.

Q. Let me ask you whether this question and answer were not given at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee upon this one point, page 1601:

Mr. Worthington. You do not remember that his claims amounted to three or four hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. Truesdale. I do not. I have an impression that they did amount to something like that, but I have nothing very distinct in my mind on that subject.

Do you remember that?-A. Yes; I do. I remember giving some evidence upon that point.

Q. What was the conference about? Was it to settle differences between your company and the Bolands and the Marian Coal Co., or was it to purchase two-thirds of the stock of the Marian Coal Co.?-A. To settle the claims.

Q. It had no relevancy to stock at all?—A. I never heard of any attempt being made to sell us any amount of their stock.

It was not considered at all.

Q. And, as I understand you, the conference itself, so far as the details of it were concerned, was taken up mostly in discussing the rate matter. Is that right?—A. That is my recollection; yes, sir.

Q. But the washery and so on was incidentally spoken of?-A.

It was, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, Mr. President. Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all. This witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF DANIEL R. REESE.

Daniel R. Reese appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Reese, state your name and place of residence.—A. Daniel R. Reese, Scranton, Pa.

Q. I will ask you to state, Mr. Reese, whether you are connected in any way with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.—A. I am.
Q. In what capacity?—A. I am an attorney for that railroad.

Q. I will ask you to state if you had certain correspondence concerning an attempted settlement of some differences between the Marian Coal Co. and your railroad company.—A. I had. Q. Examine this letter of July 31, 1911 [handing paper], and state whether or not you wrote that letter.—A. (Examining.) It is my signature. I wrote the letter.

What is the Senate exhibit mark?-A. Exhibit 50.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, the letter has already been read in evidence. We do not desire to have it read at this time. (To the witness:) I will ask you to examine the paper which I hand you [handing paper] marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 51," and state whether or not you wrote that letter .- A. (Examining.) I did.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) That letter also is already in [Handing paper to witness.] This is Senate Exhibit 53. Examine that letter and state whether or not you sent it.

(Examining.) I did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is this for the identification of the letters?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. They have already been identified and read in evidence, and we do not object to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have already been read in evidence and not objected to.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) You wrote the letters?—A. I did.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of these negotiations that were going on with Mr. Watson?—A. I did not. Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You lived in Scranton?—A. I live in Scranton. Q. You wrote these letters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Reese, were you present at the conference on the 5th of October?—A. I was.

Q. I will ask you to state, if you know, what the proposition was which was submitted there by Mr. Watson.—A. Mr. Watson. son submitted a proposition to settle all matters for $161,000.

Q. $161,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not know at that time that the Bolands were willing to settle it for $100,000 or a less amount?-A. I did not.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.
Q. You never heard of that?—A. I did not.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF HELM BRUCE,

Helm Bruce appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. Norris will conduct the examination of this witness, Mr. President.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, this witness's testimony pertains and applies to article 4. We have taken him and the following witness out of order because we want to give them an opportunity to get away. [To the witness:] Mr. Bruce, state your name.—A. My name is Helm Bruce.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Where do you reside, Mr.

Bruce?-A. Louisville, Ky.

Q. What is your business, occupation, or profession now ?-A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How old are you, Mr. Bruce?-A. I am 52.

Q. How long have you been a lawyer?-A. 30 years,

Q. Did you in your professional capacity have anything to do with the case before the Commerce Court entitled "The Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co."?—A. It was entitled just the other way. It was the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. I gave you the title as it appeared in the Supreme Court. Whom did you represent in that litigation?—A. The Louisville

Nashville Railroad Co.

Q. Are you at the present time an attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad?—A. One of its attorneys.

Q. I did not expect you to be more than one.—A. I mean by that that I am not its general counsel.

Q. How long have you been one of the attorneys for this railroad company?—A. I have represented it in different kinds of litigation for something like 20 years.

Q. Mr. Bruce, were you the managing attorney on the part of the railroad company in this particular case to which I have called your attention at the time it was argued and submitted in the Commerce Court?-A. I was.

Q. How long had you been in control of that case on the part of the railroad company?—A. Since the spring of 1910, my recollection is. The case was argued on the 3d and 4th of April, 1911, and submitted on the 4th of April. Q. What year?—A. 1911.

Q. When did this case get into the Commerce Court with relation to the time of the organization of the Commerce Court?-As soon as the Commerce Court was organized.

Q. It was one of the cases that under the law was sent into that court as soon as it was organized?—A. It was transferred by operation of law.

When was that case argued, did you say?-A. On the 3d and 4th days of April, 1911.

Q. Was it submitted on the 4th day of April, 1911, to the court?-A. It was. Q. When was the judgment of the court rendered?-A. I do not remember the date, but it was, I think, in the early part of March, 1912, this year.

Q. So that between its submission and the time it was decided it was nearly a year?—A. About 11 months.

Q. Did you argue the case orally before the court?-After it was argued and submitted and before it was decided, while it was pending in the court, did you have any correspondence with Judge Archbald in relation to it?-A. I did. Mr. Manager NORRIS. I will ask that this letter be marked

The Secretary marked the paper "U. S. S. Exhibit 55."

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, I hand to you Senate Exhibit 55 and ask you to examine it and state what it is .- A. (Examining.) It is a letter from Judge Archbald to

Q. Is that the first letter that you received from him?-A. Let me see the date of that. [Examining.] Yes, sir.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. We offer this letter in evidence and ask that it be read.

Mr. Manager SIMPSON. What is the date of the letter? Mr. Manager NORRIS. August 22, 1911. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 55.1

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., August 22, 1911.

HELM BRUCE, Esq.

DEAR SIR: In the New Orleans-Montgomery rate case, referring to Mr. Compton's testimony on page 397 of the stenographer's minutes of the hearing before the commission, will you please confer with Mr. Compton and advise me whether in answer to the first question by Commissioner Clements upon that page Mr. Compton intended to say that they "did" or "did not" apply the combination of locals to protect a through shipment in the case of Mobile and Montgomery? As the record stands Mr. Compton is made to say "We did apply it there." It is rather indefinite what "it" refers to; whether to the word "exception," in the question of Commissioner Clements, or to the word "combination," with which the word "apply" seems to connect it. I would like to have you clear this up if possible.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, did you answer that letter?-A. I did.

Q. Did you keep a copy of your answer?-A. I did.

Q. Do you have that copy, Mr. Bruce?-A. No; you had it.

Q. I do not seem to have it here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You may read it from the record. Mr. SIMPSON. It is found on page 1540, and there is no objection to reading it.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I will ask you, Mr. Bruce, to examine this letter as printed in the record of the proceedings before the House Judiciary Committee and to say whether that is a copy of it?

Mr. SIMPSON. We will admit that it is, Mr. Manager

Norris, to save time.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Very well; then we will have it read. It is admitted that the letter on page 1540 is a copy of the answer of the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the paper marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 56," as follows:

IU. S. S. Exhibit 56.1

Judge R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

Judge R. W. Archbald, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: I have yours of the 22d instant concerning the New Orleans-Montgomery Rate case and have just seen Mr. Compton concerning his testimony before the commission to which you refer, being the testimony on page 397. When I called this to his attention he immediately and unhesitatingly said that what he meant was that the company did not apply the combination of locals to protect a through shipment in the case of Mobile and Montgomery. He called attention to the fact that the remainder of his answer shows that such was his meaning, because he immediately proceeds to state that the company has tried, as far as possible, at all times to maintain the relative adjustment in the southeastern territory, which relative adjustment applies to rates between competitive points which are fixed with relation to each other, whereas rates to and from or between mere local points are not involved in the relative adjustment of rates.

You will find this matter very clearly explained by Mr. Compton in his testimony before the special examiner appointed by the circuit court in the present case in answer to question No. 19, beginning on page 173 of the transcript of the testimony before the special examiner. You will see that Mr. Compton there not only states the facts fully, but explains the reasons for them. And this testimony is wholly uncontradicted.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, we should like to have that letter marked as an exhibit so that it may appear in the record in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, did you have any further correspondence with Judge Archbald about this case while it was pending?—A. I did.

Q. What was the next letter from him to you or from you to him?-A. A letter from him to me.

Q. What is the date of the letter? It is the one written in longhand.—A. It is dated January 10, 1912.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is an intervening letter, Judge Norris.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. I want the next letter, Mr. Bruce. Mr. SIMPSON. It is found on page 1541 of the record, and I presume you want it in the record.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The letter of August 26, 1911, is next.

Mr. Manager NORRIS (to the witness). Does that appear among the letters I gave you, Mr. Bruce?
The WITNESS. What is the date?
Mr. SIMPSON. August 26.

The Witness (after examination). There is no such letter here.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think there is.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. You may read it from the record;
we do not care anything about it.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. Very well; mark it as an exhibit, and we will read it from the printed record.

The WITNESS. Shall I answer the question? You asked me to read the next letter, and I started to read the letter of January 10, 1912. I had overlooked the fact that there was a letter of August 26, 1911, including

Mr. Manager NORRIS. August 26, 1911, be read. We will ask that the letter of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, which was marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 57," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 57.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., August 26, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Bruce: I thank you for your letter of August 26, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Bruce: I thank you for your letter of August 24, with reference to Mr. Compton's testimony, about which I wrote you. I was quite sure from the context that the word "not" ought to be in the answer of Mr. Compton, on page 397, to which I referred. I think, however, that the intention to give a negative answer to the idea advanced in the question put is sufficiently evident from the context; and, as you have pointed out, this is fully explained by Mr. Compton in his answer to question 19, found in the testimony taken before the examiner. examiner.
Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD. Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, what was the next step in this correspondence?—A. The next letter was the one I started to read a moment ago, of January 10, 1912, from Judge Archbald to me.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask that that letter be marked and read.

The letter was marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 58" and 'read, as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 58.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

ON BOARD HOUSE BOAT "FIRSOLE."

Indian River, Fla., January 10, 1312.

My Dear Mr. Bruch: The inscription above will betray where I am and the pleasures I am about, while the New Orleans-Mobile-Montgomery rate case remains undecided. But I am where I am by irresistible invitation, and as tender to Mrs. Archbald, who could not go without me, which affords a partial extenuation.

And that I am not altogether oblivious of duty, permit me to make another inquiry about the rate case referred to. On page 69 of your brief you refer to the assertion by the commission in its report that "the building of new railroads and other causes have forced many departures from the adjustment of rates made by the Cooley arbitration." As to which you state that according to the record this is shown to be clearly mistaken. An examination of the tariffs in evidence by one of the members of our court has disclosed, however, a very large number of changes in commodity rates from time to time, which is claimed to refute your argument and sustain the commission, and it is with regard to this that I am writing you.

Assuming that these tariffs have been correctly interpreted by us, would you sustain it? That is to say, if there have been these departners from time to time in commodity rates from the adjustment of rates under the Cooley arbitration, would not that of itself be sufficient in the face of the cool of Association which you way is used to whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they show the numerous changes which have proposed to give us your views as to whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they show the numerous changes which have proposed to give us your views as to whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they show the numerous changes which have proposed to give us your views as to whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they show the numerous changes which have proposed to did not d

Q. Mr. Bruce, did you comply with the request contained in that letter?-A. I did.

And answered the letter?-A. I did.

Q. What was the date of your reply?—A. January 24, 1912.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, we ask that the letter be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence.

The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 59,"

as follows:

JANUARY 24, 1912.

My Dear Judge: Yours of the 10th instant concerning the New Orleans-Mobile-Montgomery case reached me, I think, some days after it was written. I, however, deferred making any attempt to answer until I could have a chance to talk with Mr. Compton about some of the matters to which your inquiries are directed. And, as Mr. Compton was off on one of his testifying expeditions and did not return to his office for several days, the answer to your letter has been delayed much longer than I expected. Otherwise I would have made a brief acknowledgment of it immediately, with promise of an additional answer later.

As your letter was written without the aid of a stenographer, so that you have no copy of it, I will, pursuant to your suggestion, state the substance of your inquiries, so that my answer may be clearly understood.

you have no copy of it, I will, pursuant to your suggestion, state the substance of your inquiries, so that my answer may be clearly understood.

You refer to the following facts, (1) that the commission in its report stated that the building of new railroads and other causes have forced many departures from the adjustments of rates made by the Cooley arbitration; (2) that in my brief, on page 69, I refer to this assertion by the commission and say it is not according to the record; and (3) that an examination of the tariffs in evidence seems to disclose a large number of changes in commodity rates from time to time, which seem to refute my statement. Having made this reference to the record and the brief, you then ask:

"Assuming that these tariffs have been correctly interpreted by us, would you still affirm the position taken in your brief, and upon what theory would you sustain ft? That is to say, if there have been these departures from time to time in commodity rates from the adjustment of rates under the Cooley arbitration, would not that of itself be sufficient to warrant the assertion made by the commission, which you say is in the face of the record? Also, have you made such an examination of the tariffs in evidence that you are prepared to give us your views as to whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they have been correctly interpreted by us, and whether they show the numerous changes which I have referred to? Again, is there anything to indicate that the commission did or did not rely on these tariffs for the statement that they make with regard to the alleged departure from the Cooley arbitration? And if there are such departures in commodity rates, whether they make with regard to the alleged departure from the Cooley arbitration? And if there are such departures in commodity rates, whether the commission moted them or not, could it be said that the statement in their report was not sustained by the evidence?

modity rates. But the commission, for reasons expressed by it in its report, never passed upon the complaint as to commodity rates, the concluding clause of the commission's report being in the following language:

"In regard to the commodity rates attacked in these proceedings certain adjustments and changes have been made therein by the defendant since the institution thereof, with the view of correcting inequalities or excessive charges found to exist, which adjustments and changes are admitted to have removed the cause of complaint to some extent. It is impracticable in the present state of the record to determine satisfactorily what other changes, if any, respecting commodity rates should be made. These cases will be retained, therefore, for such further investigation and consideration of commodity rates involved as the facts and circumstances may seem to require." (Complainant's exhibit book, p. 89.)

I was not in the case before the commission at all. And I did not come into the case in the circuit court until after the bill was filed and the commission had filed its answer. I did, however, have charge of the taking of proof and the preparation of the case from the time the issues were made. Finding that the commission had decided nothing on the subject of commodity rates, but had expressly reserved that subject for further consideration, and that the equity suit filed by the railroad company attacking the commission's order was therefore necessarily confined to the subject of class rates, to which the commission's order was confined. I never attempted to make any investigation of the subject of commodity rates, or to make any investigation of the subject of commodity rates, or to make any investigation of the subject of commodity rates is a matter that would require investigation, followed by explanation, but that investigation had possible to the reasons which seem to me to sufficiently appear from what I have said.

I do not see how it can be possible that the commission, in making the statement it di to me that the commission's statement that the Cooley adjustment had been departed from, must be considered as relating to that subject matter upon which it was passing indigment, or expressing a conclusion and which, as we have seen, was confined to the subject of class rates, expressly excluding commodity rates, and therefore in any proper sense it is true that the commission's statement is not sustained by the evidence.

When I at last succeeded in getting hold of Mr. Compton, and asked him about the fact as to whether or not the Cooley adjustment had been departed from in fixing commodity rates, a subject to which I had never before given any attention. In the subject would require a very great deal of very painstaking investigation. He called my attention to the fact that in the tariffs there are a great many pages devoted to commodity rates; that it would be necessary to check over all of these individual rates for the purpose of seeing whether or not any rates on any commodity departed from the Cooley adjustment, and then to ascertain, if possible, the reason why the departure was made in As to the particular tariffs that were filed before the commission, I was not able to call them specially to his attention, because my file is very incomplete as to copies of the tariffs introduced in evidence, and it would of course be an enormous work to read through the entire testimony before the commission for the purpose of picking out here and there where some tariff of this kind may have been referred to. He said, therefore, that while it was a possible thing to check over it would involve a work of tremendous labor. And I told him that it did not befieve you meant to call for them at this time, especially in view of the situation of this case, as I have heretofore explained. Speaking generally upon the subject, without investigation, he said that there might be some cases where a commodity moved in substantial quantities from one point, such as New Orleans, which did not nove in substantial quantities from the Hon. R. W. Archbald, Judge United States Commerce Court, Washington, D. C.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) That letter, Mr. Bruce, was signed by you?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. The Secretary has read from a carbon copy. Did you hear from the judge again before this case was finally determined?-A. No.

Q. When did you next hear from him in regard to this case?—A. After the case was decided I wrote the judge a letter and he answered that.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter that you wrote to the judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I ask that it be marked as an exhibit and that it be read in evidence.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 60.]

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

MARCH 4, 1912.

My Dear Judge: Of course, a lawyer is always gratified at winning a case, but I hope that I offend against no rule of propriety when I express my gratification, not simply at the ultimate result, to wit, the annulling of the order of the commission in the case of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission (which we know as the New Orleans Board of Trade case), but over the opinion. This seems to me to show a familiarity on your part of the intricate details of this case that is really extraordinary; and your statement of the principles by which the court was guided in acting upon the case is so clear as to leave no doubt in the mind of one who is looking for a guiding rule in such cases.

Yours, truly,

HB-B.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, that letter bore your signature as it was sent?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you get an answer to that?—A. I did.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. We ask that it be marked as an exhibit and read in evidence.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 61.]

(R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.) SCRANTON, PA., March 8, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. BRUCE: I thank you for your letter and its kind appreciation of the opinion of the court in the New Orleans Board of Trade case; but you fail to take credit for the very important part which you played in the result. Frankly, the case was won on your argument and brief. Your oral argument was one of the best that we have heard, and your brief was an absolute demonstration of the errors committed by the commission, and complete at every point. You can not fail to note how closely the opinion follows and reflects what is there said. As for myself, I am only entitled at the most to a part of the opinion as filed. A considerable portion of it, if not indeed the best, is from the hand of another member of the court, and it is probably there that you find the enunciation of principles which you particularly commend. I regret exceedingly the delay which has occurred in this case; but some time, when I have the pleasure of seeing you again, I will endeavor to explain how it came about.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. Archbald.

I hope we shall have the pleasure of hearing you soon in argument again.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Bruce, the judge in that last letter speaks of a conference. Did you have that conerence?-A. No; I never saw-I never spoke to Judge Archbald in my life, except twice, once

Q. You never saw him after the receipt of that letter except since you have appeared as a witness here or before the committee?-A. I have never seen him until I saw him before the Judiciary Committee.

Q. Did you give to the other attorneys in the case any notice of this letter or argument that you sent to the judge?-A. I

Q. Do you know whether any of the other attorneys in the case knew anything about the correspondence that was going on while the case was pending?-A. I do not know, but I have no reason to think they did.

Q. In that litigation who represented the United States Government?-A. Do you mean the Government or the commission? Q. I mean the Interstate Commerce Commission,-A. Mr.

William E. Lamb, now of Chicago, then of Washington. O. Who instituted this suit originally?-A. The Louisville &

Nashville Railroad Co.

Q. There was a complaint made coming from the New Orleans Board of Trade, was there not?—A. Yes; that was the hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. Yes .- A. That was a complaint, or, rather, there were three complaints by the New Orleans Board of Trade against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. Who represented the New Orleans Board of Trade in this litigation, if anybody?-A. In this judicial case?

Q. Yes.-A. Nobody.

They were not represented?-A. No, sir.

Q. Were they represented before the Interstate Commerce Commission, do you know?-A. I know that from having seen a brief filed before the commission by Mr. Smith.
Q. Mr. Smith?—A. He represented the board of trade before the commission.

Q. Do you know his full name?—A. I think it is John Smith. Q. He lives in New Orleans?—A. Yes. I am not sure of his name.

Q. I will ask explicitly did you notify Mr. Smith or this other gentleman, whose name you have given—
Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Lamb.
Q. (Continuing). Mr. Lamb, of what was going on in this correspondence?-A. I did not.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Bruce, you have been a practicing attorney how long?—A. Thirty years.

Q. In active practice during the whole of that time?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what courts has your practice been principally?-A.

Well, all of the courts in my part of the country.
Q. And the Supreme Court of the United States?—A. Yes, sir; and the circuit court, Court of Appeals of Kentucky, the circuit and district courts of the United States, the circuit court of appeals, and the Supreme Court.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, there are a couple of matters as to which there is no dispute, about which we want to examine the witness. Mr. Bruce is an exceedingly active man. I do not know whether the managers would object to our examining him in regard to these matters at this time or not. It will not be cross-examination.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I did not hear the statement of counsel.

Mr. SIMPSON. I say there are a couple of matters about which there is no dispute as to which we would like to examine Mr. Bruce at this time. He has been subpoenaed by us. I do not think there will be any dispute about it, but of course we will have to wait until our case comes on if the managers

I will state, if you desire, what the points are. In the first place to prove by Mr. Bruce that the first letter which was received by Judge Archbald from him was, in fact, attached to the record in the case

Mr. Manager NORRIS. There is no dispute about that,

We will admit that.

Mr. SIMPSON. And is printed in the record in the Supreme Court. If that is admitted I do not want to ask him about it.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is the first letter? Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; from Mr. Bruce to Judge Archbald. Mr. Manager NORRIS. Yes; from Mr. Bruce to Judge

Archbald.

Mr. SIMPSON. And the second thing is that he received a letter from Judge Mack and wrote a reply, which he has been asked to produce. I would simply like to have the letters identified and copies left here.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. There will be no objection to his doing that. We will not object to Judge Mack's letter, except the objection that may be made on the ground of its immateriality.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all right.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We will not require you to identify You need not keep him here for that purpose. I do not think it is material.

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not think there is any use of Bruce remaining here.

The WITNESS. Do I correctly understand that you want me to produce the letter?

Mr. SIMPSON. A copy of Judge Mack's letter to you and your reply to him. With that we will let you go.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He might produce the originals. Mr. SIMPSON. He would, of course, I suppose prefer to keep the originals.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. You will let us see those? Mr. SIMPSON. I have not seen them myself yet, Judge, but I will be very glad to show them to you.

The WITNESS. There are three letters. You asked for only

Mr. SIMPSON. I did not know there were three. [To the witness.] Can you leave these letters or send us copies? It does not make any difference which you do.

The WITNESS. I will leave the originals here, and you can return them to me when you get ready.

Mr. SIMPSON. Thank you.
Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Referring to this case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against the Interstate Commerce Commission, after it was decided by the Commerce Court it went to the Supreme Court, did it not?—A. It did.

Q. And is there pending?—A. Under submission. Q. Had the case originally been passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission ?- A. Oh, yes; that is the foundation. Q. And your client, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., commenced the case by injunction against the Interstate Commerce Commission from enforcing its order; that was the origin of it?-A. That is it.

Q. Mr. Bruce, since your testimony have you talked with the attorneys for the respondent?-A. I have not; except-Q. Have you had any correspondence with them?-A. (Continuing.) Let me answer the question completely.

Q. All right .- A. When I got to the city, having been subpænaed by both sides, I notified the managers that I was here and ready to testify; and I also notified Mr. Worthington, counsel for Judge Archbald, that I was here and ready to testify.

Q. Did you communicate to them the fact that you had had some correspondence with Judge Mack?-A. I testified to that before the Judiciary Committee.

Q. I believe you did make reference to that.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is the reason we subpænaed him to produce them.

The Witness. I was served with a subpœna duces tecum to produce those letters.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Did you write a letter to Mr. Worthington after your testimony before the Judiciary Committees-A. I did.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think, gentlemen, you have that letter. Mr. WORTHINGTON. We should like to have that letter to Mr. SIMPSON. identify it. It is not in evidence.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. There will be no trouble about the identification. We will find it or a copy of it.

Mr. SIMPSON. All right. Mr. WORTHINGTON. The record of the Judiciary Committee will show that this witness did write a letter to me, which I produced at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee. It was turned over to the committee and has been in their possession since

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I apprehend we will have no con-troversy about that unless it be about the admissibility of it in evidence: but about the identification of it or the fact that such a letter was written, there will be no controversy.

The WITNESS. I did not understand you to ask me, Judge, if I had written to Mr. Worthington. Was that the purport of your question?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I asked you if you had had any correspondence with him.

The WITNESS, I did not understand that. Of course I did write to Mr. Worthington shortly after my appearance before the Judiciary Committee, but I knew the managers knew of that letter, and when you asked me if I had had any correspondence I thought you meant some late correspondence,

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all with this witness, Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be discharged. The WITNESS. I should like to ask if my letter which I wrote to Mr. Worthington is in the record.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; it is not.
The Witness. I think the facts I stated in that letter are material, if I may be permitted to say so, to this matter you have under consideration, because it states the attitude of the parties upon the question on which Judge Archbald wrote to me.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. This is not in response to anything we have asked; and while it is very interesting, I think we can deal with that matter later. There will, no doubt, be an agreement about the identity of the letter, but any argument predicated on that letter I do not think we care to have at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be finally discharged?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes.
The Witness. Discharged by both sides.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. I have a witness, whose testimony will be very brief, whom we might call at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is the desire of the Senate, the time can be prolonged. If not, the order of the Senate will require the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment to adjourn at 6 o'clock. On the suggestion of the manager that the testimony of his next witness will be short

Mr. Manager NORRIS. It may be the witness has gone. think he has gone. We will not ask that he be called at this time

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the managers on the part of the House, the respondent, and his counsel retired.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 12, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 11, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, for the deep and abiding faith which Thou hast implanted in the hearts of Thy children, the inspiration of men to noble and heroic lives, to whom we are indebted for the civilization of our day. most fervently pray that this faith may grow until it becomes universal, crowding out hate and revenge, doubt and uncertainty, bringing in brotherly love, until all men can say,

I know not where His islands lift Their fronded palms in air; I only know I can not drift Beyond His love and care.

This we ask in the name of Christ the Lord. Amen. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the argument of the Hon. James M. Beck in the Supreme Court of the United States as to the invalidity of a Federal censorship of the press under the operation of House bill 21279.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the argument referred to:

(Supreme Court of the United States. The Lewis Publishing Co., a body corporate in law, complainant-appellant, against Edward M. Morgan, postmaster in and for the city of New York, defendant-appellee.)

BRIEF FOR THE APPELLANT.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The newspaper law (reprinted in full as an appendix, post, p. 51), whose constitutionality is in this suit called into question, is neither in form nor substance a law to regulate the carriage of the mails, but to regulate journalism.

In this respect is has the merit of sincerity. It does not pretend to be in aid of the Post Office Department. That department did not seek its enactment, but protested against it. (When the bill was under consideration before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the Postmaster General addressed a formal letter to Senator Bourne, the chairman of the committee, in which, after discussing other details of the general appropriation bill, he made this specific protest against the passage of the newspaper section: "I also call your attention to that portion of the bill beginning on page 33, line 19, which requires the insertion in newspapers and periodicals of the name of the owner or owners and the managing editor or managing editors, and also that matter for the insertion of which a charge is made by the publishers should be marked as an advertisement or private name of the writer signed thereto. In my judgment this provision is not only needless, but will be positively hammul, as it will require the continuous use of valuable space in the publication and at the same time be resented as a consorship of the press. One of the greatest difficulties now encountered in the enforcement of the laws relating to second-class mail privileges is the fact that the Post Office Department is under its duty compelled to make inquiry into many aspects of the private business of publishers. This gives rise to the complaint, though ill-founded, that the Government carries on a needless interference with the privileges of the press. The only possible service to be rendered by such a provision would be the identification of the owners and writers of newspapers and periodicals in order to hold them for contractual obligations or for libelous printed matter, both of which would be matter u

Even this remote connection is wanting in the latter section of the law, which requires paid reading matter to be formally branded as an advertisement. Its enforcement is left to a criminal action for a penalty.

The law has two plainly avowed objects.

The first is to compel a disclosure to the Government, under oath, of the names and addresses of the editors, publishers, business managera and owners, stockholders, security creditors, and the daily circulation of such newspapers for the preceding six months.

This will be hereafter referred to as the inquisitorial provision.

The second object is to compel a disclosure to the public through newspaper publication of these facts and also whether any editorial or reading matter in such publication has been inserted for a valuable consideration.

This will be hereafter referred to as the publicity provision.

The publicity provision can not be referred to any proper function of the Post Office Department. Its function is to carry the mails and in such carriage it can not matter whether the public are advised as to the ownership, editorial direction, and circulation of a newspaper or not, or whether the matter which it publishes is published for a consideration.

The requirement that the publishers shall file a sworn statement on such carriage it can not matter whether the public are advised as to the ownership, editorial direction, and circulation of a newspaper or not, or whether the matter which it publishes is published for a consideration.

The requirement that the publishers shall file a sworn statement on these matters with the Post Office Department was not intended as a means of determining whether a newspaper was in fact entitled to the privileges of second-class rates, for as the Attorney General, in the opinion which he has given to the Postmaster General with reference to this law, plainly points out, the Post Office Department already has all of the inquisitorial power that it needs for this purpose. (The Attorney General says: "Independently of this amending act, in order that the Postmaster General may determine whether or not a publication applying to be admitted to the second class has a legitimate list of subscribers, and is not designed primarily for advertising purposes, or free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates, the Postmaster General is entitled to require full and complete statements showing the character of the business of the publication, and by section 436 of regulations (edition of 1902) he has required postmasters to secure satisfactory evidence that publications so offered for entry have 'a legitimate list of subscribers approximating 50 per cent of the numbers of copies regularly issued and circulated, by mail or otherwise, made up, not of persons whose names are furnished by advertisers or by others interested in the circulation of the publication, but of those who voluntarily seek it and pay for it with their own money, although this rule is not intended to interfere with any genuine case where one person subscribes for a definite period of several issues for a limited number of copies for another.' And by section 438 the postmasters are directed to require the proprietor or duly authorized representative, on applying for second-class mail privilege, to furnish detail information of a char man of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, said: "I assume the desire is to furnish the public information as to the possible bias of the paper incident to ownership or incident to obligations of the paper or its owners to individuals." Another advocate of the legislation, Senator Reed, of Missouri, said that "the purpose of the proposed law was that the people who read the newspapers should be advised of the control back of the newspapers." When the proposed legislation was originally suggested in the House of Representatives, Congressman Henry of Texas, chairman of the Committee on Rules, stated that its purpose was "that the American people may see the men who stand behind the guns trained against public officials." When the addition with reference to the printing of daid matter was added, its proponent, Congressman Barnhart, of New York, stated as its purpose that this provision "will not cost the people anything, but will conserve honesty and public confidence in one of the greatest educational factors in the world." Congressman Victora Berger, of Wisconsin, said: "It seems to me that the politicians are trying to get even with the newspapers, which are continually prying into the private affairs of the politicians. The politicians want to know everybody connected with the papers and thus get the best of them. You can never do it, gentlemen, because in the end the newspapers will have the last word every time, no matter what you do. If you get the ill will of your own party papers, you might just as well quit the political game. Moreover, there is a grave danger lurking behind the proposition. The freedom of the press is involved.")

The face of the statute shows its true purpose. Religious, fraternal, might just as well quit the political game. Moreover, there is a grave danger lurking behind the proposition. The freedom of the press is involved.")

The face of the statute shows its true purpose. Religious, fraternal, temperance, scientific, or other similar publications are exempted from its provisions, and the requirement as to disclosure of circulation is further limited to daily newspapers.

If it be desirable that the Postmaster General, before admitting a periodical to second-class rates or to the privileges of the mail at all, shall require a statement of its average circulation, such requirement, so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, must be quite as important in the case of a religious or scientific journal as an ordinary newspaper, and certainly there can be no reasonable distinction as to such publicity between a weekly and daily newspaper. This discrimination shows that the law attempts to regulate the instrumentalities of public opinion, the newspaper press, and that the carriage of the mails or the right to second-class matter was not the object of Congress. It attempts to ascertain who are responsible for daily newspapers, and the extent of their influence as measured by circulation.

Congress sought to censor the press by compelling disclosure and publicity of facts vital to its influence under the penalty of exclusion from the mails, a penalty sufficiently drastic, for such exclusion would wreck any publication. The penalty is not merely exclusion from the privilege of second-class rates or a denial of the carriage of the newspaper through the mails. The owners and publishers who refuse to comply with the law are denied the privilege of the mails for any purpose. As to paid matter, they are subject to indictment and a fine.

With the policy of this law this court has no concern. It can only inquire whether it is a valid law ninder the Constitution.

My argument against its validity will be divided into three propositions—

My argument against its validity will be divided into three propositions—

1. The Constitution has not, either under the post-roads clause or elsewhere, delegated to the Federal Government the power (1) to compel these disclosures and (2) to direct their publication or (3) to compel paid reading matter to be marked as an advertisement.

2. The Constitution not only failed to give such power, but it expressly forbade it by the first amendment prohibiting any law "abridging the freedom of the press."

3. The requirement that a certain class of newspapers shall disclose to the public by publication the most intimate details of their business and use their own capital, labor facilities, and valuable space for such disclosure is a taking of "liberty" and "property" without due process of law and a like taking of valuable property rights for an assumed public use without just compensation.

Argument of the Law.

ARGUMENT OF THE LAW.

ARGUMENT OF THE LAW.

I.

The Constitution has not, either under the post-roads clause or elsewhere, delegated to the Federal Government the power (1) to compel these disclosures and (2) to direct their publication or (3) to compel paid matter to be marked as an advertisement.

While no express power for such a law will be claimed, the Government will seek to sustain it as an implied power necessary to the express power "to establish post offices and post roads" (Art. I., sec. 8). It has been well said:

"No other constitutional grant seems to be clothed in words which so poorly express its object or so feebly indicate the particular measures which may be adopted to carry out its design. To establish post offices and post roads is the form of the grant; to create and regulate the entire postal system of the Government is the evident intent." (Pomeroy on Constitutional Law, sec. 411.)

It was originally thought—indeed, as late as the administration of President Monroe—that the only purpose of the grant was to designate the routes over which the mails should be carried and the post offices where it should be received and distributed. At the time the Constitution was framed the carriage of the mails was a private enterprise, although the establishment of post offices was a governmental function. This was the view of President Monroe when he vetoed the Cumberland Road bill on May 4, 1822. The carriage of the mails is therefore in itself an implied power.

These earlier and narrow views of an important governmental power are, however, academic, for I freely concede that, however unhappily expressed, the Constitution meant to give to the Federal Government full power to make a monopoly of the carriage and distribution of the mails, and that all "necessary and proper" means are to be regarded as fairly embraced in the power.

The present law as an alleged implied power must therefore be subjected to the acid test of Chief Justice Marshall:

"Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, an be "abridged"?

When governmental powers—only caumerated in the Constitution in the broadest and most general way—pass to the stage of necessary definition through judicial decisions, restrictions are imperatively necessary, unless the Constitution itself is to fall into cureless ruin.

The commanding genius of Marshall and his associates quickly recognized the absolute necessity of the judiciary confining both the National and State Governments within their respective spheres by so defining the enumerated powers as to create a harmonious though dual system. system defining the enumerated powers as to create a harmonious though dual system.

In the case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 423) the Chief Justice laid down for all time this great and absolutely necessary rule of interpretation, as follows:

"Should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not intrusted to the Government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land." (Hamilton, in the Federalist, No. 33, said:

"The priority of a law in a constitutional light must always be determined by the nature of the powers upon which it is founded. Suppose, by some forced construction of its authority (which, indeed, can not be easily imagined) the Federal Legislature should attempt to vary the law of descent in any State, would it not be evident that in making such an attempt it had exceeded its jurisdiction and infringed upon that of the State? Suppose, again, that upon the pretense of an interference with its revenues it should undertake to abrogate a land tax imposed by the authority of the State, would it not be equally evident that this was an invasion of that concurrent jurisdiction in respect to these species of tax which the Constitution plainly supposes to exist in the State governments?" The fatal effect upon constitutional government of any other course was pointed out by Senator Hayne in his great debate with Webster, when he said that if Congress "may use a power granted for one surpose for the accomplishment of another and very different purpose, it is easy to show that a Constitution on parchment is worth nothing.")

The Government may contend that the later decisions of this court modify, if not altogether abrogate, this primary and vital principle of constitutional construction. The line of cases, of which Veazle v. Fenno, 8 Wall, 533, is the leading case, will probably be cited, in which the doctrine is laid down in various forms but

8 Wall., 533, is the leading case, will probably be cited, in which the doctrine is laid down in various forms but substantially to the following effect:

"The judiciary can not prescribe to the legislative departments of the Government limitations upon the exercise of its acknowledged powers. The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the courts, but to the people by whom its members are elected."

It was clearly shown in subsequent decisions that the decision in Veazle v. Fenno was amply justified in the exclusive power of the Federal Government to establish an exclusive currency, with the incidental power to "restrain by suitable enactments the circulation money the notes not issued under its own authority." The statement in that case, therefore, that "the judiciary can not prescribe the legislative department of the Government limitations upon the exercise of its acknowledged powers" was mere obiter. This decision means nothing more than that the "acknowledged," 4. e., conceded powers, can not be restricted by the judiciary to prevent some supposed injustice. If, therefore, the Constitution had given the Federal Government power to regulate journalism and provide the conditions under which a newspaper could be published, the judiciary could not limit the power because a particular method of enforcing it seemed unwise or unjust. Much less could it invalidate such method because the judiciary believed that the methods of Congress were improper and inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution. stitution.

It must also be remembered that in Veazie v. Fenne, Chief Justice Chase also said:

It must also be remembered that in Veazie v. Fenno, Chief Justice Chase also said:

"There are indeed certain virtual limitations arising from the principles of the Constitution itself. It would undoubtedly be an abuse of the power if so exercised as to impair the separate existence and independent self-government of the States or if exercised for ends inconsistent with the limited grants of power in the Constitution."

Reading these excerpts from this leading case together, it must be obvious that in considering the constitutionality of any statute we "beg the question" if we first assume the power and then simply deny the right of the judiciary to place limitations upon its exercise. In Veazie v. Fenno this court did not hold that the motive and object of Congress might not be very pertinent in determining this primary question of power. On the contrary, this court ruled that if the legislation were clearly within the Constitution the motives of Congress were beyond judicial inquiry. This court has never conceded—and I venture to predict never will concede—that Congress may use a power given only for one purpose for an entirely different and unconstitutional purpose. In this class of cases reasoning in a circle must be carefully avoided.

A later and more striking case is McCray v. United States (195 U. S., 27), in which this court, having under consideration the constitutionality of the designedly prohibitive tax upon oleomargarine, held that the judiciary could not inquire into the "motive or purpose" of Congress in adopting a statute levying an excise tax within its constitutional power.

There is no necessary inconsistency between these two lines of decisions.

The latter line of cases are generally, if not invariably, instances of decisions.

The latter line of cases are generally, if not invariably, instances of cxpress powers, like that of taxation or the regulation of commerce, and as to these this court has said that they, being what Marshall called "acknowledged powers," the judiciary cx necessitate rei can neither limit them further than they are expressly limited in the Constitution nor impeach the power by questioning the uncertain motives of Congress.

of Congress.

A very different question arises and must arise where the exercise of an implied power is under consideration. There the law finds no warrant in the letter of the Federal Constitution. The power has not been expressly granted. It is confronted with the tenth amendment, expressly reserving all undelegated powers to the States.

Indeed, implied powers are derived from the section of the Constitution which gives "power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers expressly granted to Congress or vested by the Constitution in the Government or in any of its departments or officers." While no narrow, literal, and impracticable meaning can now be given to the words "necessary and proper," yet, as Mr. Justice Story said in his great commentary on the Constitution, these words "are at once admonitory and directory," and they require that the means used in the execution of an express power "should be bona fide appropriate to the end." (Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall., 60%, 614.)

"Every valid act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage." (United States v. Harris, 106 U. S., 636.)

An alleged implied power, as in the case at bar, must justify itself, by shoring that it is "necessary and proper" and "plainy adapted to powers are mere complements of each other, and to both can be applied the words of this court in Mugler e, Kansa (123 U. S. 623): "It soem not at all follow that every statute enacted ostens by close of the police powers of the State. There are of necessity limits beyond which legislation can not rightfully go. While every possible present the property of the police powers of the State. There are of necessity limits beyond which legislation can not rightfully go. While every possible present the property of the Trust-made commodities were to be forbidden access to the channels of interstate and foreign trade. Putting together the two remedies, it must be admitted that they would be sufficiently drastic, for if a large corporation can neither sue in the Federal court, transport its freight on interstate railroad lines, import its raw material in foreign commerce, telegraph a message, mail a letter, or enjoy the usual national-banking facilities, its outlawry would be complete.)

The present case affords a striking illustration of this new gospel of subverting the Constitution by a perversion of Federal powers, at which the framers of the Constitution would have stood aghast. Following the scheme of unconstitutional dures, the law simply provides that the owners of a newspaper must file with the Postmaster General, and later publish in their newspapers, the names and addresses of the editors, owners, creditors, etc., and the amount of the circulation, and shall brand paid reading matter as an advertisement, and, conscious of its inability to enforce such requirements under any express grant of the Constitution, Congress attempts to compel the owners of newspapers to submit to these unlawful demands by penalizing them with exclusion from the mails and liability to a fine.

Is such duress within any true definition of Federal powers?

Is it a due regulation of the mails for the Federal Government to say to a citizen, "Unless you do certain things, which we have not otherwise the power to compel you to do, we will deny you the facilities of the mail"?

of the mail."?

If such a right exists, then it must be obvious that our Government is not one of effective restrictions. Congress, exercising a group of powers which are absolutely vital to the well being of every citizen, can coerce him into doing anything that Congress requires, under penalty of a denial of the ordinary privileges of a citizen.

Independent of the bill of rights there must be ex necessitate ret some restriction of the power to use the mails as a club to secure ends not within the scope of the Federal Government.

Could Congress provide that no physician should use the mails unless he has filed a statement giving his name, address, property holdings, liabilities, the number, names, and ailments of his patients and a declaration that he would only practice as an allopath? If the power over the mails be plenary and absolute, what clause in the Bill of Rights expressly forbids it?

It is not a question of the motives of Congress or the policy of the law. It is a question of power, and it is inconceivable that the framers of the Constitution, jealous as they were of the powers of the Government which they had created, would ever have given the Federal Government such power over the private affairs of the American people.

ment which they had created, would ever have given the Federal Government such power over the private affairs of the American people.

THE AUTHORITIES.

The decisions of this court, from its earliest history, leave no doubt that in a proper case the Supreme Court will not permit such nullification by indirection as results from the perversion of Federal powers to accomplish indirectly unconstitutional ends.

It can not be doubted that if Congress had passed the law now under consideration as a special statute and not as a part of a post-office appropriation bill, and had omitted any reference to the malls, this court would hold that the Constitution not only did not grant such a supervisory power over the press, but by the first amendment had expressly prohibited it.

Can it be possible that what Congress could not do directly it may nevertheless accomplish indirectly by the pretense that such supervision is necessary in order that the Post Office Department may suitably carry on its important function?

As Mr. Justice Brewer, in Fairbank v. United States (181 U. S., 283, 294), speaking of the previous decision of Woodruff v. Parham (8 Wall., 123), said:

"In other words, that decision affirms the great principle that what can not be done directly because of constitutional restriction can not be accomplished indirectly by legislation which accomplishes the same result. * * The form in which the burden is imposed can not vary the substance. * * * Constitutional provisions, whether operating by way of grant or limitation, are to be enforced according to their letter and can not be evaded by any legislation which, though not in terms trespassing upon the letter and spirit, yet in substance and effect destroys the grant or limitation, are to be enforced according to their letter and can not be evaded by any legislation which, though not in terms trespassing upon the letter and spirit, yet in substance and effect destroys the grant or limitation, are to be enforced according to their letter and can not be evaded by may be invalid if its enforcement involves a direct interference with intrastate commerce.

In the Trade-Mark cases (100 U. S., 82) Mr. Justice Miller said:

"When therefore Congress undertakes to enact a law which can only be valid as a regulation of commerce it is reasonable to expect to find on the face of the law, or from its essential nature, that it is a regulation of commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes. If not so limited, it is in excess of the power of Congress. If its main purpose be to establish a regulation applicable to all trade, to commerce at all points, especially if it be apparent that it is designed to govern the commerce wholly between citizens of the same State, it is obviously the exercise of a power not confided to Congress."

Applying the doctrine of these decisions to the case in hand, I submit that this court should hold either—

1. That the law in question is not in substance and effect a regulation of the mails but a regulation of journalism; or

2. That even if the law is to be regarded as an attempt to regulate the mails, the means employed are, to apply the test of McCulloch v. Maryland, not "within the scope of the Constitution," not "appropriate," "not plainly adapted to that end," and not consistent "with the letter and spirit of the Constitution," and not consistent "with the letter and spirit of the Constitution," and not "limited" to a fair exercise of Federal power.

I recognize that the power under the post office roads clause has been defined by this court in Public Clearing House v. Coyne (194 U. S., 497) as "the regulation of the entire postal system of the country."

But what is the postal system of the country? Is it more than the collection, carriage, and distribution of letters, documents, or other merchandise sent by one citizen to another? It can not be questioned that this power embraces the right to exclude from the mails any matter that is unlawful or immoral. In other words, the Government is not required to be an accessory in distributing immoral literature.

As stated in Public Clearing House v. Coyne (supra), such regulation includes the power to exclude from the mails any matter that would be "dangerous to its employees or injurious to other mail matter carried in the same packages." But in the opinion in that case, especially in the first clause of the syllabus, it is intimated that the power is not arbitrary, for "Concress would have no right to extend to apply the property of the syllabus, it is intimated that the power is not arbitrary.

ried in the same packages." But in the opinion in that case, especially in the first clause of the syllabus, it is intimated that the power is not arbitrary, for "Congress would have no right to extend to one the benefit of its postal service and deny it to another person in the same class and standing in the same relation to the Government."

I concede that in Exparte Jackson, 96 U. S., 727; In re Rapier, 143 U. S., 110; Horner v. United States, id., 207; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S., 497, this court has recognized a sweeping power in the Federal Government to determine what it shall and what it shall not carry in the mails. But in all these cases the law simply provided that matter that was either immoral or fraudulent should not be carried in the mails. It did not pretend to prohibit the publication or circulation in any other way of the matter deemed to be immoral or fraudulent, nor did it attempt otherwise to exercise any police power with reference thereto. It simply declined to give the immoral or fraudulent enterprise the assistance of mail facilities. Those who were engaged in the nefarious trafic could, so far as the postal law was concerned, pursue their way undisturbed, provided they did not attempt to use the mails to further their unlawful ends. All pr ful ends.

All previous laws have always observed this distinction between regulating an exercise of the Federal power such as the carriage of mails and punishing generally a given evil. Congress has excluded from the mails any newspaper which contained a lottery advertisement, but it has not legislated with reference to lotteries. The line of demarcation has always been drawn and admits of no dispute.

In the case at bar, however, the exclusion from the mails is but an incident to the law and is merely introduced into the act as a method of compelling obedience to the other provisions. It seeks to compel newspapers to disclose the secrets of their business, not only to the Post Office Department but to the public, and it requires them to notify the public when any reading matter has been inserted for a consideration.

Post times Department but to the public, and it requires them to notify the public when any reading matter has been inserted for a consideration.

Are these requirements "appropriate" to the carriage of the mails? Are they "plainly adapted" to that end? In the collection, carriage, and distribution of newspapers how can it matter to the Federal Government who the editors are, who the mortgage creditors, and what is its circulation?

In the Lottery case (188 L. S. 321) I argued for the Government

Are they "plainly adapted" to that end? In the collection, carriage, and distribution of newspepers how can it matter to the Federal Government who the editors are, who the mortgage creditors, and what is its circulation?

In the Lottery case (188 U. S., 321) I argued for the Government that the power to regulate interstate commerce was plenary and absolute, but I disclaimed any suggestion that it could be used for any purpose, however arbitrary or remote from the great purposes of the Federal Government. My opponents attempted a reductio ed absurdum by arguing that if the power were exclusive and plenary and included a right to prohibit as a regulation, then Congress could "arbitrarily exclude from commerce among the States any article, commodity, or thing of whatever kind or nature or however useful or available which it may choose, no matter with what motive, to declare shall not be carried from one State to another."

This court disclaimed any such conclusion and significantly added:

"We may, however, repeat in this connection what the court has heretofore said, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, although plenary, can not be deemed arbitrary since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as are prescribed by the Constitution. This power, therefore, may not be exercised so as to infringe rights secured or protected by that instrument. It would not be difficult to imagine legislation that would be justly liable to such an objection as that stated and be hostile to the objects for the accomplishment of which Congress was invested with the general power to regulate commerce among the several States. * * If what is done by Congress is manifestly in excess of the powers granted to it, then upon the courts will rest the duty of adjudging that its action is neither legal nor binding upon the people."

The artitude of this court, however, can not be doubted since the case of Adair v. United States (208 U. S., 161, 178, decided 1998).

Congress had attempted to regulate inters sense a regulation of interstate commerce. We need scarcely repoat what this court has more than once said, that the power to regulate what this court has more than once said, that the power to regulate interstate commerce, great and permannel, that the power to regulate interstate commerce, great and permannel, that the power to regulate interstate commerce, great and permannel, that the power to regulate interstate commerce, great and permannel, the secured by other provisions of the Constitution. (Gibbons e. Ogden, 9 Wheat, 1, 196; Lottery case, 188 U. S., 231, 253.) It results, on the whole case, that the provisions of the statuic under which the defendant was convicted must be how the status of the sta

The Constitution not only failed to give such power but it expressly forbade it by the first amendment, prohibiting any enactment "abridging the freedom of the press."

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that in the absence of the first amendment such a censorship of the press would be an implied power incident to the regulation of the mails, yet such power was expressly withheld by the first amendment, which forbade any law "abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

All provisions of the Constitution must be read together, and thus read together the Constitution virtually provides that Congress shall have the power "to establish post offices and post roads," and for this power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper:"

Provided, however, That it shall make no law "abridging the freedom of the press."

Provided, however, That it shall make no law "abridging the Irecom of the press."

What is the freedom of the press? To determine this question we must resort to the history of the times when the Constitution was framed, for the expressions used in the 10 amendments must be given the meaning attached to them at the time the Constitution was adopted. (Boyd v United States, 116 U. S., 616.)

Thus interpreted, it can not be questioned that the liberty of the press means the liberty of free discussion in print, without any restraint save that which was imposed by the law of libel and by certain axiomatic principles of morality, such as the prohibition either of fraud or obscentiv.

axiomatic principles of morality, such as the prohibition either of traud or obscenity.

With these exceptions, the liberty of the press was the right to print one's opinions whether they were wise or foolish, whether they were consistent with or contravened accepted ideas or ideals, and to do this without any restraint by the Government save that which was clearly and necessarily demanded to prevent either immorality or fraud.

The necessity of this freedom need not be enlarged upon. Our Government rests upon public opinion, and its perpetuity must depend upon the education of that opinion.

It is therefore the policy of our Constitution that no burden shall be imposed upon the press, no restriction upon its rights, no impairment of its influence, excepting only in matters of axiomatic morality and a control of the press has taken two forms, and the struggle over each has marked a different stage in the long battle for the freedom of the press. He can shall be a struggle over each has marked a different stage in the long battle for the freedom of the press. He can shall be a struggle over each has marked a different stage in the long battle for the freedom of the press. He can shall be a struggle of the press was a part of the royal prerogative, and it at first attempted to problich and its essence was a previous restraint of printed thought and not its subsequent punishment. was unlawful. (In the debate that followed, Henry Clay said: "When I saw that the exercise of a most extraordinary and dangerous power had been announced by the head of the Post Office and that it had been sustained by the President's message, I turned my attention to the subject and inquired whether it was necessary that the Postmaster General should under any circumstances exercise such a power and whether they possessed it. After much reflection I have come to the conclusion that they could not pass any law interfering with the subject in any shape or form whatever. The evil complained of was the circulation of papers having a certain tendency. These papers, unless circulated and while in the post office, could do no harm. It is the circulation solely—the taking out of the mall and the use to be made of them—that constitutes the evil. Then it is perfectly competent for the State authorities to apply the remedy." To the question of Senator Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, as to whether the post-office power had not given to Congress the right to determine what should be carried in the mails. Clay replied in the negative, adding: "If such a doctrine prevailed, the Government may designate the persons or parties or classes who shall have the benefit of the malls, excluding all others." Senator Davis said: "It would be claiming on the part of the Government a monopoly and exclusive right either to send such papers as it pleased or to deny the privilege of sending them through the mail. Once establish the precedent, and where will it lead to? The Government may take it into its head to prohibit the transmission of political, religious, or cremoral philosophical publications, in which it might fancy there was something offensive, and under this reserved right, contended for in this report, it would be the duty of the Government to carry it into effect." He also denied "the right of the Government to exercise a power indirectly which it could not exercise directly, and if there was no direct power in the Constitution, he law.

Without amplifying all of the destructive possibilities of the law, it will suffice to discuss three which are apparent on its face—

1. The law provides that a newspaper must disclose its circulation not only to the Government but to the public. Such disclosures would in many instances go far to destroy the influence of the paper in the minds of the masses, and that without justice or reason. A newspaper having a circulation of 30,000 may have more real influence than a newspaper having a circulation of 30,000. The first newspaper may find its readers among the educated, thoughtful, and influential class, whose views profoundly affect their fellow men. The other newspaper may be read largely for its sporting page or its divorce reports. At present the influence of both papers is measured largely by the comparative character of their editorial utterances, but if it were published to the world that one reached but 30,000 readers and the other 300,000, the influence of the first paper would be substantially impaired. paired.

Such impairment might result in destruction, for it is well known that a newspaper pays its way by advertisements and not by the copies which it sells. The latter, apart from advertisements, are sold at a loss, and anything that destroys the advertising business strikes the newspaper a fatal wound. It is safe to say that there is not a newspaper in the United States that could be continued at a profit, if its advertisements are withdrawn. Manifestly a disclosure of circulation to the public would lessen the business of the paper of small circulation and increase that of the paper with a large circulation, and this notwithstanding the fact that the paper of 30,000 readers might be a far more valuable advertising medium than the one with 300,000.

A great objection to this legislation is therefore that it weakens and tends to destroy the class of papers which most needs freedom from undue interference. The disclosure to the public of the intimate details of business management would in many cases tend to drive the weak newspaper to the wall, for, armed with this knowledge, the strong and wealthy newspaper could readily impair the influence of its weaker rival, secure its business, and drive it to the wall. There is possibly in no industry keener competition than exists between newspapers, and therefore in none is there greater need on the part of the weaker competitors of privacy as to their business details.

There may be no absolute right of privacy, and yet the owner of a business is entitled to safeguard the secrets of his business unless there is some reasonable and just occasion for a compulsory disclosure to the public of his private affairs.

As was said by Mr. Justice Field in In re Pacific Railway Commission public of his private affairs.

As was said by Mr. Justice Field in In re Pacific Railway Commission (32 Fed. Rep., 241, 250):

"Of all the rights of the citizen few are of greater importance or more essential to his peace and happiness than the right of personal security, and that involves not merely protection of his person from assault but exemption of his private affairs, books, and papers from the inspection and scrutiny of others. Without the enjoyment of this right, all others vould lose half their value."

This right of privacy and the sanctity of one's books and papers were never better emphasized than in the case of Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 618), where Mr. Justice Bradley, in one of the ablest defenses of personal liberty to which this court ever gave utterance, defended the right of privacy against oppressive Federal regulations, even though they were enacted in execution of the most drastic of all governmental powers—the power of taxation,

There was far more justification, from the standpoint of the public interests, for the legislation which this court condemned in that case than can be urged in behalf of the newspaper statute, whose obvious effect would be to impair the credit of the weaker newspapers, alarm their creditors and advertisers, impair their just influence with their renders, without in any manner assisting the Government in the effective and economical carriage of the mails.

I describe and economical carriage of the mails.

I freely recognize the prejudice which to-day ordinarily and generally justiy prevails against anonymity. But even anonymous arguments have played a useful part in past struggles for liberty and progress. To this day we do not know who wrote the letters of "Junius," and yet struggle for English freedom.

When the Constitution was submitted to the people for adoption, the most valuable arguments in its support were those submitted anonymously by Madison, Hamilton, Jay, Sullivan, Winthrop, Gerry, Elisworth, Roger Sherman, Pinchney, and many others. These were published under such som de planne as Publins, Cassius, Agrippa, Cato. It is altogether probable that the Federal Constitution would never have been adopted by a sufficient number of States had it not been for "Publins," which we now know as the Federalist Papers. While Hamilton's industry was more familiar to the framers of the Constitution than this method of impersonal pamphleteering.

When the burning issue of neutrality arose in the administration of Washington, Hamilton assalled the Secretary of State in pamphlets written outer the some deplayed with the public press.

The matter referred to may have no reference to merchandise or to anything commercial. In no sense can its insertion be regarded as a commercial advertisement. The opinions which he expresses are reading matter. If marked as an advertisement the influence is largely impaired.

Take, for example, the campaign committee of a political party. It wishes to get before the people of the country certain facts with reference to operations of the tariff. If inserted in the newspaper as an advertisement few will read it, and those few will not give to the paid advertisement the serious attention which the article may deserve. The newspaper publishes it as reading matter and requires the committee to pay the reasonable cost of the service. Does not the requirement that it be printed as an advertisement, with the destructive effect upon its influence as reading matter which such a hranding necessarily entails, involve an abridgment of the freedom of the press? Is that freedom as complete and unimpaired after such a law is passed as before?

III.

The requirement that a certain class of newspapers shall disclose the most intimate details of their business and use their own capital, labor facilities, and valuable space for such disclosure, is a taking of "liberty" and "property" without due process of law and a like taking of valuable property rights for an assumed public use without just compensation.

The post office power must also be regarded as subject to the fifth amendment.

I do not contend that the more compulsors disclosured in the contend that the more compulsors disclosured to the fifth amendment.

amendment.

I do not contend that the mere compulsory disclosure of ownership, editorial management, and other business details to the Postmaster General is a taking of property without due process of law.

The act goes further. It compels the newspaper proprietor twice a year to use the valuable space of his paper and his capital and labor facilities to print the statement. To set up the matter, print it, and distribute it all require expenditure of capital. It is an enforced appropriation of valuable space for the assumed benefit of the public. It is as much a taking of property as if it compelled the owner to hire a hall and announce the facts to the public.

Even though this compulsory appropriation of the citizen's property and labor were not strictly a physical taking of his property, nevertheless it is a "taking" within the meaning of the Constitution. It was well said by the Court of Appeals of New York, in Forster v. Sectt (136 N. Y., 584):

well said by the Court of Appeals of New York, in Forster v. Scott (136 N. Y., 584):

"Whenever a law deprives the owner of the beneficial use and free enjoyment of his property, or imposes restraints upon such use and enjoyment of his property, or imposes restraints upon such use and enjoyment that materially affect its value, without legal process or compensation, it deprives him of his property within the meaning of the Constitution. All that is beneficial in property arises from its use and the truits of that use, and whatever deprives a person of them deprives him of all that is desirable or valuable in the title and possession. It is not necessary, in order to render a statute obnoxious to the restraints of the Constitution, that it must in terms or in effect authorize an actual physical taking of the property or the thing itself, so long as it affects its free use and enjoyment or the power of disposition at the will of the sweer."

This interpretation of the Constitution only followed the undoubted doctrine of this court, for this court said, in Lawton v. Steele (152 U. S. 137):

"The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public

This interpretation of the Constitution only followed the undoubted doctrine of this court, for this court said, in Lawton v. Steele (152 U. S., 137):

"The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts. Thus an act requiring the master of a vessel arriving from a foreign port to raport the name, birthplace, and occupation of every passenger, and the owner of such vessel to give a bond for every passenger so reported, conditioned to indemnify the State against any expense for the support of the persons named for four years thereafter, was held by this court to be indefensible as an exercise of the police power and to be void as interfering with the right of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations. (Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S., 259.)"

As was said by Mr. Justice Field in Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S., 141):

"All that is beneficial in property arises from its use and the fruits of that use, and whatever deprives a person of them deprives him of all that is desirable or valuable in the title or possession. If the constitutional guaranty extends no further than to prevent a deprivation of title and possession and allows a deprivation of use and the fruits of that use, it does not merit the encomiums it has received."

This contention is strengthened when it is remembered that no other citizen desiring the use of the malls is subjected to any such requirement. Scientific, religions, and temperance publications are relieved of any such expense, and as to circulation, all but daily newspapers are similarly exempted. The law therefore puts upon dally newspapers are similarly exempted. The law therefore puts upon dally newspapers are similarly exempted. The law therefore puts upon dally newspapers are simil tection of the laws, and that phrase is synonymous with due places law.

To amplify this argument would require a restatement of all that has been herein said as to the unreasonable character of this regulation. It is enough to say that not only does the act seek to appropriate the space of newspapers without compensation for an assumed public use, but it interferes with the liberty of contract, la that a newspaper owner may not contract with one desiring to use his columns for the insertion of reading matter, except under burdensome conditions.

The law as a whole singles out the owners of newspapers and attempts to aim at them an oppressive postal regulation, which clearly offends the intimation given by this court in Public Clearing House v. Coyne (supra), that—

"Congress would have no right to extend to one the benefit of its postal service and deny it to another person in the same class and standing in the same relation to the Government."

I need not emphasize the importance of this case. As already stated, the form of censorship now sought to be imposed upon the press of the country may seem mild by comparison with that of other countries in former times. The concession to Congress of the power to utilize the mails for the purpose of disciplining the free press of the country would mean hereafter a stricter and more dangerous censorship, for in the matter of arbitrary power "the appetite grows by what it feeds on."

The warning words of Mr. Justice Bradley in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 616) should never be forgotten:

"Hlegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. This can only be obviated by adhering to the rule that constitution: I provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed. * * It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obstaprincipils."

Respectfully submitted.

APPENDIX.

THE NEWSPAPER LAW.

An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post Office Department, in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, as follows:

Sec. 2. * * * That it shall be the duty of the editor, publisher, business manager, or owner of every newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication to file with the Postmaster General and the postmaster at the office at which said publication is entered, not later than the 1st day of April and the 1st day of October of each year, on blanks furnished by the Post Office Department, a sworm statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editor and managing editor, publisher, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation; and also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders; and also, in the case of daily newspapers, there shall be included in such statement the average of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold or distributed to paid subscribers during the preceding six months: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, and scientific, or other similar publications: Provided further, That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities. A copy of such sworn statement shall be published in the second issue of such newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed next after the filing of such statement. Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail if it shall fail to comply with the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such fallure.

That all editorial or other reading matter published in any such newspaper, magazine, or periodical, for the publication of which money or other valuable consideration is paid, accepted, or promised, shall be plainly marked "advertisement." Any editor or publisher printing editorial or other reading matter for which compensation is paid, accepted, or promised, without so marking the same, shall upon conviction in any court having jurisdiction be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500.

PROTECTING THE COAST LINE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, at New London, Conn., in September last, the Fifth Annual Convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, which stands for a continuous inland waterway along the Atlantic coast, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

ATLANTIC INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY.

"We, the members and delegates of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, representing all the States of the Atlantic coast region, from Maine to Florida, inclusive, in fifth annual convention assembled in New London, Conn., do hereby reaffirm to the American people, to the States and municipalities within our territory, and especially to the Congress of the United States, our recognition of the need and our demand for the completion of improved connecting protected waterways, owned and operated by the Nation, along the entire Atlantic coast.

"Within the Atlantic coastal region, comprising all the original American colonies, are now located more than one-third of the total population of the United States, and an even greater proportion of its commerce, industry, and wealth,

POPULATION AND COMMERCE.

"Within these coastal States are situated the most densely populated industrial communities of the country and the most rapidly increasing centers of population. Congestion of population, industry, and commerce require as their first remedy larger, better, and cheaper facilities of transportation. It is now time that such shall be provided within the Atlantic coastal

"The existing lines of railways, splendid as their equipment unquestionably is, and rapidly as it is being expanded, are now, and have been for years past, unable during certain periods to handle the amount of traffic offering with assurance of quick transit, safe delivery, and minimum cost.

Under these conditions it becomes imperative to seek additional means of transportation, and these are provided by our coastal bays and sounds if connected through the short spaces of intervening lowlands by modern sea-level canals, freely operated as public highways.

THE SACRIFICE TO THE SEA.

"It has been suggested that the ocean is sufficient for the coastal traffic. In reply, it may be stated that our Atlantic seaboard is a lee shore; that it is lined with dangerous shoals; that these shoals are blackened with the wrecks of thousands of ships and bear the bodies of many thousands of American mariners; that the average annual loss is more than 200 human lives and $4,000,000 in property; that this loss in two decades equals the cost of our proposed waterway chain; that, meantime, coastwise shipping is disappearing from the seas, coastwise insurance steadily rising, and coastwise commerce declin-The ocean does not provide the needed facilities of cheap coastwise transportation.

RESOLUTIONS SHOWING PROGRESS MADE.

"With this statement of facts it is hereby

"1. Resolved, That we congratulate the Atlantic States upon the favorable report and survey of the Army Engineers now reported to Congress at the insistence of this association, proving the feasibility of its project.

"2. Resolved, That we demand the adoption and construction of the Atlantic intracoastal waterway as a national project, and the continuous appropriation by Congress of funds sufficient for its early completion.

"3. Resolved, That we commend the initial step taken by Congress in the river and harbor act passed at the recent session, which contained a provision adopting that link in the proposed intracoastal waterway extending from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., and carrying an appropriation immedi-ately available of $500,000 for the purchase of the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal, and an additional $100,000 for the improvement and maintenance.

NEXT STEPS TO BE UNDERTAKEN.

"4. Resolved, That we demand of Congress at its next session an act acquiring the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, one of the most essential links in the whole intracoastal chain, one of the most feasible to improve for modern requirements, and the next in logical order of progress northward, all of which is fully shown by the recent report of the United States Army Engineers. And, in event of failure to negotiate a satisfactory contract for the purchase of the canal, we favor the immediate condemnation thereof by the Government or the construction of a canal over an alternative route.

"5. Resolved, That we demand of the next Congress the adoption of the New Jersey sea-level canal project, thus connecting southern waters with those of New England and New York.

"6. Resolved, That we urge steady progress northward and southward at every session of Congress until the entire route shall be opened to traffic.

THE HEDSON AND HELL CATE.

"7. Resolved, That to provide safe passage through the Hudson River for vessels from the Lakes, through the Erie Canal, and to establish a feasible connection with the Intracoastal Waterway, we advocate early completion of the improvement of the upper Hudson as the approach to the Erie Canal, and also of the East River and lower Hudson and Harlem Rivers and the opening of Bronx Kills and Little Hell Gate.

"S. Resolved, That we advocate the authorization by Congress of a survey for the extension of the Intracoastal Water-way northwardly from Boston to such point on the coast of Maine as may be deemed desirable and feasible.

NATIONAL WATERWAYS POLICY NEEDED.

"9. Resolved, That we demand the adoption of a national policy of waterway improvement which shall gauge the amount of the appropriation according to the commerce, existing and prospective, that will be served by such improvement.

"10. Resolved, That the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway, exceeding as it does in its commercial importance all other projects of waterway improvement, deserves and should receive the means for its completion in a ratio at least equal to that accorded to projects in other sections of the United States.

PROBLEM OF WATER TERMINALS

"Resolved, That we emphatically approve those provisions in the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, which forbid ownership or control by railroad corporations of competing water carriers, and which provide for joint rates and through bills of lading and a system of prorating between railroads and water carriers, and which forbids railroads to discriminate in favor of and extend special privileges to favored shipping lines at ports, and which confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to enforce these and other wise provisions of law.

"To the end that the above provisions may be given full effect, and that water commerce may be established as an integral part of our system of transportation, we earnestly urge upon all States and municipalities located upon the intracoastal waterway and other waterways that ample water frontage be acquired and adequate public terminals constructed, owned, and controlled by and for the benefit of the public."

MORE ABOUT THE CHESAPEAKE AND DELAWARE,

In view of their brevity and clearness, Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity of submitting those resolutions to the House. They will now be laid before the Rivers and Harbors Committee with the hope and expectation that the recommendation of the association for immediate recognition of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal project will be granted in the next appropriation bill. For five years the Atlantic Association has been laying stress upon the advisability of action in the opening up of this much-needed avenue of communication between the North and the South, and there is now ample reason why the Government engineers should be authorized to open negotiations for the purchase of the existing canal or to construct a new one. At some later period of the session I shall undertake to advise the House more fully of the manner in which commerce between points north and south of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal is discouraged by high transportation rates and inadequate facilities. I shall also hope to enlighten the House as to the loss of life and the destruction of property along the seaboard.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY,

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911. The House resolves itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] will take the chair, Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. RUCKER of Colorado in the chair.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911. By unanimous consent the debate was limited to two hours, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Watkins] to control one hour and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to control the other hour.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois consume part of his time? We have four gentlemen on this side who want to be heard on the question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is the bill to amend section 162 of the judiciary title act, which was passed two years ago. In that act there was inserted in the House a provision conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction relating to money in the Treasury under the captured and abandoned property act.

When that bill was before the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] offered as an amendment to the bill to insert section 6, now section 162 of the act. That amendment was agreed to in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon] had charge of that bill, which was a bill reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. It was a long bill, codifying the statutes. It was on my advice, I believe, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon] finally at the time agreed not to oppose the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Now, this proposition is one to amend the law so as not to provide that there shall be proof of loyalty of the claimants. The original proposition was of somewhat doubtful propriety. For many years there has been no right to file a claim in the Court of Claims under the captured and abandoned property act, but it was thought desirable by the House at the time, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bart-LETT], to provide that claims might be filed which, under the language proposed by him, would require the claimants to make proof of loyalty.

There has been considerable discussion as to how these claims arise, and it may be proper to call to the attention of the House the circumstances as to how the claims do arise. By the act of March 12, 1863, known as the captured and abandoned property act, and acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treas mry was authorized to appoint special agents to collect captured and abandoned property in the States then in insurrection, the proceeds thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The act provided that the property to be collected under it "shall not include any kind or description which has been used, or which has been intended to be used, for waging or carrying on war against the Unted States, such as arms, ordnance, ships, steamboats, or other water craft, and the furniture, forage, military supplies, or munitions of war.

As a matter of fact, the property which was collected was in the main, if not entirely, cotton. Nine districts were established under this law and an agent appointed in each district.

A large amount of property in the States in insurrection was seized and the proceeds, amounting to over $30,000,000, reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. The money was treated as a trust fund under the control of the Secretary. Under joint resolution approved March 30, 1868, it was provided that all moneys derived from the sale of captured and abandoned property "which have not already been actually covered into the Treasury shall immediately be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

As I understand it, the balance covered into the Treasury under this resolution was nearly $21,000,000.

The third section of the original act of 1863 provided as

Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of such property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof.

Under this provision of the statute a large number of claims were referred to the Court of Claims and judgments recovered. In a statement which has been made by one of the committees of the House it was stated that the following was believed to be a substantially correct statement of the payments which have been made from the amounts covered into the Treasury under the resolution of March 30, 1868:

On judgments under act of Mar. 12, 1863	89, 852, 956, 95
On judgments against Treasury agents	65, 276, 79
Disbursed for expenses under joint resolution of Mar.	242, 140, 34
Paid on special acts of relief Paid by Secretary of Treasury under act of May 18,	451, 125, 38
1872	195, 896, 21
On judgment Court of Claims, Duffy, Report C. C., 24275	15, 270, 00
Under private act, 25 Stat., p. 1310 Under private act to Briggs, paid Mar. 24, 1894	32, 669, 20 88, 104, 21

Which would leave in the Treasury undisposed of $10,028,- 351.88.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN. I will in a moment. How much of that amount would be affected by the pending resolution I do not believe any one actually knows. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WATKINS. That statement covers the point I wanted to ask the gentleman about, whether the amount covered by this bill would be over half that amount, and whether the statement referred to by the gentleman does not include all that was covered into the Treasury?

Mr. MANN. My statement shows that that amount included all that was covered into the Treasury. Just how much this resolution will cover no one will ever be able to find out unless this bill becomes a law and the Court of Claims finds the amount.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill would only provide for the payment of claims for property taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, while the amount in the Treasury is included from the date of the captured and abandoned property act, which was passed in 1863

This is one of a series of propositions, however. This bill proposes simply to abandon the present law requiring proof of loyalty as to the claims subsequent to June 1, 1865. As to the claims subsequent to the date June 1, 1865, there is another bill on the calendar reported from another committee, a bill (H. R. 16820) which goes a little further than the pending bill. I do not know whether it is intended to offer the provisions of that bill in the House as a substitute for the provisions of the pending bill. I was told that that was likely to be done, but the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on War Claims, which reported the bill 16820, stated on the floor the other day, as I understood him, that if the pending bill was passed the bill reported from his committee would be abandoned.

Among the provisions of the bill reported from the Committee on War Claims, a new proposition, is the one that all judgments rendered on these claims and all payments thereon shall be free from claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency of the original owner of said claim.

There are other bills pending before Congress on the subject, one introduced by the gentleman representing the Tombigbee district, Mr. CANDLER, which introduces a new proposition. stated by the gentleman from Ohio the other day, the Confederate States purchased large quantities of this cotton, paid for the cotton in the current coin of the realm at that time in the Southern States, but did not take control of the cotton because they did not have the storage facilities, as was stated. There is no question, probably, in reference to the passage of the title of the property. The property was purchased and paid for, but possession remained in the hands of the seller of the property. The Candler bill provides, in addition to dispensing with the proof of loyalty, further, that judgment rendered hereunder shall not be denied by reason of any bill or other conveyance of such property to the Federal Government, in consideration of securities of said Government, unless accompanied and followed by actual delivery of such property.

There are also pending before the House a number of resolutions asking for information from the Treasury Department. There can be no doubt that when the Bartlett amendment to the judiciary title bill became a law that the claim agents got very busy and active. It is invariably the rule that when you excite the claim agents or claim attorneys to the possibility of obtaining the payment of claims in which they become interested, and draw the line arbitrarily at any particular point, the claim agents want to move the line over a little further from time to time so as to provide for the payment of additional claims. The claim agents found under the Bartlett proposition that it was necessary to make proof of loyalty before claims could be allowed. They desired in addition to change the law upon that subject, to obtain all the information of the Treasury Department in reference to the evidence in the possession of that de-

House resolution No. 333, which is only one of a series of resolutions introduced into the House, and a similar series introduced in the Senate, provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare from records in his possession, either those of the United States Government or those of the late Confederate States, and to transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as soon as practicable, a list of persons shown to have sold cotton to the Confederate States Government, or to have entered into any agreement to sell cotton to said Government; such list to indicate whether there is shown to have been a completed sale, or only an agreement to sell, and the date of the transaction; to show, when possible, the residence of the person making such sale, or agreement to sell, by county or parish, and State; the amount of cotton covered by such sale or agreement, the price to be paid, and whether or not the payment of the agreed price is shown by such records.

I do not know that these resolutions were prepared by claim agents. I am quite sure they were not introduced by Members of the House at the request of claim agents, but that they were prepared by claim agents and transmitted to claimants, who transmitted them to Members of the House, is quite likely.

I called the attention of the Treasury Department to this series of resolutions endeavoring to obtain information from the Treasury purely for the benefit of claimants and claim agents, and asked them to make investigation of the subject. On January 6 the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to the Speaker of the House a letter upon this subject, in which he stated among other things:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, January 6, 1912.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Washington, January 6, 1912.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sir: My attention has been called to House resolution 333, introduced by Mr. Jacoway December 9, 1911, and referred to the Committee on War Claims, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare from records in his possession, either those of the United States Government or those of the late Confederate States, a list of persons shown to have sold cotton to the Confederate States Government, or to have entered into any agreement to sell cotton to said Government, and also to House resolution 349, introduced by Mr. Candler December 19, 1911, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, which calls for the preparation and transmission of all the information specified in House resolution 333, and in addition requires information whether the cotton sold to the Confederate Government was subsequently taken possession of by officers of the United States Government; and if so, the disposition of the cotton, the gross and net proceeds realized from any sales thereof, and whether or not the proceeds now remain in the United States Treasury, and also to show the cotton for which claims have been filed in the Treasury Department, and the names of persons by whom such claims were filed.

The resolutions have a direct bearing upon the cotton claims which, under section 162 of the judicial code approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1139-1140), were referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication, and as this department is now actively employed in the work of collecting and arranging information for the use of the court in the trial of pending cases, it would seem that neither the interests of the claims for of the Government would be subserved by diverting the limited available force of the department from the completion of the information desired by the court, to engage in the preparation of the claims for such cotton heretofore filed, would necessitate a further and separate examination of all Civil War records of the

The Secretary of the Treasury goes on to say that it would be a very expensive proposition for the Government to do this. It would require a vast amount of clerical work to ascertain this information, much of which it is assumed by gentlemen who have argued in favor of this bill they already know, and besides that it would furnish to the claimants all the defensive evidence which the Government may possess.

So it is perfectly apparent that having, under the original act of 1863 and the resolution of 1868, covered into the Treasury a certain amount of money, which was then placed by the Secretary of the Treasury as being held in trust by the Government, the men who now are active in extracting money from the Treasury upon every possible excuse are very busily engaged in endeavoring to obtain legislation which will open the doors of the Treasury as to all of this sum of money. It is said by some that the present bill would not cover more than $5,000,000.

It is said by gentlemen in charge of the bill that it would not cover over $1,000,000. I venture to say from the information which I have received that no one knows how much it will cover, though it is quite certain that it would not be over $1,000,000. That is the amount that is in the Treasury. The original act That is the amount that is in the Treasury. The original act providing for the collection and disposition of this property con-tained a provision that the claimant for the fund in each case must show that he has never given any aid or comfort to the "present rebellion."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? I want information, Mr. MANN. Certainly.

I have obtained the idea or opinion from Mr. COX of Indiana. statements made on the floor here that the amount of money that is now actually in the Treasury does not exceed $5,000,000. What information has the gentleman on that proposition?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] presented a report from the Secretary of the Treasury covering certain phases of this proposition, which indicated that there were

$5,000,000 in the Treasury

Mr. COX of Indiana. Right in that connection, if the gentleman will further yield, are all of the claims adjudicated so far as the money now in the Treasury Department is concerned, or if this amendment be adopted by the House will it open up another series of claims to go before the Court of Claims?

Mr. MANN. The original money in the Treasury was turned in by the special agents of the Government in the various districts where the property was seized and sold and the money collected. These claims have been in the main, I think, presented to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims, as to a large portion of them at least, decided they could not be paid because the claimant had given aid or comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then the only real question in controversy that will be considered in the future, in the event this amendment finally carries, will be to get possession of the money that is now actually in the Treasury Department. Is that correct?

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct, that there could not be any claim for more than that money, because there could be no possible claim, I think, for property seized and sold where the money was not in fact covered into the Treasury, although we have some claims on the Private Calendar-and whether they will ever get any further I do not know-insisting on the payment of claims upon the ground that property was not properly conserved and sold.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman answered a moment ago that the gentleman from Ohio made the statement the other day to the effect that this may reach about $10,000,000.

Mr. MANN. No, the gentleman from Ohio said it would be about $5,000,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman from Illinois investigated that with a view to determining whether it is accurate or not? I ask for information because I know the gentleman investigates these questions.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that is accurate, so far as this bill is concerned. Probably the amount would not exceed $5,000,000. The amount that is in the Treasury is in the neighborhood of $10,000,000, I am informed.

Where does the extra $5,000,000 Mr. COX of Indiana.

come in?

Mr. MANN. I do not have sufficient information to differentiate between the two. Whether the $5,000,000 is supposed to cover everything in the Treasury I do not undertake to say. The gentleman from Ohio presented the other day a statement from the Treasury Department upon that subject. On the other hand, I have presented another statement made by the Treasury Department saying that the amount in the Treasury $10,000,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I just came in on the floor and did not hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. Just what the differentiation is I am not able

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Has the gentleman examined Senate Document No. 3, second session, Forty-third Congress?

Mr. MANN. I have.

Mr. WATKINS. Will not that show actually all those claims which are in the Treasury on which property was seized after June 1, 1865?

Mr. MANN. I think that is a disputed proposition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WATKINS. If that does show that, then can not we tell exactly the number of dollars in the Treasury after June 1,

Mr. MANN. Well, the Treasury proposition upon that is not final. Just how much money there is for property seized after a certain date is not ascertainable until the Court of Claims has passed upon the proposition.

Mr. WATKINS. But the question is this: Does not that report show that amount was paid into the Treasury on the property which was taken after June, 1865?

Mr. MANN. I think likely that is true, but that is not binding upon the Court of Claims or upon the claimants.

Mr. WATKINS. Under this bill can the Court of Claims order paid out any money except that?

Mr. MANN. I have stated half a dozen times, and I do not think it is necessary to repeat, although I will, that this bill only refers to property which was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, but a statement from the Treasury Department as to when the property was taken, if they have made such a statement, is at the best a guess and is not binding, because the law, if this becomes the law, gives the claimant the right to make proof as to when that property was taken. My opinion is a very large amount of this property was in fact seized after that date. However that may be, the original act provided that no claim should be paid without proof of loyalty.

It was afterwards held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the pardon and amnesty act of President Johnson in effect removed the disability in reference to giving aid or comfort to the rebellion. That was purely a technical ruling by the Supreme Court, was not in conformity with the spirit of the original act, and so far as they were technically entitled to the benefit of the ruling they have obtained it already. It is now proposed to have Congress itself by act provide that the proof of loyalty should not be required in these cases, although the act under which this property was seized and sold provided that every claimant obtaining the money must prove that he has never given any aid or comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Was not that decision on the substance of the act and not a mere technicality as to practice, or something of How does the gentleman hold it was a technicality if he holds that a certain act does not apply to it or a certain provision does not apply?

Mr. MANN. I hold decidedly that it is quite a technicality when Congress provides that no person shall be given his claim unless he proves loyalty or unless he proves that he has not given air or comfort to the rebellion when the Supreme Court says that a subsequent proclamation of amnesty removes the necessity of making that proof.

Mr. SIMS. Is the proclamation to be treated as a mere technicality and not substantive law?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. You got the benefit so far as it was provided by law that is passed. The claimants have already seized the advantage of that as far as they could under the original act. Although President Johnson issued his proclamation of amnesty and the court held that if the claimants filed under that act they were not required to give proof of loyalty, you now want to change that law and apply it to those who were not covered by the Supreme Court opinion. They accepted the Supreme Court opinion in these cases to which it would apply or to which it would be applied, but the purpose of the original act was that those who were engaged in rebellion should not be paid their claims, and there is no differentiation in principle between paying these claims and paying all other claims in the Southern States. I do not undertake to argue one way or the other on the question as to whether for all of these various claimants loyalty should be required. because outside of this special class of cases neither the gentleman from Tennessee nor anybody else on that side of the House dares say he is in favor of paying all claims from the South without proof of loyalty.

Mr. SIMS. But the original act provided for claims arising while war was in actual existence. After the 1st of June, 1865, there was no war, and therefore the question of loyalty should cut no figure as to claims arising after that date.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman takes the opinion of the Supreme Court on one phase, but refuses to take it on the other. The Supreme Court said that the rebellion was not over at this time.

Mr. SIMS. That is a technical question, sure enough.

Mr. MANN. Both technical. There is no reason why the case now should open up the door to the payment of all the southern claims of those who were disloyal to the Union.

Mr. SIMS. Arising after the war; not during the war. Mr. MANN. I do not propose to fight over the war. I do not propose to fight over the war. be very glad if it all could be returned to them. The South went into rebellion, or war, whatever you please to call it, and in the main are willing to abide by the consequences of the war. One of those consequences is that property taken and destroyed is not to be repaid by the country which succeeds to the country which is defeated, or to those who aided the country which was defeated. You propose to reverse that rule, which is practically universal throughout the world, on what you please to call a technicality on the one side, but which I call a technicality on the other side. It was never the intention of Congress to provide that these claims should be paid to those who were disloyal to the Union. The original act expressly provides for it. | gentleman from Texas [Mr. Young].

You wish to remove that provision, and when you remove it in this case you will find that you will be called upon to remove it in all other cases. Whether you will do so or not no one can There are millions and millions of claims which have been presented to the Court of Claims, and millions upon millions of claims which were not presented to the Court of Claims, the allowance of which depends upon the proof of loyalty. You propose in the interest of some claimants to remove the necessity of that proof and open the door so that you will be called upon to remove it in all other cases. I do not believe that the Government of the United States is under any obligation to pay money for property seized during the war to those who were in rebellion against the Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does the gentleman think of the proposition, if he will pardon me, as to the duty of the Government to pay actual bona fide claims arising after the war actually ceased?

Mr. MANN. There is no controversy about that.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I understand that is the controversy here. However, I may be wrong about it.

Mr. SIMS. There is a difference as to when it ceased. We contend it ceased at the time this bill applies, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] claims it did not cease until August, 1866. May I ask the gentleman, inasmuch as he is so kind to permit interruptions-

Mr. MANN. I am always willing to yield.

Mr. SIMS (continuing). After Gen. Lee had accepted the terms of surrender, which was in April, 1865, suppose in June, 1865, private property had been taken from him—that is, prior to August 20, 1866-does the gentleman hold that we ought to require proof of loyalty as to Gen. Lee for years prior to the time of taking that property, in order to pay him for the property taken from him after his surrender and after he had done all that a loyal man could do?

Mr. MANN. I hold distinctly that where the Government seized the property under the provisions of this act of 1863, it was a war measure. They seized the property and converted it and sold it, and took the money under the provisions. claimant must prove loyalty before he should obtain it, and that should remain the law. This was still a war measure, as the gentleman perfectly well knows.

Mr. SIMS. Although taken after the war had, in fact,

Mr. MANN. The Confederate Government was still buying this property.

Mr. SIMS. In 1865? Mr. MANN. After June 1, 1865. Mr. SIMS. The Confederate Government was buying this property after June 1, 1866?

Mr. MANN. It was. Part of its property was bought by the Confederate Government after 1865.

Mr. SIMS. And also June 1, 1865? Mr. MANN. June 1, 1865.

Mr. MANN. June 1, 1865. Mr. NELSON. Is this the first time the bill has been up in Congress, or have other attempts been made to get this money by removing the bar of loyalty?

Mr. MANN. There have been many attempts made to get money by removing the bar of loyalty or various other ways. But when the House years ago put this provision in the bill it was the distinct understanding of those who understood the matter that it still required proof of loyalty before these claims were to be allowed.

Having obtained that much, professing at the time to be perfectly satisfied with that provision, as soon as the claim agents find that many of the claimants are unable to make proof of loyalty they seek to have that proof no longer required, while at the same time other gentlemen in the House are urging that other defenses of the Government be waived and set aside.

You can not differentiate between these various classes of cases, so far as principle is concerned, and if the Government sets aside the principle of loyalty, it can only be upon the basis that the Government that seized the property sold and holds the money ought to give it to the men who owned the If that be the case, this bill does not go far enough. If that is the principle upon which you act, then you ought to allow all of these claimants to enter the Court of Claims, that all of this money should be returned to the claimants.

Unless we adopted this as a war measure we are not justified in keeping 1 cent of the proceeds of the sale of this property. If it was a war measure, as I contend, then the claimants have no rights under it until they prove loyalty. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the

is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, with respect to this bill, I think the House ought to be in possession of the real facts upon which it is based and upon which it is asked that it be passed. The gentleman who has just made an argument in opposition to the bill bases his whole argument upon the fact that a war measure is a measure under which he seeks to justify the United States Government in retaining the proceeds of property sold but taken subsequent to June 1, 1865. The book is a sealed book up to the time of the surrender. This measure does not seek to open up any claims, war measures or otherwise, as to property taken during that struggle. But the war is over. The surrender had come. Consternation, it is true, prevailed from one end of the country to the other. The surrender had come. Consternation, Yet, acting presumably under this war-measure proclamation, this property is taken after the surrender and after the war has closed. The Government agent officially proceeds to go has closed. The Government agent officially proceeds to go about over the country, taking the cotton of the Southern States, selling that cotton, reserving his expense account for it, and then converting into the Treasury the remainder. The That is private property taken from the war has now ceased. people who produced it on the farms. That is property belonging to the people who grew this cotton. The war being over, how can you justify the extension of the war measure when the war drum throbs no longer and the battleflags are furled? [Applause.]

That is the proposition pending before Congress. erty was taken from private citizens. The surrender is had. Their property is taken. Now, what is the sole reason why these private rights can not be exercised as to the money that has been converted into the United States Treasury? They throw themselves back of the technical proposition that loyalty must be proved. Loyalty when? The war is over. Battles have ceased. The property was taken after the surrender. Yet that was private property and not property of the Government. It is the fund of the private individuals who grew the crops.

It was taken from them after the war had ceased.

Now, shall the United States Congress say to the people who have lost this property that, although you accepted the results of the war, although the surrender has been had, that property does not belong to you? Yet you come after the ceasing of the conflict and take the property of those people and convert it into the Treasury of the United States and say to them, "You must prove loyalty."

This property was on hand after the war closed. It was grown on the farms and sold after the war was over, and yet this money is in the Federal Treasury. I base myself on the proposition of abstract right and wrong. The Southern people who lost this property feel that they have a right to the proceeds that have been put into the Treasury.

We are not asking to take something out of the Treasury that is not ours. We are asking to take out of the Treasury that fund that was placed there after the war ceased, proceeds of sale of our private property, and the vote of this Congress is to determine that fact. We are not opening up what happened during the period of the strife. We are simply opening up the claims for property taken after that strife had ceased. I say, as a matter of right, that the people should have the privilege to go into the Court of Claims and assert their rights to such of these trust funds as they may show themselves entitled.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I wish to ask if it does not appear by the very action of the United States Government itself that it does not claim any title in the money thus covered into the Treasury?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. It is a trust fund placed in the Treasury, and the United States Government makes no abstract claim of right to it.

Mr. HARDY. Then the secondary question is, if the title is not in the Government it is in somebody, somewhere.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That is true. It is a trust fund placed there, and the question is, who has title to it? It is a matter to be determined in the Court of Claims. Let them present their proof.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Regardless of other questions, has the gentleman any objection to inserting in this bill a provision that the claimant shall assert and prove his loyalty on the date of the so-called confiscation?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That amnesty proposition which has not claim it, and this is simply to remove the bar of a technical provision that the claimant may come into court and not be cut off by demurrer raising the question of loyalty. [Applause.]

Mr. WATKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

SLAYDEN | five minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I agree perfectly with all that my colleague [Mr. Young] has said with reference to the justice of this claim against the Government and the righteousness of the demand that the proceeds of property that was captured and sold and covered into the Treasury be returned to the rightful owners, but in my judgment this measure does not go far enough to do full justice to cases that will appeal to the sympathy of every Member of this House. I believe that if Members will take the time to investigate them they will find that this bill applies to a class of cases that will appeal not merely to the sympathy, but to the active, earnest legislative sympathy of the Members of the House. I have special reference to one case. In order that I may make myself perfectly clear, I will illustrate my meaning by telling of a concrete case.

In November and December, 1865, and January and February, 1866, the armies of the Union came into Texas and camped during that winter on land belonging to a man by the name of Hatch, who lived near Victoria, in southern Texas. It is a prairie country. Timber of any sort is very scarce. Occasionally there would be what we call a "mott" of standing timber down there. This man had an unusually large and valuable This Army was encamped on his land, and during that winter they consumed all of his standing timber for firewood. At that time, as we have been able to prove by abundant evidence, wood sold readily in the neighboring market of Victoria at $6 a cord. It was estimated at the time that more than 2,000 cords had been taken from him. Mr. Hatch during his entire lifetime endeavored to recover from the Government for that property which had been taken and used for the benefit of its troops. He failed to do so. I tried for several years to get an appropriation out of the Treasury to settle this claim, the facts in reference to which are undisputed. I failed. It was sent to the Court of Claims and they rendered an opinion agreeing to the facts that were alleged, admitting the truthfulness of our claim with reference to the facts, but they denied payment because of a lack of loyalty on the part of Hatch during the war. That is probably true. Nearly every respectable man in my part of the country was what would be called disloyal at that particular period. But Mr. Hatch has been dead for a number of years. His widow, who is approximately 80 years of age, still lives, in the direct poverty. The Court of Claims says that the Government owes her certainly as much as $3,000, putting a very small estimate on the value of the wood taken at the time, but it denies payment of it because of the disloyalty of Mr. Hatch during the war. Now, it is well to remember that this property was taken more than six months after the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox. There was no state of rebellion existing in Texas at that time and there was no open disloyalty to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall only say that shall endeavor to have the law amended so as to provide for this widow. [Applause.] Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation is twofold: First, to require a speedy presentation of all the claims coming under the provisions of this act. One of the requirements is that the claims shall be filed prior to January, 1915; if not filed by that time they are barred. This is a trust fund, as I understand it, in the Treasury. It applies to cotton which was abandoned, taken, and sold by the Government after June 1, 1865, after peace had been restored and after the war was over. It is not one of the classes of property that come within the category of what is usually taken in the case of war and where the ownership vests in the Government from its capture as a result of hostilities.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to have the gentleman state the theory upon which he holds this to be a trust fund, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, in Young against the United States, distinctly says that it is not a trust fund. How does the gentleman argue that it is in the face of that decision?

Mr. CULLOP. The statute under which the fund was created makes it a trust fund. Upon the question I am presenting now been so much discussed has already been promulgated. The war is over, and the decree has gone forth. This is a special list of claims. It is a trust fund there. The Government does law. By direction of the statute the Government was to take charge of abandoned property, sell it, and deposit the fund in the Treasury Department to be kept for the lawful owners. That is this fund; that is what this legislation applies to and solely to this. That fund is not a public fund to be used in expenditure in the current business of the Government, but is held in trust by the United States Government for the rightful owners of it. The statute authorizing the taking of it so provided.

I desire to call attention to the report of the committee which reported this bill, which clearly and specifically defines its object and the scope of its purpose.

It was evidently the intention of Congress to allow this money to be paid to the claimants from whom the property was taken after June 1, 1865 (after the cessation of hostilities), without the proof of loyalty; but as section 159 of the act approved March 3, 1911, requires such allegation and proof, a conflict of opinion has arisen as to the interpretation of the law upon this point, and it is to settle this question that this bill is presented.

This explains the sole purpose of this bill and expresses the only object of it.

Now, the Supreme Court has stated the different classes of property which were taken during the war and held. They are divided into four classes—

First, that which belonged to the hostile organizations or was employed in actual hostilities on land.

Second, that which at sea became the lawful subject of capture.

Third, that which became subject to confiscation.

This property belonged to neither of those classes.

Fourth, a further description, known only in the recent law, called "captured and abandoned property."

To this latter class of property alone this legislation applies. Now, by virtue of the statute passed in 1863, wherever such property had been found during the continuance of the war it was to be taken and sold, the expenses deducted, and the residue deposited in the Treasury to be held for the lawful owner.

This legislation applies to that class of property which was taken after June 1, 1865, and to no other class of property, and after the war was over, after the proclamation of the President declaring peace had been made. Certainly it is only fair and right that the money now carried in the Public Treasury derived from the sale of such property—the net proceeds of it—ought to be returned to those who have the proper claim to it. The records of the Treasury Department disclose who are the rightful owners and the amount belonging to each claimant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana five minutes more.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, the condition is that all of these claims must be presented before January 1, 1915, and then adjudicated. Claims not presented by that time are barred by this statute, and ought to be barred, and whatever amount there is in the fund be paid pro rata among the owners of the fund as found by the Court of Claims in passing upon the cases presented to it for adjudication.

Why should this fund be continued in the Public Treasury? It is not used for public purposes. It is held there inviolate because it is kept for a specific purpose, and that purpose is to pay back to the owners of this property the residue remaining after deducting the expenses incurred in disposing of the property, the net proceeds remaining in the Treasury from the sale of the same—that is, this fund. It is not a general fund, but a specific fund created by statute, held for a sole and specific purpose, and certainly it ought to be distributed to its rightful owners as a matter of common justice and a magnanimous act of a great Government prompted by the patriotic purpose of a generous people. All this talk about opening the door to the war claims has nothing to do with the case. We are not disturbing in any respect the law by which those claims are adjudicated. That law stands intact as it has stood from the time of its passage, and will, I trust, continue to stand that way; but here is a trust fund that the Government can not use, which has been carried on the books of the Treasury Department for a long time—since some time in 1865—and has continued to be carried there. It is time that the rightful owners of that property under the purpose for which it is carried be determined, and the fund itself be distributed, and that is the purpose of this bill. It will not open the door to wholesale war claims at all. It does not in any way affect the law now on the statute books in regard to southern war claims, but it is simply construing by legislation the statute that has been on the books since 1863 concerning this particular fund. It has no other object and can not be employed for any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of another gentleman who is to speak, if it is agreeable for him to speak at this time, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that Gen. Grant said, when the surrender at Macon, Ga., took place, on the 21st of April, 1865, that all fighting between the North and South then ceased. There was a surrender, I think, of Forrest at Macon, Ga., and, as I recall, it was on the 21st of May, 1865, I may not recollect history correctly. I understand that Gen. Grant has said in his memoirs that after that day there was no fighting between the North and the South; that so far as actual hostilities were concerned the war was then over. I appreciate that it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the rebellion did not cease, as a rebellion, until some time in August, 1866. I would not vote to remove the disability of anyone who gave aid or comfort to the Confederacy prior to April 21, 1865.

To make myself more definite and to endeavor to explain myself more fully, I would not vote to remove the disability of anyone who actually participated in the rebellion while hostilities were carried on or in any way aided or encouraged it. If I am correct, there were no hostilities subsequent to May 21, 1865. I do not permit anyone to charge me with disloyalty to my country or its best interests or halting in the endeavor to take care of its rights as I think they should be taken care of, but I do not think it was right to selze the property of anyone for war reasons after the war was over. Technically it may not have been over prior to August, 1866; yet the great tumult was done. I can understand the feeling, which must have been ill and ugly, among the people of the South after Lee had surrendered at Appomattox, as well as after Forrest and Johnston and other Confederates had surrendered and their men had gone home, after they had put their arms upon the ground and had taken their horses and retired from the fields of conflict to do for themselves. I can appreciate the emotions and the passions of Confederates, inflamed by long fighting and embittered by defeat. They would have been the same within me had I been a Confederate soldier or had lived in the South with my views in accordance with those who had participated in the rebellion. I am disposed to forgive them if their feelings toward the Union were not as they now are. I do not feel, in our advancing years, that we ought to fail to recognize the fact that the southern people suffered a great loss-and they should have so suffered, because they were not loyal to their country—but at the same time we should be slow to criticize them beyond the proper measure or take from them rights which they otherwise would have had were it not for their expression of their views touching their duties toward their Government immediately after actual hostilities were done. They lost their kin in this war, their property was gone, and they had started to work for themselves. It was then, the gentleman has informed us, and then only, that the property in question was selzed because of an act of Congress that authorized its seizure. Gentlemen ought to know, and it is stated by them, that this property was seized when there was really no justification for its seizure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything, but the gentleman from Louisiana offered me the time, and I will now ask him to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, an old soldier of Lee's armies who had surrendered at Appomattox and who had stacked his gun forever and instead took hold of the rein of the horse which Grant gave him and started for the South no doubt in his heart held hatred toward us, as we held hatred toward him, long after he had surrendered. He may have spoken perhaps as he should not have spoken and as he would not speak to-day. He may have done those things perhaps which he should not have done after he returned to the South, but his fighting days were done. He had handed in his weapon. He was submitting as patiently and quietly as he could, adjusting himself to distasteful conditions, and if he planted his cotton and it was afterwards seized pursuant to war measures, I do not think the act was right, and I am willing to pay him for it. It must not be understood by reason of what I have said that I would vote to remove the disability from any man who bore arms against the Government prior to the cessation of hostitities. The question seems to be, When was the war over?

think it was when the fighting was done. Others seem to think not until the day of proclamation.

Many of us have always understood-it may be the Supreme Court has ruled otherwise, and I concede it has-that the great conflict was done when Lee surrendered. I do not propose to consider in this dispute any other time, and therefore it is my purpose to vote for this measure. [Applause.] I did not say what I said for the purpose of moving the gentlemen to any kind of demonstration; I said it because I meant it. This money is in the Treasury. It does not belong to the United money is in the Treasury. States Government, but it belongs to somebody, and, as I understand, arises from the proceeds of property taken from the people who now ask to have it returned. I understand by this bill that no one can receive any part of this fund except he who lost his property subsequent to June 1, 1865, and feeling, as 1 have already said, that hostilities having ceased, property seized after that time was improperly seized, I think the money now in the Treasury, the product of the sale of improper seizures, ought to be returned to the people whose property was seized. That is all I have to say. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield back the balance of my time.

WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill. It is but an act of justice and equity to a large class of our people living, I presume, principally in the Southern States and to the descendants of those of that class who have passed away.

The rule which prevails throughout the world that one country or one people can, with its armies, take the property of another country or people in time of war between them without being liable for compensation therefor is founded upon necessity and not upon the abstract principles of equity and justice. But in this case even that harsh rule is in nowise applicable. On the 1st day of June, 1865, the war between the States, some-times known in history as the War of the Rebellion, but, more truly speaking, now denominated as the Civil War between the American States, was ended. Nearly two months before that date the commanding general of the Southern forces had surrendered, and the war was at an end forever.

The pending bill only bears upon property which was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, by the Federal forces under an act approved March 12, 1863, which provided for the taking of abandoned property, to be disposed of by the Government and the proceeds held for the benefit of the former owners thereof. The bill under consideration only changes existing law in the respect that it provides that the Court of Claims may consider the rights of such former owners to participate in the trust fund arising from the sale of such property, without such claimant having first to prove his loyalty during the rebellion.

Whatever may be said as to property taken under the laws of war during actual hostilities, it seems to me that no greater injustice could be done than by stretching this harsh rule so as to allow the conqueror to take property without compensation after hostilities had ceased.

The proceeds of the property taken under the act of 1863 does not belong to the Treasury of the United States, but it is a trust fund to be disposed of and paid out to the former owners upon the findings of the Court of Claims, and to bar a brave man, who fought on the losing side of that great conflict under the belief and conviction that he was doing his duty to the sovereign State in which he lived and perhaps was born, from the participation in the proceeds of his own property taken not in time of war but after all hostilities had ceased, and when he had returned to his home, laid down his arms, and become a peaceful citizen of the Nation, can not be upheld upon any theory either of necessity or justice, and is abhorrent to the principles upon which this great Republic is founded.

During my short career in this body I think that I can say that I have been liberal upon the question of pensions to the Union soldier, notwithstanding the fact that all my people during the late war were in sympathy with the Southern cause; and if I had been of sufficient age I would have probably been on that side of the conflict. I thought that the Nation owed to those who fought for it a recognition of their services and a substantial remuneration therefor, and have acted accordingly, even at the sacrifice of the political friendship of some people of my district.

Now, it is quite apparent that all pension legislation for soldiers of the Civil War is almost wholly beneficial to residents of so-called Northern States, and I am glad at this time upon this pending bill to do something, however feeble it may be, in justice to the men and their descendants who fought for and were in sympathy with the principles which were finally settled against them by the arbitrament of arms in the great conflict to which I have referred. It is eminently right, in my judgment, that this bill become a law, and I shall vote for it with the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the crux of the situation, so far as this bill is concerned, is not so much when did the war cease as it is of giving certain people the right to go in and get their rights from the Treasury Department. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, as being preposterous for us to undertake to hold that hostilities did not cease until August, 1866. The history of our country tells us that it ceased long before that time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] brought to my mind a remark which I remember distinctly of reading in Gen. Grant's memoirs when he declared that after Forrest surrendered some time in May, 1865, that marked a complete cessation of hostilities between the North and the South. But even were it not for the declaration of Gen. Grant the history of our country, our common-school history, records the fact that hostilities ceased between the North and the South at the time when Lee surrendered at Appomattox and Joseph E. Johnston surrendered to Gen. Sherman, so it is not a question now as to when the war actually ceased. I think we are all agreed practically upon the proposition that there is a fund in the Treasury which belongs to some one, and that fund does not belong to the Treasury of the United States. I think we are all agreed, or substantially so, upon the proposition that the fund in the Treasury Department is not a general fund, but belongs to certain persons in the South who have a claim to it because of property taken from them after the war ceased. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that that is the only question in dispute here: Shall we permit by an amendment to the law as it now stands opportunity to the claimants to go in and prove their rights to this fund, whatever it may be called. I do not care a whit whether it is a trust fund or not, it is a fund that does not belong to the people of the country generally; it belongs to somebody, and, in my judgment, it is the duty of Congress to let that money be paid out to the proper persons after their claims have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims and it has determined who the owners are and the respective amounts due to each. It is our duty, Mr. Chairman, as I view it, to let the Treasury of the United States pay it. [Applause.] As the Treasury con-cedes the fund now held by it as belonging to certain claimants of the South, what objection is there to paying it out to the claimants. Let them have it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may want to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], the ranking minority member of the committee, and I will be glad if the gentleman will inform me what time he desires to use, for the reason there are others who expect to speak.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact I did not want any time.

Mr. WATKINS. I yield such time as the gentleman may wish.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to say have not asked for any time in this discussion. I just came upon the floor of the House, and I do not think I have anything of importance to say to this House upon the subject. I was chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws upon which, and upon a bill of that committee, section 162 was ingrafted. I was opposed to it, and those who were present will remember I spoke against it on two or three different occasions.

It was adopted, however, by the House by a very substantial majority, and I afterwards stood for it in conference, and acting in obedience to the spirit manifested in this House, I felt it was the intention of the country that the section should be enacted, and it was enacted, into law. I knew nothing whatever of the history of these claims at the time the amendment was offered. It came in the midst of a debate. gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] offered the resolution. My recollection is that he offered it of an afternoon on a Calendar Wednesday, and that it originally included the elimination of the necessity of the proof of loyalty. We discussed it during that afternoon and no vote was reached. On the following Calendar Wednesday the gentleman withdrew that amendment and submitted another, which was carefully prepared by him and which afterwards became section 162 of the bill. I can only say that in obedience to the spirit manifested in this House I voted for it in conference, and when it came before the revision committee that reports this bill, in view of that fact I voted for it there, and I propose to vote for it here on the floor of the House to-day. I have no definite, accurate information respecting the history of these claims to give to the House. I had none at the time; I have not had the opportunity since to prepare myself upon them, and I therefore feel that there is nothing more for me to say on this subject.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hosson].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to go into the details of this question. My purpose is to call attention at this time to the broader aspects which this question involves, namely, the justice that the Federal Government has a chance to render to the people of the South. It is not necessary to remind the Members here that a tax was placed upon cotton during the Civil War, afterwards declared to be unconstitutional, and that the money collected from that tax, amounting to some sixty to seventy millions of dollars, was not refunded to the people from whom it had been unlawfully collected, as the money collected from the income tax recently passed was refunded. That money never has been refunded, and the failure to refund it has worked a harsh injustice upon the southern people. In this present case, Mr. Chairman, the proof of loyalty, it seems to me, might be completely waived if we practiced the same spirit toward our own people that we have practiced toward foreigners. We returned an indemnity of $750,000 to the Japanese Government, part of our share of an indemnity paid in the late sixties, when we made a demonstration in conjunction with Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands in the Straits of Shimonosiki. We never used a dollar of our share. In due time every dollar was returned to the Japanese Government. As a result of the Boxer disturbances, some twelve-odd millions of dollars were likewise paid to the United States for war damages. We did not use that money. I never cast a vote more gladly than the vote to return that money to the Chinese Government.

In the case of Spain we had a perfect right not only to take what territory we had occupied, but, following the precedents of civilized warfare, to demand a war indemnity. Instead we found that Spain was impoverished. Our peace commission practically volunteered and the Nation confirmed that we pay $20,000,000 to a vanquished foe; and we also voluntarily transported all the Spanish soldiers back home to Spain.

And so it has been in all the wars of our country. fight we fight with all our might, but when the war is over we do not harbor animosity or hatred, but proceed in a spirit of generosity to reestablish good fellowship with the former foe. Members here realize that since the Civil War pensions have been a large part of the expenditures of this Government, amounting to hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. The total has gone into the billions. South pays its pro rata share, which amounts to tens of millions of dollars every year, very little of which ever goes back to the South. It would really be in keeping with the uniform practice of returning war indemnities if this Government could find some way in which the South might be partially recouped for this stupendous permanent burden due to the war. the South has never asked that. All we say here at this juncture is that a little meed of justice, plain and simple, be done the southern people, the same that every individual would recegnize as just and right in his own business relations with his fellows. All we ask is that this Congress now, even at this late date, should do that little amount of justice to the southern

Mr. Chairman, I know the Members will not take it amiss If I selze upon this opportunity to point out hardships borne by the South at the hands of the Federal Government. We are a rural section. For decades the general system of taxation, the indirect system of the high tariff, has caused hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes to be collected from the rural sections for the benefit of the great cities. While the Government collects $300,000,000 at the customhouses a year the great special interests, whose activities are located chiefly in the great cities of other sections, collect $1,900,000,000.

Again, the fiscal policies of the Nation as bearing upon banking and currency provide large means for the financing of the business of the banker, the merchant, the manufacturer in the large cities, but there is no means provided for financing the business of the farmer. On the contrary, the national banking law forbids a national bank to loan money on a farm, the best security on earth.

Again, take the question of transportation. The railroads transport goods straight through the small farm to the big city beyond cheaper than they deliver the goods at the little town. other words, the general taxing policies, the general fiscal policies, the general transportation policies of the Nation have combined to place hardships upon the South.

I will not now raise the specter of the reconstruction and carpetbag days that followed the war, but all Members will remember how those days carried forward for many years the poverty and devastation produced by the war and made more difficult the steep ascent to prosperity of the southern people. Again, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the attitude of the Federal Government toward the great world staple of cotton, upon which southern prosperity so largely depends. The Brazilian Government cooperates with its coffee growers to raise the world's price of coffee. The German Government cooperates with its potash producers to raise the world's price of potash. Our Government not only has not raised a finger to help the cotton grower to raise the price of cotton, but has, on the contrary, used the power of the Attorney General's office to prosecute the cotton bulls who tried to produce this result, while it allowed the cotton bears to go scot free when they conspired to put the price of cotton down.

Mr. Chairman, the time has now come for the Nation to do justice to the southern people when they have legitimate claims upon the Government and to extend a cordial godspeed to them as they move out upon a new period of prosperity and empire building.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask at this time unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on the subject of this bill may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I am not willing that that be done, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. This is in Committee of the Whole, and that permission can not be granted in committee. The House can do that later on.

Mr. WATKINS. I will make my request later, when we go back into the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Hardy].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to avail myself of the opportunity afforded by these three minutes chiefly to say that I admire the magnanimous spirit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] who addressed this House a few moments ago. If we had more of that kind of men, more of that kind of sentiment, which is the sentiment of brave manhood, there would be less of prejudice between the sections than there is to-day, and, thank God, that prejudice is fast passing away. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want any praise for doing what I think is right.

Mr. HARDY. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am not praising him individually, but the sentiment and the manner and the magnanimity of his remarks. I know he was not seeking praise, and that makes his action all the more praiseworthy. Every really generous act or utterance is without desire or care for applause.

I wish to say a word further that is a little bit personal. 1865 I was a boy 9 years old. One day in June or July of that year I saw my father walk out on his front gallery, send word down to the quarters not far away, and call up the negroes; and when they were all assembled I heard him tell them that, under the proclamation that had been issued by the Government, they were free. He added that it was theirs to go back on the plantation or not, as they saw proper; that if they went back and finished making and gathering the crop, he would do the best he could to compensate them for their labor and to see that they were properly fed and clothed while working.

Now, I could not go into his innermost heart and undertake to rove loyalty or the precise sentiments or feelings that moved him from that time on, but at that time that was his action, and then he went back into the house. His whole fortune was gone, his spirit was broken, and for six months afterwards he scarcely moved from the inner portions of the house, and my mother was the mainstay and the thoroughgoing head of the family. The next year he bought a place on credit, and many of his old slaves went with him, and they planted the crops of 1866 and 1867.

Now, suppose that after that incident the crops that were being grown under those circumstances were taken. Would it have been right? Was it any more right to take the property of any citizen of the South after he had laid down his arms and thought no more of resistance or war, except as it bore on his desolation or woe?

And now, Mr. Chairman, where property was taken under similar circumstances, and the proceeds of it turned into the Treasury, to give it back to the rightful owner is a simple act of justice, as has been so well spoken by the gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. Hobson.]

This property does not belong to the United States. It was taken without any justification under any principle, of right or just law, among men or between nations, except the idea of taking it to preserve it for the rightful owner. You may call it a trust or what you will. The Government recognizes that it does not belong to it. It belongs to somebody, and it ought to be given in justice to that somebody. Oh, we have been generous—and I am proud of it—with other nationalities and other peoples. To the Japanese we were generous; to the Spanish we were generous; to the Chinese in the Boxer difficulties we were generous, and I glory in the generosity of a great country and a great people. We ought to be able now to be just to each other. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] consume some part of his time now?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania Mr. Bowman.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking permission to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is made, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice that usually these outbursts of friendly feeling between the sections of the country, exhibited by friends from the South, come in connection with an effort to extract some money from the Treasury. They are supposed to be very magnanimous. They are supposed to want to be very magnanimous while they are getting the money. I do not blame them for that, or for complimenting my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], who stated, without any warrant of authority whatever for it, that this property was improperly seized by the Government agents. I doubt whether he knows the facts in connection with it. I doubt whether he is informed as to whether the property was improperly seized or not, or as to the circumstances surrounding the seizure of the property. My information is that no portion of this property was seized in any part of the South where hostilities had in fact ceased.

Only where the war was in fact still in existence, shortly after the surrender of Lee, was the property in fact seized by the Government, seized from men who were disloyal to the Government at the time, and who were at the time lending aid and comfort to the rebellion; men who had not accepted the surrender of Lee by any means as the ending of the rebellion. The Government agents did not take property from men who were willing to consider that the war was ended, men who had laid down their arms, men who had accepted the surrender of Lee as the final result. Their property was not disturbed. But my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] says the Government agents improperly seized the property. That is a mere guess on his part.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a mere guess on the gentleman's part, for I used no such language. I refer to the notes of the Official Reporters to verify my statement. I said it was claimed by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MANN, I am glad the gentleman disavows the language.

Mr. BUTLER. I leave it to the notes of the Official Reporters to settle it.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing between us to settle. If the gentleman did not make the statement, then I withdraw what I have said. That is the whole assumption, however, of gentlemen who favor this bill. That is the only excuse that can be given for it—that the property was improperly seized by the Government agents, taken from men who were willing to admit that the rebellion no longer existed. The assumption is that this property was seized from men who were in peaceable possession of it, not as an act of war but as an act of confiscation. But no such thing happened, and there is no justification for the claim. No property was taken from those people who were willing to consider the rebellion at an end, but in those cases where property was seized it was seized from men who were then disloyal to the Government, and the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have refused to agree to an amendment which will amend this bill so as to provide that it shall apply only to those who were not disloyal after the date fixed in the bill,

This is only the beginning of doing away with the proof of byalty. It has nothing to do with the question of peace belovalty. tween the people of the different portions of the country. the honor to introduce in this House the first bill which passed providing that the General Government of the United States should care for a Confederate cemetery, that is now being cared for by the Government, where only Confederate dead are buried. So far as feeling is concerned, the war ought long since to have been buried, and, so far as I am concerned, was long since buried; but when gentlemen come into the House under the pretense of trying to have peace and magnanimity between different portions of the country for the purpose of extracting money from the Treasury that they know ought not to be paid out, I repudiate the claim that it is necessary in order to be magnanimous to pay money to which they are not eutitled. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Government of the United States seized this property. Aye, it seized millions of dollars' worth of property in the South during the War of the Rebellion. The gentleman from Alabama says that proof of loyalty in these cases ought to be dispensed with. What is the distinction between this case and those cases? Are we to say now, 50 years after the war, in order to prove our magnanimity in the North, that we propose to pay the owners of property in the South for all the property taken from disloyal citizens by the armies of the North? It would take billions of dollars, perhaps. No one knows how much it would take. When you propose to dispense with the proof of loyalty in one case you open the door wide, so you can not refuse to do the same deed of justice in other cases.

I believe that when war is entered into, people ought to abide by the results of the war. And one of the results of war recognized throughout the world is that the country which succeeds does not pay the citizens of the country which loses for the property taken as a result of the war. And that is all this case is. Remove the proof of loyalty, establish now the proposition that no longer is proof of loyalty necessary in order to obtain from the Treasury of the United States payment for property seized by the Government of the United States or its armies in the South from disloyal citizens, and no one can tell how serious and far-reaching will be the result.

It is assumed here that this money is in the Treasury. It is in the Treasury only theoretically. It is carried on the books of the Treasury, but every dollar which is to be paid out on this and other claims must first be taken from the citizenship of the country. The money is not in fact in the Treasury. If its payment is provided, it must be raised by taxation. Those who put down the rebellion must again be called upon to pay the money to the Treasury in order to pay it out to those who sought to destroy the Union. I am not willing to do that in order to curry the favor of my distinguished friends of the South and be called magnanimous. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining. Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, throughout the discussion last Wednesday and to-day there has developed, to a certain extent, an obstinacy on the part of the proponents of this bill with reference to suggested amendments which I can not reconcile with the eloquent expressions made on the floor of this House within the last 30 minutes. The amendment suggested last week was not prompted for the purpose of giving voice to any hatred or animosity. No one on this side of the aisle is more willing to throw over the act of every man, woman, and child in the South the mantle of forgiveness for acts committed during the period of the war prior to June 1, 1865, and no one would do more to cement beyond its ever being severed again the Union to which these people who seek to-day to be loyal.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman consider it extracting money from the Treasury if the Government should turn over this money to its rightful owner; should give it back to the people who owned it?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The question of ownership depends on the manner in which this property was taken and the attitude of the party toward the Government at the time of the confiscation. If the individual who makes this claim to-day was disloyal to the Government at the hour of the confiscation of his property, it is my contention that he is not entitled to recover in 1912 any more than he was on June 15, 1865.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman conceive that it was necessary for a descendant of the owner—take the illustration I made as to my own father-one, who by his action then showed that the surrender was complete, that resistance was ended, does he contend that some one now should come in and swear that at that time he was thoroughly devoted to the Union?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Texas must admit, that in order to recover in these claims, the claimant, whether he be sensitive or not regarding his own personal feelings, must make a charge against the Government of the United States. He must charge the Government with having committed a wrong, and if he is not sensitive about charging the Government with committing a wrong, why should he be sensi-tive about alleging his own loyalty to the Government at the time?

Mr. HARDY. The claimant makes no claim that the Government does not admit.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The Government admits taking the property, but the Government claims that it took it under the color of right.

Mr. HARDY. It took the property under the authority of law, but it admits by its present holding of the property for its owner that it belongs to another.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The taking of the property was not in violation of any individual right, and if it was not, then no one has a claim against the money in the Treasury.

Mr. HARDY. What amount of proof would the gentleman want as to the loyalty of the claimant? Would he want some one to swear that he run up the Union flag, or something of that

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; I would hesitate to pay the claim from the funds in the Treasury to a man who would be unwilling to admit that he was a loyal citizen of this Republic at the time.

Mr. HARDY. The whole country was at peace, was it not? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is a question in contro-ersy. As the gentleman from Illinois stated, arms had been laid down, hostilities had ceased in certain sections, but in other sections there is a question whether the hostilities of certain individuals had not been prolonged beyond this period. The purpose of this amendment is to guard against paying money out of the Treasury to those who are not willing to admit or declare that they followed the generous and brave action of the men of the South, who laid down their arms and became ardent and loyal supporters of a rejuvenated Republic, but prolonged it beyond that period, and as an incident to, and during whose disloyalty, the Government took this property.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman wishes a statement that the party claiming was not still in rebellion?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will read to the gentle-

I know what the gentleman's amendment is, but I want the effect of it. The gentleman knows that everybody was at peace, the old soldiers had gone home, they were plowing in the country and trying to build up the waste places and were paying no attention to public affairs.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Those are very broad declarations that I believe are hardly justified.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a remarkable statement or proposition about some people in the South continuing in rebellion after the surrender of Lee and Johnston, and I would like to know when and where it was done, for I have heard nothing about it.

Mr. MANN. The records of the War Department will show it. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, without submitting any evidence on the subject, is it not an inevitable conclusion to which we are driven, when these very claimants refuse to admit that at that time they had laid down their arms and were loyal to the Government?

Mr. SLAYDEN. At what time?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Subsequent to June 1, 1865, during the period in which the gentleman claims they are entitled to recover, because they were presumably loyal.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know anything about what any individual may have said, but I do know as a matter of fact that we not only were in complete submission, but that there was no armed insurrection against the Government of the United States. We were in neither the physical nor mental attitude that made such a thing possible. We were not only peaceful, but we were subdued. We were quiet; we were terrified in a way.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Taking the gentleman's statement to be an accurate description of the fact, then what harm can come from an admission in the pleadings—the gentleman is a lawyer I take it. Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; I am not.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Can any wrong result from a declaration in these pleadings that the people seeking to extract the money from the Treasury or recover it from the -whatever language you wish to use-were loyal at Treasurythe time their property was taken?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not so much interested in the gentleman's argument as in this strange new history which he is relating. As a student of history I am interested in knowing when and where and by whom that rebellion, subsequent to June, 1865, was carried on.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Aside from the records of the War Department the fact is as I say that the proponents of this bill emphatically refuse to put in any provision whatsoever that would safeguard the interests of those who were loyal.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman make that demand of any claimant against the Government except these?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that these claims stand in a class by themselves. They were born in a period, if not of open hostility, then, at least, in a period of doubt.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know of any other claim against the Government growing out of the war where the proof of loyalty is not required.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair question.
Mr. HARDY. The gentleman does not know of any other claims against the Government growing out of the war on account of the seizure of property after the war was ended.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are lots of claims growing out of the war prior to the time when the war ceased.

Mr. HARDY. What I say is that these claims come from acts after the war had ceased.

Mr. MANN. No; they do not at all.
Mr. HARDY. Unless the gentleman's colleague is fearfully wrong, and unless my reading of history is wrong, they do.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is a controversy history, as is illustrated by the statements of the two gentlemen on the floor, both of whose opinions I respect, but which I can not reconcile with each other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in the one minute that remains I want to call attention to the fact, first, that the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly decided and it is now the law of the land that this is not a trust fund, but is the absolute property of the United States. I want to call attention, second, to the undoubted fact, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and as I tried to point out one week ago, that this is simply the beginning of a series of bills, some of which have been reported and are now on the calendar, the purpose of which is to absolutely reverse the policy that has obtained heretofore in the handling I want to call the attention especially of my of these claims. distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOF], who is the guardian of the Treasury and who undoubtedly by his elo-quence has saved the people of this country hundreds of millions of dollars-I want to call his attention especially to the fact that he is now supporting a proposition which if enacted into law neither he nor any other Member of this House can see the termination of. The immediate effect will be that at least $5,000,000 will be open to almost anybody who wants to back his wagon up to the Treasury Department and scoop in the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has announced that he could not afford to vote for a measure of this kind in order to curry favor with his friends of the South.

Mr. Chairman, his friends of the South are only asking that simple justice be done. This measure does not appropriate one cent. It gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction of claims that may be filed prior to January 1, 1915. It requires that the people whose property was taken by the Federal forces after the 1st of June, 1865, be paid for their property out of money now in the Treasury for that purpose. Does the gentleman want to deny the South the justice sought in this measure? His own colleagues on the committee voted unanimously in favor of this bill, and those of them who have spoken in this House to day have championed the measure. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] speaks of throwing the mantle of forgiveness over the South for the part it took in the war between the States. The Federal soldier himself would not speak in that fashion now. He realizes that both sides fought for the right as God gave them the power to see it. [Applause.] An English officer has stated in his history of Stonewall Jackson that if Grant had been reared and educated in Virginia and Stonewall Jackson reared and educated in New England, Grant would have been a Confederate general and Stone wall Jackson a Federal general, saying that it was the viewpoint that each had of the situation. [Applause.] Each fought for the right, according to the lights before him. Dr. Ellis in his history of our country, recently written, and Dr. Ellis is a northern man, says that the question of secession was never settled in the United States until the war settled it. Brave men fought on opposing sides in settling that question, and now, thank God, we have a reunited country. [Applause.] I want to say to these gentlemen on the other side that many northern people do not share in the sentiments that you have uttered to-day. [Applause.] I canvassed eight Northern States in the recent campaign and I found the feeling with most people there strong to bury everything that looks to sectional differences, and the best people in the North and in the South are striving to unite these sections together in the ties of love, loyalty, and the clinging of section to section. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, let the Members of all sections do simple justice to-day. When the bugle was singing truce at Appomattox Robert E. Lee was not only plighting his faith, but plighting the faith of every Confederate soldier, and plighting the faith of the son of every Confederate soldier to lay down their arms forever. [Applause.] Surely Members of this House can do simple justice to those whose property was taken by the Federal forces. All we ask is that these people have a chance to go into court and ask that court to say whether or not their property was really taken and order pay therefor. June 1, 1865, there were no hostilities anywhere; none after the 1st of May; then why require these people to prove loyalty to the Union. Mr. Chairman, the soldier in blue and the soldier in gray were fighting for what they thought was right; and it is said that when Lee surrendered at Appomattox Lincoln, with tears in his eyes, at the White House said, "Have the band play [Applause.] He was hoping that hostilities were over; he was hoping that war was at an end; he was glad that we would have a reunited country; and now, gentlemen, we have that glorious reunited country, and I appeal to gentlemen here to rise to the full measure of your duty toward this meritorious

The South pleads for simple justice to those whose property was taken after Lee's surrender at Appomatox. The South will follow faithfully wherever Old Glory bares her beauty to the breeze; one heart, one hope, and one country—America, the grandest Government on the globe. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana has six minutes remaining.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in that length of time I can hardly be able to discuss satisfactorily the legal propositions involved in this case. I have several volumes here before me. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will not object when we go into the House, I will simply ask to extend my remarks in the Record, but if he is going to object I will try in the few minutes I have to cover the question as far as I can.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can ask leave to extend his remarks now.

Mr. WATKINS. I do ask that permission.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, leave will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WATKINS. With that understanding, Mr. Chairman,

Mr. MANN. There is no understanding; the gentleman has leave to extend his remarks now.

Mr. WATKINS. If I have leave, then, all right.

It has already been granted to the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, understanding I have leave to extend my remarks in the Record, as the time is so short and the proposition so extensive, I will now ask that general debate be closed and the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is now closed, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865. under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof, where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof, on the judgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 8, page 1, strike out the words "to hear and determine the claims" and insert in lieu thereof "of any claim therefor filed prior to January 1, 1915."

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. RUCKER of Colorado]. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 1, line 6, by striking out the words "and reenacted."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "and reenacted."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that is satisfactory to the gentleman. It does not affect the bill at all except the form of it. We have invariably struck out those words where they came in a bill. The enacting clause is sufficient when it says "The section shall be amended to read as follows."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, we are really reenacting the bill, and I see no objections to so stating by vote of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care anything about it in this bill. Somebody conceived the idea a year or two ago of putting this sort of an item in the bill. Every time it Mr. MANN. has been before the committee it has been stricken out, up to the present time, because it is not necessary to have but one enacting clause to the bill. When you say that "a section is amended to read as follows," that makes it read "as follows" when it is enacted.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, with the statement of the gentleman that this is the custom, I will not oppose the

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amend-

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, the following language:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof on the judgment of said court.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, by striking out the words "and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof on the judgment of said court."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to call this to the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] privately, because I think if I had he would have agreed to it. That language is in the existing law, and was in the original law, I believe. Since that time Congress has repeatedly provided, and that is now the law, that the Secretary of the Treasury can not pay out money from the Treasury until it is appropriated. This purports to give the Secretary of the Treasury authority to return this money without an appropriation. It will simply mislead people, because he will not return it without an appropriation, for the law prohibits paying any money out of the Treasury unless it is appropriated. And the custom will be, whether it is in or out of the law, when claims are allowed by the Court of Claims, they will be certified to the House and will be included by the Committee on Appropriations in the general deficiency bill. There is no other way of paying claims out of the Treasury. This is not an appropriation.

Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not looked into the matter. Would one of these judgments be such a judgment as would come in as a certified claim?

Mr. MANN. It would be the same as any other judgment against the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it is a final judgment, then it would be carried as all such judgments are, in the deficiency bill. The practice is to appropriate in the deficiency bills the amount of money required to pay judgments against the United States.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the practice is to certify the judgment to Congress, and the Committee on Appropriations includes in the deficiency bill these specific items for the payment of these judgments. I do not know that this will do any harm, except it will make people believe they can obtain the money without an appropriation for it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's amendment should prevail it would do just what he has been opposing being done all through the debate on this bill. This is a specific fund, raised from a specific object, and for a specific purpose.

The fund is in the Treasury. It is there for a certain and specific purpose, and covers money derived from a specific source. It is there to be paid back to the persons who may be legally entitled to the same, and is not as other funds that are in the Public Treasury, as a general fund. So that if the gentleman's amendment should prevail it would open the door to the very object that he has been opposing all through the consideration This fund was raised from the sale of the cotton which had been abandoned by the legal owners. It was sold under a statute which directed that it should be sold and what should be done with the net proceeds arising from the sale, and that was to pay it into the Treasury to be held for the legal owners of it, less the cost and expense of the sale and handling of the property. Now, the purpose of this act is for the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount, the legal ownership of the money of the trust fund in the Treasury, and prorate it among the lawful owners or those who shall assert their right to it by the 1st day of January, 1915. If the gentleman's amend-ment prevails, it will destroy the entire purpose of the act and leave it subject to wholesale litigation concerning the ownership of that fund, which ought not to occur in the disposition of this particular fund at all. The Treasury Department has the name of each and every owner, the amount derived from each and every sale, when and to whom made, the cost of handling the property, and the net proceeds. If this amendment is adopted, it emasculates the entire object of the measure and will produce confusion in the settlement of this matter. Therefore, instead of clarifying the situation, it will have the opposite effect. So that if his amendment prevails, the condition then would be worse than it is now for the distribution of this fund and the disposition of the matter. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Heflin having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bart-LETT] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARTLETT. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Mr. Chairman, this section, which it is proposed to amend, was adopted by the last Congress on the codification law bill. This fund, which is now in the Treasury, or which should be there, is not like other assets of the United States in the Treasury of the United States. Under the act of 1863, known as the captured and abandoned property act, proceeds of the property that was taken, after it had been sold and the expense deducted, were to be held as a trust fund for the true owner thereof. Under that law after the close of the war this owner thereof. property was taken and sold and the proceeds turned into the Treasury. I do not mean after the legal close of the war, because with a view of regulating certain matters in the Armydischarges, and so on-it has been decided that the war legally closed on the 21st day of August, 1866. But the war had actually closed on the 9th day of April, 1865, with the cessation

Now, I drew this amendment to the codification bill and presented it to the House, and after a spirited debate and discussion for quite a while the House adopted it. The Senate made some amendments to it and then it went to conference, and the conferees agreed to this proposition as it now appears in section 162 of the Civil Code.

Now, I am not going to detain the House with any details of the history of this matter, but I want to say that both Houses of Congress recognized the justice of the claim that after the war was actually over and while the United States Army was simply in possession of the territory of the States of the Southern Confederacy after June 1, 1865, the officers of the United States took this cotton from the farms of the planters and from the warehouses where it was stored and sold it, and that the owners ought to be paid the money on proof of the identity of the persons to whom it belonged. As to the date—June 1, 1865—I fixed that myself, after conference with the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, Mr. Moon of Pennsylvania, and some other gentlemen who on that side were actively engaged in that codification work.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. With pleasure.
Mr. BUTLER. If these claimants had availed themselves of the provisions of the act of Congress of 1872, could they not have proven their claims and recovered this property without first having offered proof of loyalty?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think they could.

Mr. BUTLER. Was not the question of loyalty waived by the act of 1872?

Mr. BARTLETT. It was not only waived, but by the decision of the Supreme Court, in Thirteenth Wallace, in the case of Klein, it was held that under the general amnesty of President Johnson, issued with reference to them, they could have recovered without proof of loyalty. But they did not do it, and if my friend from Pennsylvania were familiar with the condition of affairs in the South at that time, where men had lost their all and where people had their property taken from them, he would know that they did not have the means of prosecuting claims before the Court of Claims at Washington in order to recover what belonged to them.

This simply provides, as the act of 1863 provided, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make payment to the owners upon the judgment of the Court of Claims certifying that they were entitled to it. I do not believe that the Secretary of the Treasury will pay it without an appropriation, but to put this amendment on the bill will simply place those people one step farther away from what it is admitted they should receive payment for property of which they had for long years been deprived unjustly and without law. [Applause.]

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I object to this amendment. I will state that it would not only destroy the bill as it is now presented, but it would also destroy section 162 of the codifica-tion of the laws which we are seeking to amend. It would be acting in the utmost bad faith on the part of the other side of the House to insist on the incorporation of this amendment. A majority of this House voted for the passage of section 162 of the codification, under the head of the judiciary, providing for the payment of these claims. These claims now fall under that section, and the payment of the claims is provided for.

The distinctive feature of this bill is simply and purely that it establishes the principle whether the parties shall be required to prove loyalty at the time the property was taken, after June 1, 1865, and the effort now made is not only to destroy the amendment, but also to destroy the original enactment.

When that enactment was passed, as I stated on a former occasion, when that section passed the House and went over to the Senate, the features in this bill were allowed to remain the same as they were as they came from the House, with a Republican majority in the Senate. Not only that, but on four oc-casions in the Senate bills of this kind have been reported from Senate committees. This section and the entire codification went into conference, and when it went into conference it was agreed between the conferees that this section should be not only operative, but it should be effective for all intents and purposes; and it was on account of that agreement-and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], one of the conferees, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], another of the conferees, will bear me out in the statement—that the conference report was adopted. If it had not been for the understanding that this section 162 would be carried out in good faith to all intents and purposes practically, that conference report could not have been adopted. Even the conferees themselves would not have agreed to that codification. It would be acting in bad faith to destroy that section 162 by the enactment of this amendment which is now offered. I ask that it be voted down.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The amendment which I have offered does not go in any way whatever to the merits of the bill. It only goes to the form of laws passed by Congress. It was simply an effort on my part to have the House obey the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and conform to them. Possibly the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor] is not familiar with that provision of the Constitution, and for his benefit I will read the language in paragraph 7 of Article IX of the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

It is admitted that this money is in the Treasury, and the bill itself so recites. This language is not an appropriation of money, and no one pretends that it is. Everyone at all familiar with legislative proceedings certainly knows that you can not draw the money, even where a judgment has been entered, until the money has been appropriated. There is no reason for the gentleman attempting to fool claimants in this case by making them believe that they can get the money out of the Treasury before an appropriation is made, because they can not. The Treasury Department will continue to follow the provision of the Constitution and will pay no money out of the Treasury until it has been appropriated. If gentlemen desire to have the money paid on a judgment without further appropriation, then the bill itself should carry an item appropriating the necessary money for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the proviso in lines 12, 13, and 14 on page 2 and insert the following:
"Provided, That allegation and proof of loyalty on the date of the taking of the property in question shall be required in the presentation and adjudication of such claims."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take the time of the committee. This has been thoroughly thrashed out, but it is submitted in connection with the arguments already offered.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed by this amendment to destroy the entire bill. It goes to the very substance of the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso on page 2, lines 12, 13, and 14, which reads as follows:

Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass. The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Rucker of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 2, 1911, and had directed him to report the same to the House 3, 1911, and had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.
The amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, with directions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with an amendment to strike out the following language at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Mann moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, with instructions to strike out, on page 2, the proviso in lines 12, 13, and 14, as follows:
"Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the announcement is made I ask unanimous consent to make a report and pass a recess adjournment resolution.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.
Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means distributing the President's messages.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 742 (H. Rept. 1270), relating to the messages of the President of the United States communicated to the two Houses of Congress December 3 and December 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER. The report will be referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution which I send to the desk.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 66.

Resolved, That when the two Houses adjourn December 19, 1912, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, January 2, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair has counted, and there are 177 Members present, not a quorum. Under the rule a call of the House is ordered. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 174, answered "present" 7, not voting 115, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WATKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Sisson, for two days, on account of illness.

To Mr. CAMPBELL, on account of illness.

To Mr. Slemp, for one week, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Hull to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Martin L. Holt, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignations from committees:

Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the House Committee on Mines and Mining. Very respectfully,

DECEMBER 10, 1912.

Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the same to take effect immediately.

Yours, truly,

JAMES YOUNG.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATIONS AND BALANCES UNDER CONTROL OF STATE DEPART-MENT (H. DOC. NO. 1123).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, as required by law. WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE House, December 10, 1912.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Revision of the Laws having occupied two Wednesdays, the Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

PATENT TO DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SMITH of Texas (when the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands was called.) Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 26338.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title. .

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26338) providing for patent to desert-land entries on reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.
Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. This bill was attached to one of the appropriation bills at the last session of Congress and passed, and I would ask that this bill be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did the Chair state whether unanimous consent was asked for striking the bill from the calendar?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair took the liberty of stating the question according to the rule—that is, instead of striking the bill from the calendar that the bill lie on the table. there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. MANN. There will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Texas any more business from that committee?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes, sir; Senate bill 3947-

Was consent given to lay this bill on the table? Mr. MANN. The SPEAKER. Yes.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, IN JACKSON HOLE, WYO.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate bill 3947.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3947. An act to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3947, with Mr. Cox of Ohio in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3947, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas in the administration of the act of June 17, 1902, "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," the United States Reclamation Service has constructed at the outlet of Jackson Lake, Wyo., and the source of the Snake River a retaining storage dam; and Whereas the use of this dam to store the flood waters of Jackson Lake and the Snake River watershed, and the release of the surplus waters thus stored into the channel of the Snake River for utilization in irrigating lands upon lower levels, maintains high water in the Snake River at all periods of the year; and Whereas through the maintenance of high water the Snake River, previously fordable for parts of each year, in its course through the Jackson Hole region is now rendered unfordable at all times, and the residents of that region, upward of 1,000 in number, are cut off from railroad and other communication for freight and travel: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated.

Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, through the engineer officer in charge of road and bridge construction and maintenance in the Yellowstone National Park, for the construction of a bridge across Snake River, at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyoming, to be determined with a view of best serving the public travel through Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming and Idaho: Provided, That the local authorities shall cause the approaches to the proposed bridge to be constructed without expense to the United States: And provided further, That the local authorities shall provide for the maintenance and repair of the proposed bridge after it is constructed.

The appendment in the nature of a substitute was read as

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was read, as follows:

Strike out all except the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use such portion of the reclamation fund, not to exceed $18,000, and in no event more than one-half the sum that may be necessary for the construction of a bridge across Snake River, at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyoming, to be determined by the Reclamation Service, with the view of best serving the people of Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming: Provided, That no part of the funds herein authorized to be used, except such as may be necessary for the making of examinations and estimates, shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained, from the proper local authorities, satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said local authorities assume full responsibility for and will at all times maintain and repair the said bridge and approaches thereto."

Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to au-

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, to construct a bridge across Snake River, in the State service, to construct a bridge across shake liver, in the state of Wyoming, one-half of the cost of the bridge to be borne by the Reclamation Service and the balance by the local authorities in that vicinity. This bill does not authorize, in my judgment, the Secretary of the Interior to do more than the law perhaps already authorizes him to do. The necessity for the construction of this bridge arises from the construction of an irrigation project on Spake River. As I understand it in the irrigation project on Snake River. As I understand it, in the State of Wyoming there is a lake called Jackson Lake, and the Government has constructed a dam at the mouth of that lake, and Jackson River running through that lake is used as a canal for carrying the water to irrigation lands below in the State of Idaho, I believe it is, and it is across this Snake River between the lake and the irrigated lands that this bridge is proposed to be constructed. In the natural state the testimony before the committee showed very clearly that for only a short period during the year this river could be forded by the people in that vicinity, but the storage of the water in the lake and utilization of it through this river channel for the purposes of irrigation below makes the river unfordable and difficult to cross for a much greater period during the year. the Reclamation Service has always exercised the authority under the law of constructing bridges that have been made necessary by the construction of irrigation work, but on account of the peculiar circumstances of this case, where the river was not fordable a part of the year in its natural state, the Reclamation Service thought that perhaps it would not be proper for them to go to the whole expense of building this bridge, and it was concluded by the department that under all of the circumstances it would be proper for the Government to pay half of the expenses, provided the local authorities would pay the other half and provide for the maintenance and repairs of the bridge thereafter.

The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands gave the matter very thorough consideration, and finally came to agree with the Reclamation Service that that would be the fair and equitable thing to do. That, I believe, Mr. Chairman, makes a full statement of this matter. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?
Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the building of this bridge across this stream commit the Government to the policy of building roads where they have been submerged by the irrigation caused by building dams on streams? It might be a case where the roads would have to be removed from the streams. In that western country the roads follow the streams, and if they should be submerged by waters from the dams, would that compel the United States Government to go higher up the mountain sides and commit itself to the purpose of building roads that might cost a good deal of money?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that that is a question of law which he can determine as well as I can, but I understand the Reclamation Service heretofore has provided roads where in constructing an irrigation project it destroyed the roads in existence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have already adopted that policy '

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is my understanding; yes, sir. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not believe that should be done. I believe the city or the community or the county where these irrigation plants are located will be sufficiently benefited so that they can build these roads and bridges themselves.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that all these irrigation improvements are to be paid for by the people themselves, who get the benefit of them, and the Reclamation Service has adopted the policy of restoring the conveniences of the people in those localities where they construct these works wherever they are impaired or destroyed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would that be added to the annual amount that has to be paid for the land used by these

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Charged up to the project and paid back by the people.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The same as building ditches and dams, and so forth?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes, sir.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I did not understand what the policy would be.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is my understanding of the policy.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill ought to be understood by the House before it passes. I am not opposed to the provisions of the bill, although I desire at the proper time to offer an amendment to it. But because it is practically a new proposition it seems to me it ought to be discussed to some extent on the floor of the House. The Senate bill as it passed the Senate and has come to the House provided for a direct appropriation out of the Treasury of $25,000 for the construction of this bridge across Snake River. The only limitation upon that was that the local authorities should provide the approaches to the bridge and after its construction provide for the maintenance and repair of the bridge. Probably $25,000 is not a sufficient amount with which to construct the bridge. At least the committee of the House proposes what seems to me a very equitable and fair proposition, that there shall be paid out of the reclamation fund, not to exceed $18,000, for one-half the cost of the construction of the bridge—that is, the amount shall not exceed $18,000 and shall not in any event exceed one-half the cost. The amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time is to insert at the end of the bill:

Provided further, That the amount of the reciamation funds so used shall be charged as a part of the cost of the reclamation project or projects, the construction and development of which caused the necessity for such bridge.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will state that I have no objection myself to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman has not, and I think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] does not object to it I think myself that the bill presented here is a fair proposition. What will become of it when it goes to conference I do not know, but I hope that the Senate will be willing to agree to the House amendment. However, it seems to me that this matter is of such importance in the principles involved in it that the RECORD ought to contain a full statement of the reasons for the passage of the bill. I therefore ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Texas, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3947:

The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, having had under consideration Senate bill 3947, to provide for a bridge across Snake River in Jackson Hole, Wyo., report the same back with the following recommendation: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following.

sideration Senate bill 3947, to provide for a bridge across Same laber. In Jackson Hole, Wyo., report the same back with the following recommendation: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use such portion of the reclamation fund, not to exceed $18,000, and in no event more than one-half the sum that may be necessary for the construction of a bridge across. Snake River, at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyomling, to be determined by the Reclamation Service, with the view of best serving the people of Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming: Provided, That no part of the funds herein authorized to be used, except such as may be necessary for the making of examinations and estimates, shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained, from the proper local authorities, satisfactory guaranties of the payment, byt the said local authorities, of one-half of the cost of said bridge; and that the said local authorities assume full responsibility for and will at all times maintain and repair the said bridge and approaches thereto."

Strike out the preamble.

As thus amended it is recommended that the bill do pass.

The bill as it is recommended to be amended is identical with H. R. 21171, a bill authorizing the use of the reclamation fund in construction of a bridge across Snake River, in Wyoming; and there is appended hereto and made a part of this report the report made on the said bill by Mr. Taxlor of Colorado.

The building of the bridge provided for in this bill is rendered necessary by the construction by the Reclamation Service under the reclamation law of a dam at the outlet of Jackson Lake, near the Yellowstone National Park, in acorthwestern Wyoming; and there have a part of the south. The Jackson Hole region, through which the Snake River, through which the impounded by the waters of the Snake River flowing from the north, and the water is discharged through Sna of the Gros-Ventre Range and flowing through a deep canyon west into Idaho.

Owing to the topography of the country, the Snake River is not available for irrigation to any considerable extent as it flows through Jackson Hole, but a considerable acreage in the eastern part of the region is irrigated from the waters of the Gros-Ventre River, Flat Creek, and other streams. The region supports a permanent population of about 2,000 people and a very much larger population during the tourist and hunting season.

The Reclamation Service is at present prepared to impound nearly half a million feet of water in Jackson Lake, but have in contemplation works which will ultimately impound a million and a half acrefect. The reservoir is therefore the largest in capacity of any used by the Reclamation Service. The waters thus impounded are all used in the State of Idaho on the Minidoka project of the Reclamation Service and, by arrangement with the Reclamation Service, by two private enterprises, the North Side Twin Falls Land & Water Co. and the American Falls Canal & Power Co.

Prior to the building of the dam at the outlet of Jackson Lake the Snake River was fordable in its course through Jackson Hole most of the year, except a limited period of high water in the spring. Most of the year, except a limited period of high water in the spring. Most of the road from the Teton Pass to the lower end of the Jackson Hole region.

The use of Snake River as a channel for the carrying of the im-

The use of Snake River as a channel for the carrying of the impounded waters from Jackson Lake into Idaho converts Snake River into a stream too deep to ford during any portion of the summer; and, in addition to that, in regulating the water in Jackson Lake it occasionally becomes necessary for the Reclamation Service to open the gates and discharge large quantities of water in the very early spring. This was done twice this last spring, with the result that the flood, carrying with it accumulated ice, washed out the ferry anchorages and left the people of Jackson Hole without any communication with the outside world for a considerable length of time.

It is very clear that the building of the dam at the outlet of Jackson Lake necessitates the building of a bridge across Snake River, and that but for such construction the people of the region could have forded and ferried the river as heretofore, and that there is at least a moral if not a legal obligation on the part of the Reclamation Service to contribute toward remedying the condition they have created. region.

This is recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, as shown by letters made part of this report. The Reclamation Service is, of course, obliged to build bridges across the canals they construct where public roads cross the same. The service also restores all roads submerged by flooding or interfered with by its construction, but, while acknowledging the obligation on the part of the Government in this case, the service seems to be of the opinion that their obligation is not so clear and direct in the case as to warrant the building of the bridge by the service without the sanction of Congress.

The equities in the case are enhanced by the fact that the small community whose only means of communication with the outside world is rendered difficult, and at times impossible, is in no way even remotely benefited by the new condition from which they suffer, and it seems but just that those who benefit from the waters impounded should pay at least a part of the cost of remedying conditions thus created. The Secretary of the Interior expresses the view that the local community should pay half of the cost of the bridge and agree to maintain and repair it.

tain and repair it.

In these views the committee concur and have amended the bill accordingly.

Letters of the Secretary of the Interior are appended hereto.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 16, 1912.

Hon. W. R. SMITH,

Chairman Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands,

House of Representatives.

Sin: The department is in receipt of your letter of Mauch 8, transmitting copy of H. R. 21171, with a request for the views of the department and any suggestions that may be deemed proper.

This bill is entitled as follows: "A bill authorizing the use of the reclamation fund in construction of a bridge across Snake River in Wyoming."

This bill is entitled as follows: "A bill authorizing the use of the reclamation fund in construction of a bridge across Snake River in Wyoming."

It provides that such portion of the reclamation fund as may be necessary, in the indigment of the Secretary, may be used for the construction of a bridge across Snake River at a point in T. 41 or 42 N., R. 116 or 117 W., Wyoming, to be determined by the Reclamation Service, with a view of best serving the people of Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming.

This bill is substantially the same as S. 3947, except that the latter appropriates the Sum of $10,000 for the purpose.

The department on January 4, 1912, reported to Hon. George S. Nixon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, upon the said bill S. 3947, copy herewith.

In this report the conditions are reviewed, and it is shown that the operations of the Reclamation Service have contributed to a change in the conditions such that it seemed reasonable that the United States should bear one-half the expense of construction. As its operation had a material effect upon the conditions of the river during only two months in the year, it seems proper that the county should contribute at least one-half of the expense of construction and assume responsibility for its maintenance.

It is believed, therefore, that the bill should provide that the bridge may be constructed by the Reclamation Service as soon as arrangements have been made with the county by which the latter would deposit one-half the estimated cost and agree to maintain the bridge.

Very respectfully,

Samuel Adams,

Acting Secretary.

Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 4, 1912.

Hon. George S. Nixon,

Chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, United States Senate.

Sir: By reference of December 20 I am in receipt of bill S. 3947, with request for an expression regarding the advisability of this legislation.

lation.

This bill is to provide a bridge across Snake River, Wyo., at a cost of $10,000, to be paid out of the reclamation fund. The demand for such a bridge arises from the fact that the Snake River in its course through Jackson Lake has but few practicable fords. The settlers in this area obtain their supplies by team from towns to the west in the State of Idaho by crossing the Teton Mountains. The pass is traversed with great difficulty by heavy teams excepting for two months in the year, namely, August and September. During these months the settlers, as a rule, drive their stock to market and bring back their year's supplies. plies year, namery, August and September. During these months the settlers, as a rule, drive their stock to market and bring back their year's supplies.

A dam has recently been built under the terms of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), for controlling the water in Jackson Lake. Before the lake was thus regulated the river was at a low stage during August and September, but with the storage of floods and turning these down the river during the latter part of the crop season the river is maintained at a height above the normal and many of the fords are impassable, so that it is necessary to make wide detours to reach a ferry.

A reconnoissance has been made of the country and the conclusion reached that a steel bridge can be built at a cost of between $25,000 and $35,000. It is hardly practicable to attempt to construct anything much cheaper, as a bridge which is not well built can hardly be expected to remain long enough to justify the outlay.

It is not wise to attempt the construction of such a bridge until the contemplated railroad has been completed to the town of Driggs, Idaho, from which point material can be freighted in at less expense than from the present railroad stations. It is understood that the railroad will be in operation to Driggs by the end of 1912.

Assuming that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government to provide a bridge in order to meet the changed conditions in August and September, due to the construction of the Jackson Lake Dam, it is believed that Uinta County, Wyo., in which the bridge is to be located, should not only bear one-half the expense of this construction, but should also be required to assume responsibility for its maintenance. The county should also be required to put in good condition an adequate wagon road and approaches to the bridge.

The payment of half the cost by the county should be required, because the bridge would be available during the entire year, whereas the operations of the Government do not deleteriously affect the river in

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I shall hope at the proper time to hear the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL], who introduced the bill, explain a little more in detail the reasons for its passage, personally it rather appealed to me, although I did think that the objections at the last session of Congress made to the bill by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma had a good deal of force in them.

Mr. Chairman, this is Calendar Wednesday, sometimes designated in a ribald spirit as "Holy Wednesday." It is the day upon which the committees have an opportunity to bring up measures in the House. There are various ways of getting a matter before the House. If you put a bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and unanimous consent is given, the bill is taken up for consideration. You can get a promise from the Speaker to be recognized to move to suspend the rules, although there has been no such opportunity. I believe, for a year or so, and make use of it. Or you can wait for Calendar Wednesday.

At the last session of Congress the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] introduced a bill entitled "A bill to promote efficiency in the Government service." It provided:

That no officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the United States Government who holds his or her position by virtue of appointment shall, during the term of such appointment or employment, be or become an accredited delegate of any political party to any national convention held or to be held by such political party for the purpose of nominating a candidate or candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States;

With an amendment to section 1:

or become a delegate to any State or district convention at which such national delegates are elected.

Section 2 provided:

SEC. 2. That no officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the United States Government who holds his or her position by virtue of appointment shall, during the term of such appointment or employment, hold or occupy any official position in any national branch of any political organization organized or constituted for the purpose of influencing, or attempting to influence, in two or more States the nomination or selection of such candidates or candidate.

Section 3 of the bill provided:

Sec. 3. That every such officer, agent, clerk, or employee offending against either of the provisions of the two foregoing sections shall be deemed guilty of a misdemennor, and shall be fined not exceeding $500, and also shall be summarily discharged from the service of the United

That bill was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and was favorably reported by the committee to the House with the recommendation that it pass. It was placed on the Unanimous Cousent Calendar and was called up on August 19 last. I reserved the right to object. The right to object was also reserved by other Members of the House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull], after some little discussion, made this appeal to me:

Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman finally expresses himself upon the matter, I wish to say, in view of the lateness of the session and of the importance of this bill—I held it up until after the conventions were held so that I would not be in the attitude of seeming to appear to take any interest in the candidacy of any gentleman—I wish to appeal to the wisdom and the statesmanship and the patriotism and, if necessary, to the generosity of the gentleman from Illinois to withhold his objection and allow us to have the present consideration of the bill, and these amendments can be offered in their order.

I will not say that such an appeal as that will not affect me. When a gentleman appeals to my wisdom and statesmanship and generosity it might have an effect. However, another gentleman objected to the then consideration of the bill.

Lo and behold, at that time it was considered extremely important by the Democratic side of the House to introduce, report, and consider this bill to prevent Federal employees from interfering with national conventions. Since that time we have had an election and the Democratic Party has been successful, and we are to have a Democratic President who will sit in wisdom over the Federal officials.

A few moments ago, on the call of committees, the distinguished Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, which reported this bill and tried to pass it under a unanimous-consent agreement, was called by the Clerk, with the privilege of calling this bill up for consideration, and failed to respond. There is a great difference between before and after. Before they had elected their President they wanted to provide that Federal employees should in no case interfere in national conventions. Now, on that side of the House, they hope that the Federal employees will be their employees, and they do not want to prevent their interfering in national or State conventions. When they thought the Federal officials would be Republican officials they were extremely holy in their attitude. They could see the necessity, the wisdom, the patriotism, and the statesmanship of taking up this bill and passing it for the restraint of Republican officials, but when they have been successful, now that they have the right under the rules to call up the bill, they have changed their holy attitude and are not now thinking of the holy side of it, but they are thinking of getting the jobs.

Here in the District of Columbia, where we are sitting, they are having a great squabble over the question who shall be the chairman of the local committee to have charge of the grandstand matters relating to the inauguration. This man and that man are being urged. The chairman of the Democratic national committee is called to Washington for the purpose of deciding the question. After consideration for days he has been unable to determine who shall hold the high and mighty office of pre-siding over the circus part of the inaugural. Gentlemen are so worked up over getting jobs and patronage that they fail any longer to appeal to my statesmanship, my wisdom, my generosity, and my other things that they may think of to aid in calling up a bill which they did when the gentleman knew there was no time to consider it; but now, when there is time, they fail to rise to the occasion. [Applause on the Republican

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, has so clearly stated the many good reasons for the passage of the pending legislation, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], particularly in the latter part of his remarks, has so illuminated the matter and elucidated all of the problems connected with it, that I shall not take the time of the House at any considerable length in the discussion of the measure.

The Reclamation Service, in carrying out certain projects under the law, used Jacksons Lake, in Wyoming, as an impounding reservoir, and the necessary discharge of the waters of that reservoir through Snake River so changed the character of that stream-which ordinarily could be forded most of the year-as to necessitate the building and maintenance of an expensive bridge.

The country there is very sparsely settled. Most of it is within a forest reserve. The few people there ought not to be called upon to go to the heavy expense necessary for the construction of this bridge, which would not be needed except for the change in the character of the river through the impounding and discharge of the waters from Jacksons Lake. use of the river in connection with this project a little more direct, the Reclamation Service would be entirely justified in building the bridge without calling upon Congress, but under the circumstances they feel as though Congress should pass upon the question. As I understand it, the Reclamation Service is of the opinion that the people who are to be benefited by these projects might very properly be charged with the entire cost of the bridge; but the committee in its wisdom believed that there should be a division of the burden, and that part of the cost should be laid upon the people and the community and a part borne by the people under the project. The bill under consideration, therefore, provides that one-half the cost of the bridge, or not to exceed $18,000, shall be paid out of the reclamation fund, chargeable under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the projects using the water, the balance to be paid by the people locally.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. What was the statement of the gentleman with reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois? Have those in charge of the bill agreed to an amendment to let that portion of it be charged to the project?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is no objection on the part of anyone. As a matter of fact, I think the committee understood-at least, I understood-that the bill without an amendment would be interpreted by the Reclamation Service as authorizing them to charge the cost against the project; but in order that there may be no question with regard to that and to make the matter clear and definite, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has proposed the amendment, which has been reported, and to which I think there is certainly no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. If that be the case, I have no objection to the bill, but the gentleman will recall that I was seriously opposed

Mr. MONDELL. I understand.

Mr. FERRIS. The same opposition that I felt then is even more magnified now, if that money is to be taken out of the reclamation fund and never returned to it.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it has not been intended at any time to have the bridge paid for, or any part of it paid for, out of the reclamation fund not reimbursable.

Mr. FERRIS. In the absence of an amendment?
Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is—and I think it is the opinion of the committee—that the language of the bill would justify the Reclamation Service in charging the sum up to the projects in Idaho that use the water, but under the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois there can be no question in regard to it.

Mr. FERRIS I would like to inquire if the gentleman knows how that amendment will fare in conference at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think there would be any objection to the amendment anywhere; at least, I hope there would not.

Mr. FERRIS. Was it not seriously fought last year? Mr. MANN. Last year when the matter came up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar I talked with the gentleman from Wyoming, and he was willing to accept this amendment. haps that was not known to the gentleman from Oklahoma, because I think it did not come up on the floor of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. I feel sure that it was not known to me. thought the contention was that inasmuch as the settlers had already contributed as much as they could, the general reclama-tion fund ought to contribute this. I do not agree to that, because if that were continued, the reclamation fund would soon be dissipated.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That was never the contention of anybody before the committee. The view of the committee was that under the bill as it now stands, without an amendment, this amount furnished by the reclamation fund would be paid back by the water users under that project. If there is any doubt about it, we are anxious to insert this amendment in the

Mr. FERRIS. I think this is about the only bill I ever objected to, and I want to be as cautious as I can about making any captious objection. If the proposition was to take the money from the reclamation fund and spend it so that it would not be returned, I would object to it and demand a quorum and do everything I could to defeat it, because I think that is a bad proposition.

Mr. MANN. I would follow the gentleman on that myself.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, having briefly thus explained the provisions of the bill, and I think among us cleared up the misapprehensions in regard to it, I shall not take up any further time of the committee unless there is some objection, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, if I may in my time, I would like to have the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois reported.

Mr. MANN. The amendment has not yet been offered. I read it myself, and I will read it again. It is:

Add at the end of the bill the following:
"Provided further, That the amount of the reclamation fund so used shall be charged as a part of the cost of the reclamation project or projects, the construction and development of which have caused the necessity of such project."

Mr. FERRIS. And that is acceptable to the managers of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that we have not finished the general debate on the bill as yet.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for me to be recognized on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman from Georgia is recog-

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, on this very important bill providing for a bridge across the Snake River in Jackson Hole, Wyo., the gentleman has very properly discussed an entirely germane matter, treating of the views of distinguished gentlemen as expressed in pending bills with reference to the civil service employees. The remarks of the gentleman were entertaining and very instructive.

In connection with the same subject, if I may in general debate be permitted to do so, and it will not weight down too much a very important piece of legislation that is now proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming in the pending bill, I think there should be added to it a House joint resolution, by unanimous consent, dealing with another question of equal importance to the State of Wyoming and to the country in general.

The resolution to which I make reference is one already introduced by me, providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, with the usual resolving clause, and the article is as follows:

That intermarriage between negroes or persons of color and Caucasians or any other character of persons within the United States or any territory under their jurisdiction, is forever prohibited; and the term "negro or person of color," as here employed, shall be heid to mean any and all persons of African descent or having any trace of African or negro blood.

Nothing will contribute more to the popular development and wise administration of a republican government than for the people in their legislatures to have an opportunity, by the adoption of this resolution, to provide that forever hereafter it shall be contrary to the fundamental law of the Republic for a negro or a part negro or an African or a part African to intermarry with a white person, a Caucasian, or any person of like description. The object of this resolution is to submit to the States a constitutional amendment for this purpose.

We have heard a great deal in late days about the white-slave traffic and its enormity in New York, its appalling extent in many of the great cities, particularly in Chicago, wherein it is shown that aliens from France and the more enlightened countries of Europe go to the south of Europe among the more ignorant and impoverished classes and there, under pretense of bringing these helpless girls to the United States, where they have great opportunity for employment and honest labor, transporting them, like cattle, in the holds of vessels, have them landed at Ellis Island and there buried into the slums of these cities. Thus, the innocent, ignorant, homeless, and friendless girls of other lands are brought to fair America by villainous aliens, only to find themselves in the shackles of poverty, in the toils of the libertine and most helpless depravity. It is appalling and unspeakably repulsive that such a thing under our immigration laws or other statutes can be possible in this great country. But, Mr. Chairman, as terrific and revolting as it is, it is not yet so revolting as that occurrence lately in one of the cities of our country—the city of Chicago. Not only is the white-slave traffic carried on, but a white girl of this country is made the slave of an African brute, sanctioned by the laws of the State, and that slavery solemnized by the form of a marriage The newspapers, glaring in their headlines, announce that Jack Johnson again marries a white woman. Thank God such an outrage is impossible anywhere in the Southland.

Yet we say that this is a great country, with its morals, its traditions, its virtues, and its examples, deserving to be emulated and envied by other countries of the earth. Behold, if you will, an African prizefighter-saloonkeeper, in defiance of the laws of the State of Illinois-nay, in accordance with the laws of the State of Illinois, in accordance with the municipal regulations—entering the office of a probate magistrate, calling on him to issue—"To me, Jack Johnson!"—a marriage license to wed a young American white woman, a woman of our own blood, of our own race, of our own color. When a clerk says, "But, sir, except under given rules you can not get it," forthwith the African turns to a superior and demands it, and the clerk is directed by his superior to issue to the flendish brute a legal certificate permitting a white woman in Chicago, U. S. A., to be bound in the wedlock of black slavery. To-day, Mr. Chairman, during another discussion, we have already heard something from our northern colleagues touching the slavery of the negroes of the South. No brutality, no infamy, no degredation in all the years of southern slavery possessed such villainous character and such atrocious qualities as the provision of the laws of Illinois, New York, Massachusetts, and other States which allow the marriage of the negro Jack Johnson to a woman of the Caucasian strain. [Applause.] Gentlemen, I offer this resolution that the proper committee may consider it and that the States of the Union may have an opportunity to ratify it. This is no amendment peculiarly favorable to one portion of our great land. In that section far to the south of us such is the relation between the two races that no African within all of Dixie land carries in his heart the hope or cherishes in his mind the aspiration that he can ever lead there to the altar of matrimony a woman of Caucasian blood. With all the impositions we are alleged to have placed upon this inferior race, such is our harmony, such is the fellowship between the blacks and the whites of the South, such is the black's respect for the superiority of his former master, that they would commit self-destruction before they would entertain the thought of matrimony with a white girl beneath southern skies.

*You have some negro problems up North yourselves. The negro question stands out in the example of Johnson's marriage in Chicago as presenting to you as grave a negro question as ever confronted your brethren in the South; and I say to you, in no bitterness, but in the depths of good fellowship, that we in that far-off land will be glad, in the spirit of love and fraternity, to aid you in its proper and its wise and its permanent solution. The case we cite is not an isolated one. The records of Boston, of Chicago, and of other cities show that negroes less prominent, of less notoriety, are from time to time binding themselves in matrimony with weak and unfortunate women of the white race. Gentlemen, that does not happen in the South. God spare you, our brethren of the North, of its recurrence. It does transpire in the North; it does occur in the West; and I say to you that we are ready now, without the arbitrament of war, without an appeal to arms, without a terrific four years' deluge of fratricidal blood, to join with you in peace, in harmony, and in amity in solving this great negro problem that now confronts you in the North and in the West. • Every confronts you son of the South will offer his life to lift the pall of its infamy from your homes and perish if need be to free your white girls from the accursed thralldom. We will support you in the adoption of an amendment of this character to our fundamental law. There is no place in all our southern country where a negro can not go and find employment and peaceful habitation. There are sections in the northern country and in the State of my friend from Indiana, who sits before me, where they allow no negro to stop. When one comes along seeking a place of residence or a place of abode he is advised peacefully and properly that it is not healthy there for gentlemen of his color. If this presents to you any serious problem, we will be glad to come and in peace and fraternity undertake to aid you in its solution.

My colleagues, it is a source of gratification for a Member from Dixie to observe with what better conception, with what fairer vision, with what greater intelligence you now view and appreciate the difficulties and struggles our southern people went through when we came from the crucible of war to meet and solve the negro question in the ashes of poverty. We are glad to observe your generous spirit, your conciliatory attitude, and happy we are to announce to you that in all these former belligerent States a condition of peace exists between the African and the Caucasian. The negro goes on in his accus-tomed employment, not only undisturbed, but encouraged. There is no avenue of honorable labor and honorable employment in which he has not an opportunity to go. He is unintimidated, protected by law, aided and helped in every laudable ambition, but he has known through all the generations that wedbetween him and a woman of the South was impossible, yea, more impossible than any other human undertaking to which he could aspire. He knew not only that, but he knew and realized that government and the administration of law properly belong to the white people of those States and he has acquiesced. He largely obeys the law; he is protected; he is secure and he has the fairest opportunity to-day to go forward in industrial progress and moral development that he has ever had and his opportunities for this growth and this progress in the South are superior to that of any other section of this great land. This being true, gentlemen, there comes into our hearts a yearning desire to aid you in the herculean difficulties you encounter in the northern sections of our country with respect to the negro, his relations to society, and your protection against the damning blight of his blood in the veins of your descendants. Do you propose that in all the future years the negro man who can seize upon some weak-minded woman of our race, who can infatuate her, who can over-persuade her and contract her in wedlock, do you propose that these things shall go sanctioned by laws of your States?

If the power, political or otherwise, of the African in those States is so potential, where the division between political parties may be close, that you can not solve it by State constitutional amendments or State legislation, we are ready, from the southern country, with, I apprehend, not a dissenting voice, to join you in adopting a resolution in the Congress submitting to the people of all the States a constitutional amendment that will make it impossible forever hereafter for a brutal African prizefighter to join to his name that of even a fallen American woman. [Applause.] We invite you to this grave question and its fair, nonsectional, but just consideration. Gentlemen, is it possible that in some far day in the distance—three generations, or five generations, or ten generations-is it possible that in those future years, under a legal permission of marriage between the white and the black races, that when your great-great-grandson goes to take unto himself a companion for life he will wonder and not know whether the bride for his young manhood is a pure American girl or corrupted by a strain of kinky-headed Let this condition go on if you will. It will grow; it will spread. At some day, perhaps remote, it will be a question always whether or not the solemnizing of matrimony in the North is between two descendants of our Anglo-Saxon fathers and mothers or whether it be of a mixed blood descended from the orang-utan trodden shores of far-off Africa.

Bestir yourselves for the adoption of the amendment to our Constitution which I am now discussing and which is your haven of safety and for the glory and purity of our whole country

Moreover, it is detrimental to the highest welfare of both races for such a condition to exist. I put the plain question to you, that if here in this northern city and yonder in that western city and over there in this city bordering on the Mason and Dixon line, with from time to time the journals of the country carrying news of the accomplishment of the relation of husband and wife between white and black, do you apprehend, as thoughtful men, that it will not make an impress upon the vicious element of the negro race? The permission of such a thing by a sovereign State or a republican Government is damning and a danger signal heralding an ill omen for which we can offer no excuse. We can do no greater violence, we can offer no more ill-fated injustice, to the negro in this land than to let our statutes permit him to entertain the hope that at some future time he or his offspring, or she or her offspring, may be married to a woman or a man of the white race. It will bring conflicts in the coming years-black, dark, gruesome, and bloody. Whenever, gentlemen, this condition prevails at the North to such an extent that these ideas and notions begin to creep into the heads of negroes south of the Mason and Dixon line, and whenever we have a foreign tide into the Southland of the white race unacquainted with our customs and traditions, and when they begin to bargain and contemplate matrimony between the whites and the blacks there, know you now that the result will be fraught with disaster, the consequences of which will bring annihilation to that race whom we have protected in our land for all these years. And your States that permit the intermarriage of races will bear their just share of responsibility and odium for such a condition. Are we ready for the broad practice, I ask you again, are we ready for the broad and general practice to exist in this country of intermarriage between whites and blacks? Are you prepared for it? If you are, then well and good. The South is not and never will be. If you are not, I give you warning now when these occurrences are comparatively rare-I give you warning to-day, when just now and then these horrible matrimonial contracts are made-that this is a time for the American Congress to intervene and decree that forever the dominant race in this country shall preserve its veins from even the taint of African blood.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman recall that in the debate between Douglas and Lincoln at Charleston, Ill., in 1858, Mr. Lincoln said:

I have not, am not, and never have been in favor of permitting marriage between the white and black races?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Substantially that language is correct, and it is historic. The same sentiment might be quoted from other of the leading patriots of the retreating past without regard to politics and without regard to their geographical origin or residence. Intermarriage between whites and blacks is repulsive and averse to every sentiment of pure American spirit. It is abhorrent and repugnant to the very principles of a pure Saxon government. It is subversive of social peace. It is destructive of moral supremacy, and ultimately this slavery of white women to black beasts will bring this Nation to a conflict as fatal and as bloody as ever reddened the soil Virginia or crimsoned the mountain paths of Pennsyl-It may now be but a small cloud on the western horizon, hanging over the borders of the Great Lakes around that wonderful city; it may be but the vapors apparently rising from the Atlantic above the towering smokestacks around the suburbs of the great city of New York; it may be but an hallucination around the historic and puritanic city of Boston, but if this policy is long indulged by these States and countenanced by our Federal Government permitting by law the sombre-hued, black-skinned, thick-lipped, bull-necked, brutalhearted African to walk into the office of a magistrate and demand an edict of the courts of his State, guaranteeing him legal wedlock to a white woman, if this proceed henceforth and onward, I challenge any man of wisdom and insight into the future to assert that my language portends a more calamitous culmination than a far-seeing statesman would prophesy. Let us uproot and exterminate now this debasing, ultrade-meralizing, un-American, and inhuman leprosy.

Gentlemen, you may Africanize this great country by continuing in Northern and Western States to sacrifice white women on the altar of the negroes' lustful fires, but, thank God, there are yet 13 States beneath cerulean skies that turn with yearning heart and willing hands to help you strike it down ere it curse you, and in cursing you curse us all forever [applause], and, in cursing you, lest it destroy you and destroy us altogether. No blacker incubus ever fixed its slimy claws upon the social body of this Republic than the embryonic cancer of negro marriage to white women in certain portions of our country. It even now begins to fester. No more voracious parasite ever sucked at the heart of pure society, innocent girlhood, or Caucasian motherhood than the one which welcomes and recognizes the sacred ties of wedlock between Africa and America. [Applause.]

There is no racial antipathy in this. There is no sectional arraignment here. I am glad to chronicle the fact that many States in these vast prairies to the westward and a number of these States in the hills northeastward and reaching out to New England will not permit Jack Johnson to marry the daughter of their brother. God speed the day when Illinois and her sisters may rise and put their constitutional inhibition or legal prohibition upon it! Lest that day be far off, lest the results be disastrous ere we reach it, I address an appeal to your judgment, to your Americanism, your patriotism, and your wisdom to support a constitutional amendment uprooting totally an evil of the present, thus warding off the disasters of the future. May it please honorable Members to communicate with the Committee on the Judiciary and implead the committee that they report in favor of this resolution, to be speedily acted upon in the House, that we may submit to the sovereign States an opportunity for the people's representatives there to declare that forever hereafter marriage between white man and negro or white woman and negro is prohibited by the fundamental law of this Republic. [Applause.]

And again I say to you, my brethren from all sections of the country, when we of the South are asking no appropriation for the goods that were taken years ago; when we are asking you for no access to the Treasury; when we are submitting to you a problem of the intermarriage between the races, which is unknown in our Southland—again I say to you that there is not a flag or a coat of arms south of Mason and Dixon's line that is not ready now, in peace and in unbroken phalanx, to join the Members from New England, to join the Members from the Mississippi Basin and the valleys below, to join the gentlemen from the Great Lakes and the prairies far to the westward in fixing in the Constitution of our country a provision that shall forever give us undefiled homes, a pure manhood, an uncorrupted womanhood. Do this and, secure in the bonds of brotherhood, we will go forward and onward, living, loving, marrying, and multiplying under the protection of a Government worthy of the sacrifices that Washington and his Colonial armies made to give it existence and establish it, and worthy of the wisdom and the patriotism that Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Lincoln, and the patriotism that Jenerson, Mathson, Jackson, Lincoln, and the others bestowed that it might be preserved to us and our posterity in perpetuity forever. [Applause.]

I had not intended to discuss this question just now, but it being apparent from the proceedings that Calendar Wednesday would be consumed entirely with the discussion of a little bill dealing with $18,000 for a bridge across Snake River, around Jacksons Hole, in Wyoming, and regarding the question of supremacy of American manhood, of the unsullied purity of the blood of American womanhood as at least of equal dignity with Snake River, or Johnsons Hole, in Wyoming, we have ventured to make these few brief and impromptu observations. [Ap-

Why, gentlemen, while you are dealing with Snake River the black vulture is gnawing at the vitals of the integrity, and love, and purity of American homes. While you are attempting the appropriation of $18,000 to construct a bridge over Jacksons Hole, in the ruts and hills of Wyoming, the brutal hand of Africa's son is laid about the throat of woman's hope in free America. [Applause.] Therefore I thank the committee for its indulgence while we make these remarks touching what we regard a most serious problem. If strength permitted, with your close attention and with that extreme courtesy that you have shown, we would extend our remarks at a greater length on this important subject. At some future time we trust again, in conjunction with other Members, to undertake to impress the vitality and momentousness of this proposition upon the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to address the committee on the bill, I will ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-FOGLE] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose the gentleman means to intimate that the last speech drove the Members out of the Hall so that there are not even 100 members of the committee present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ascertains by counting that there are 70 Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name. The Clerk called the name of Mr. Clark of Missouri, and he answered "Present."

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, when 228 Members, a quorum, had responded to their names, and that he reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo., with Mr. Saunders in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the form of a substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the amendment in the form of a substitute be read instead of the original bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill is very short. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas in the administration of the act of June 17, 1902, "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," the United States Reclamation Service has constructed at the outlet of Jackson Lake, Wyo., and the source of the Snake River a retaining storage dam; and Whereas the use of this dam to store the flood waters of Jackson Lake and the Snake River watershed and the release of the surplus waters thus stored into the channel of the Snake River for utilization in irrigating lands upon lower levels maintains high water in the Snake River at all periods of the year; and Whereas through the maintenance of high water the Snake River, previously fordable for parts of each year, in its course through the Jackson Hole region is now rendered unfordable at all times, and the residents of that region, upward of 1,000 in number, are cut off from railroad and other communication for freight and travel: Therefore:

fore:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, through the engineer officer in charge of road and bridge construction and maintenance in the Yellowstone National Park, for the construction of a bridge across Snake River, at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyoming, to be determined with a view of best serving the public travel through Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming and Idaho: Provided, That the local authorities shall cause the approaches to the proposed bridge to be constructed without expense to the United States: And provided further, That the local authorities shall provide for the maintenance and repair of the proposed bridge after it is constructed.

The Clerk read the following amendment, recommended by the committee:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use such portion of the reclamation fund, not to exceed $18,000, and in no event more than one-half the sum that may be necessary for the construction of a bridge across Snake River at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyoming, to be determined by the Reclamation Service, with the view of best serving the people of Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming: Provided, That no part of the funds herein authorized to be used, except such as may be necessary for the making of examinations and estimates, shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained, from the proper local authorities, satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said local authorities of one-half of the cost of said bridge; and that the said local authorities assume full responsibility for and will at all times maintain and repair the said bridge and approaches thereto."

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following: "Provided further, That the amount of the reclamation fund so used shall be charged as a part of the fost of the reclamation project or projects the construction and development of which have caused the necessity of such project."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River in Jackson Hole, Wyo., and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was stricken out.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.
On motion of Mr. Smith of Texas, the bill H. R. 21171, a similar House bill, was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Texas any further business from his committee?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have one more bill, which we design to take up next Calendar Wednesday. move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 12, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment which I at the proper time expect to propose to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], incorporating what are known as the French spoliation claims into the omnibus claims bill. The amendment which I propose strikes from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts the claims so far as they ask for the reimbursement of insurance premiums and also freight earnings. Necessarily it is a long amendment. I desire to offer it now so that it may be printed and lie on the fable, to be presented in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be received and ordered printed, as requested by the Senator from South Dakota.

STATUE OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a resolution to appoint a committee of eight to participate in St. Louis on April 30, 1913, in the unveiling of a statue which has been erected there to Thomas Jefferson. The statue is to be unveiled there upon the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the signing of the treaty for the purchase of Louisiana, with the vast expanse of territory included in it.

The St. Louis Exposition had some funds left, which were contributed by the Federal Government toward aiding in the erection of this statue. By private subscription a fund has been raised amounting to $450,000 for the erection of an appropriate statue of Thomas Jefferson. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. thinks that the Government should be represented upon this interesting occasion. A joint resolution has been introduced in the House of Representatives, at the request of the president of the exposition company and the trustees who have had this fund and the erection of the statue in charge, appointing a committee of eight by the House of Representatives. It seems to me that a committee of eight should be appointed by the Senate also to be present upon that occasion and to show the interest of the Senate in this splendid tribute to this great American statesman.

In pursuance of that view, which is concurred in by the president of the exposition company and by the trustees who have had the erection of the monument in charge, I introduce a resolution which provides for eight Members as a committee of the Senate to be present at these interesting ceremonies. I have thought it proper that the two Presidents pro tempore of the Senate who have been heretofore exercising this office should be named—the present President pro tempore, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger]. I have thought it proper that the Senator from New York [Mr. Root], who is chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions, to which the resolution should be referred, should be a member. I have thought it proper that there should be another from the old 13 States, and that the State of Virginia, the birthplace of Thomas Jefferson, should also be represented, and I have named as a member of the committee the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. It is thought that four from the territory that was acquired should be named, and I have named the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and it is thought that it is but proper that the two Senators from Missouri should be there as representing a part of the territory to extend proper courtesy to visiting committees, and so Senators REED and STONE have been named as members of the committee.

These suggestions were made by the president of the exposition company and the trustees in conference with Members of the House and the Senate. I introduce the resolution and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read and then referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 407) was read, as follows:

The resolution (S. Res. 407) was read, as follows:

Whereas the president of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. has informed the Senate that with the approval of Congress, as expressed by an act of March 4, 1909, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition has erected upon the site of the world's fair in the city of St. Louis a memorial to Thomas Jefferson, at a cost of $450,000, in commemoration of the acquisition of the Louisiana Territory; and Whereas this statue of Mr. Jefferson is to be unveiled and dedicated on the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the signing of the Louisiana purchase treaty, the 30th of April, 1913; and Whereas the trustees in charge of this great memorial have, through the president of the exposition company, requested the presence of a committee of the United States Senate to participate in the dedicatory services on the day named: Therefore be it

*Resolved. That a committee of Senators, to be composed of Mr.

Resolved, That a committee of Senators, to be composed of Mr. Root of New York, chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions; Mr. Bacon of Georgia and Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire, the Presidents pro tempore of the Senate; Mr. Martin of Virginia, Mr. Cummins of Iowa, Mr. Reed of Missouri, Mr. Nelson of Minnesota, and Mr. Stone of Missouri, be appointed to attend and represent the Senate in the unveiling and dedication of said memorial.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator that we had as well pass the resolution now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if there is no objection I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire if it calls for an expenditure of money?

Mr. SWANSON. I presume it will involve an expenditure. Mr. BRISTOW. Then, it ought to go to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. It must, under the law.

Mr. BRISTOW. It must go there.
Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then, it must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no provision about money in the resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no provision about money in it. Mr. CULLOM. Then we might as well pass it. Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from Kansas objects, it must necessarily go to the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the resolution does not make an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.
Mr. CULBERSON. It is not necessary to refer it, then.
Mr. LODGE. Does it make a charge on the contingent fund? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. STONE. I think the resolution had better be referred. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the committee.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Did the Chair indicate to what committee it should be referred? I did not catch that part to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If the policy of passing it at all is to be considered, I presume the Committee on Industrial Expositions would be the committee to which it should be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri suggests that it should be referred. Of course, one objection would necessitate a reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no provision in the resolution for an expenditure. Mr. CULLOM. None at all. What.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then it should go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

COMMERCIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. NELSON. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 406) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to furnish to the Senate not later than February 15, 1913, a list of National, State, and local commercial organizations, also National, State, and local agricultural associations, and that 1,500 copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a word of explanation in reference to the resolution.

In 1906 Senator Frye secured the passage of a resolution of this kind calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish the information, which the Interstate Commerce Commission did furnish. The other day I introduced a resolution similar to that of Senator Frye, calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish similar information to that which it did in 1907. I have ascertained that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not kept up the data since that time, but that all the data is now in the possession of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who can readily furnish it without any trouble, while the Interstate Commerce Commission is not in the shape it was then.

I therefore ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 19115, known as the omnibus claims bill

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], which will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add, at the end of section 1, the following items:

Velma C. Williams, administrator of the estate of Paul Curtis, $4,128.39. George T. Sampson, survivor of the firm of George T. and Augustus Sampson, $4,015.38.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I stated yesterday the general character of these claims, based on awards of the Selfridge Board, and I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything further in regard to them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts and one or two other amendments of the same character growing out of the same condi-tions were proposed and printed and referred to the Committee on Claims during the last session of Congress. These amend-ments or claims which they describe were carefully examined and the committee declined to accept them or incorporate them into the bill.

The Senator from Massachusetts in his remarks yesterday and in what he has said this morning refers to the findings of what is known as the Selfridge Board as an award. I do not understand that they can be called an award. These claims grew out of contracts between certain companies and individuals and the Government that were in execution during the Civil War. They were, I think all of them, connected with contracts for building paddle-wheel and side-wheel boats to act as auxiliary boats in connection with the Navy.

There is no pretense whatever that there was any violation Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As to the character of the reference, if it calls for an expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate it must, under the statute, be referred but in addition to that they allowed considerable sums of money to contractors for extras for things that were shown to have been done or furnished that were not required under the contract, and the Government paid for those.

It appeared after the war was over that these contractors had lost money. Well, many a contractor with the Government, I presume, has made money, and many a contractor who erred in his judgment about the conditions and costs has lost money. One of the claims made by these people was that after they entered into these contracts, and in the execution of the work under them the cost of the labor and the cost of the materials increased, and as an incident to that increase in cost they had to pay more for labor and materials than they contemplated originally, and that, consequently, they lost money.

All that was done upon which it is claimed an award was made was that in 1865, about the close of the war, a board was created, of which Admiral Selfridge was the chairman, called the Selfridge Board. All in the world this board undertook to do was to inquire into the question of whether or not these contractors did lose money, and if the board found that they had lost money or claimed to have lost money, they reported to Congress the amount of their loss. That is all this inquiry was for, that was the scope fixed by the act for the inquiry to ascertain whether or not the contractors lost money, and if so, how much—nothing more. There was no authority to make an award which would be in the nature of a legal liability against the Government of the United States; there was absolutely nothing of that sort.

The Selfridge Board investigated these several claims and found that these contractors lost such and such sums of money, not that the Government had violated in any degree its contract with them, not that the Government had failed in a single iota to pay its legal obligation to them not only for the work done under the original contract but in the way of recompensing them for the extras furnished. That was found to have been the fact; but the board found that the contractors had lost money. If we appropriate money to pay for the misfortunes of contractors who lost money in executing contracts, our obligation will extend to more people than those included within the findings of the Selfridge Board. Here in recent years, down as late as 1902, and some later than 1902, these claims were sent over to the Court of Claims by resolution of Congress in con-nection with bills. What did the Court of Claims do with them? The Court of Claims did nothing more than simply to recite the original creation of the board, the execution of the contract, and incorporate the findings of the Selfridge Board; The Court of Claims has, in other words, added that is all. nothing to what we knew before the claim was sent there, because they have simply recited the proceedings of the Selfridge Board.

I want to call attention, now, to another thing. It is incidental, and it in no way reflects upon the claims offered by the I want to call attention, now, to another thing. It is inclental, and it in no way reflects upon the claims offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Loose], but it shows how advantage is taken of the Government whenever there is any opportunity to do it. In one of these claims, that of the Portland company, of Portland, Me., they got in some way an appropriation them into one of the general appropriation bills and got it through Congress, appropriating some $80,000 to pay that company, and Congress put an express provision into the bill or into the appropriation that it should only be paid upon the execution of a release of the claim in full. How they got the appropriation through I do not know; but they did. It had however, as I have stated, the condition attached to it that it should only be paid upon the execution of a release by the calmants of the claim in full. They drew the money and executed a release, and now here is an amendment pending where these people are asking that we give them the other 20 per cent. It is another evidence of the wonderful energy and the lack of anything like modesty on the part either of the claimants or the attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent in the face of an absolute release of the claim. The attorneys who have pushed the matter of trying to get another? 20 per cent after executing that release. I say t

I knew it had at one time been pending before the Committee on Claims, but I had the impression that it had not been reported or that if acted on at all the action had been adverse. I must say, however, that when I went to my committee room and had the matter looked up I found that there had been a favorable report at the last session of Congress made on that bill by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley], and that it had passed this body. I only state that to put myself right before the Senate. I do not know that I was wrong. I simply did not remember the bill having been acted upon; but so that the Senate may know the actual facts in relation to it—that is, that it was reported favorably from the Committee on Claims and passed the Senate last spring-I now make the statement. The Senator from New York is not here. If that amendment proposed by him may await his return, I think we may then submit it to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a small longevity claim, which I submit as an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed, on page 232, after line 9, to insert:

To John M. Wilson, of Washington, $3,493.25.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the findings of the Court of Claims in this case are unqualified, showing that this money, is due Gen. Wilson. I ask that the findings may be inserted in the RECORD if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that for the period of his cadetship?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then it is absolutely within the class of the other claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it is. Mr. CRAWFORD. And it may go in the bill. I ask that the findings in the case may be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have asked that they be printed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection. The matter referred to is as follows:

[Court of Claims. Congressional, No. 15513. John M. Wilson v. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

The following bill was referred to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 3d day of August, 1911, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act:

"[H. R. 13057, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

"A bill for the relief of John M. Wilson, United States Army, retired.

"* * the actual time of service in the Army and Navy, or both, shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay." (Act of Feb. 24, 1881; 21 Stat. L., p. 346.)

In the settlement of claimant's accounts, the acounting officers of the Treasury did not count his service at the Military Academy from July 1, 1855, to July 1, 1860, in computing his longevity pay and allowances for services prior to February 24, 1881.

That upon the construction of the act of July 5, 1838, by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of United States against Watson (130 U. S., 80), application was made to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for a settlement of the longevity pay and allowances due the claimant in accordance with said decision, and, under the rulings then in force, said claim was disallowed December 22, 1890.

That upon the revocation of the ruling of the comptroller that service as a cadet could not be counted in computing longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881, May 18, 1908, claimant made application to the accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement of the longevity pay and allowances due under the act of July 5, 1838, but, October 20, 1909, the Auditor for the War Department refused to reconsider the settlement of 1890.

That by this action of the accounting officers there has been withheld from the claimant the sum of $3,500, which is justly due.

That this claim has not been paid, assigned, or transferred, in whole or in part, and that claimant has all his life been loyal to the Government of the United States.

The court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gal-LINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer as an amendment to the bill an amendment covering what are known as the French spollation claims. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford], I understand, has this morning presented certain amendments to my amendment, and asked that they be printed. Of course, I do not know that I have any objection to those amendments, and very likely I shall accept them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that in doing so I was not acting as the representative of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply offered, as a Member of the Senate, an amendment intended to be proposed to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Until those amendments are printed and before the Senate it is impossible to deal with this amendment comprehensively or intelligently. I should like to say, Mr. President, that I have no desire to delay the Senate by a protracted discussion of this question, which is a large one and which has been discussed many times. Of course, if it is to be debated, I shall try to make the best case I can for it, and I think it is a very strong one, but I should like to have the amendment read. It could be read to-day and then go over until the morning, by which time the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be printed. I send the amendment to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of section the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to claimants named in this act the several sums appropriated herein, the same being in full for and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final release and discharge of their respective claims, namely:

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

To pay the findings of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885; Provided, That in all cases where the original sufferers were adjudicated bankrupts the awards shall be made on behalf of the next of kin instead of to assignees in bankruptcy, and that awards in the cases of individual claimants shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the personal representatives on whose behalf the awards are made represent the next of kin, and the courts which granted the administrations, respectively, shall have certified that the legal representatives have given adequate security for the legal disbursements of the awards, namely:

Mr. President, as the amendment to the amendment, proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWhas gone over and is to be printed, I ask that the amendment which has been read may go over until to-morrow. understand there are one or two other amendments to be offered, and there will be opportunity to offer them now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair).

The amendment will go over.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice some days since that I would seek to amend the bill under consideration by inserting, under the heading "New York," the following:

To Dean Sage, executor of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, the sum of $5,335.71.

The facts upon which this claim is based are substantially these: Some time previous to the 30th of March, 1869, the decedent, one Backman, was the owner of 1,904 barrels of distilled spirits, then in bond in the thirty-second district of New On the 30th day of March and the 7th day of April that year he made formal application for the immediate withdrawal of the same for consumption, but, owing to the fact that the collector of internal revenue for that district was unable to furnish the internal-revenue stamps necessary to be affixed upon the payment of the tax, none of the spirits was inspected or withdrawn until subsequent to April 14 of that year. The amount of the tax paid was $45,000.

At the time that Backman withdrew the spirits he tendered to the collector of internal revenue the aggregate sum of $40,000, the amount which he conceded to be due after making the usual allowance for leakage. This claim grows out of a dispute as to whether he should be allowed the $5,000 which he paid under protest, which he claimed was the amount exacted from him because of the failure to allow him for leakage. Previous to the date that I speak of-April 14, 1869-it had always been the custom to make an allowance for leakage, but on that day, by order, the custom was changed.

From time to time since then an effort has been made to have this $5,000 refunded. A bill for that purpose has been before the House at different times and was favorably reported almost 20 years ago, in the session of 1892. I have a letter here, under date of August 10 of this year, over the signature of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in which he states:

I am aware of no reason why this bill should not pass, and am of opinion that it should be enacted.

It is also stated that from time to time bills have passed the Senate on precisely similar facts. If that record be correct, there would seem to be no just reason for withholding the relief asked for in this case.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, this amendment was offered during the last session and referred to the Committee on Claims. An investigation of it was made, and the decision of the committee was adverse to incorporating it into the bill. It was not in the bill as it passed the other House. The House committee, having gone through all of these Court of Claims reports and gathered together such as they thought were entitled to recognition, passed their bill and omitted this claim. The Senate Committee on Claims, after investigating this claim, decided against putting it in the bill in the form of an amendment. Now, I understand from the papers which have been presented to me since the Senate committee made its report that it is claimed that there are precedents for allowing this appropriation, in that similar claims have been provided for by appropriation.

Mr. President, the only claims of this character which have been allowed by Congress are the claims which were included in an appropriation act approved July 26, 1886, passed for the relief of Richard T. Ridgway and others. That legislation was successful as legislation in behalf of claims is sometimes successful apparently because it went through under the prestige of a claim that it had been sustained by a decision of the Court of Claims. In the correspondence handed to me by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], coming from the attorney who now presents this claim, the Ridgway case is cited as a reason why this amendment should be allowed, and a citation is made of the decision of the Court of Claims, found in volume 18, on page 707, to sustain that position. When I turned to the decision in volume 18, Court of Claims Reports, of the case of Richard C. Ridgway against the United States, I find that the decision was against Mr. Ridgway. I will only call attention to the closing paragraph, found on page 715:

In the present case the claimant has no such credit on the records of the Internal Revenue Bureau, since the allowance first certified to had been reconsidered when this action was commenced, and his claim has been rejected.

He has therefore no cause of action, and his petition must be dismissed, and judgment will be so entered. Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator allow an inquiry as to why provision was notwithstanding made in an appropriation act after the Court of Claims had rejected the claim?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can only make answer to that in this way: That Congress was probably deceived by just such statements as occur in the letter that was referred to me, where the Ridgway case is pointed to as a precedent for allowing this amendment, where counsel refers as authority for the allowance in this case to the Ridgway decision in the Court of Claims, leaving the impression that the decision of that court was favorable when it was adverse. That is the way Congress gets entrapped into allowing such claims as this.

Now, let me call attention to this statute. The statute which was under construction was approved July 20, 1868, and it was a new provision in relation to the internal tax upon spirits in warehouses. It fixed the tax at 50 cents-on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller or owner or person having possession before he should remove it from the distillery warehouse. The act provided:

And the tax on such spirits shall be collected on the whole number of gauge or wine gallons when below proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of proof spirit as defined in this act.

Before that act was passed there had been a practice in the customhouse offices of making an estimate when liquors were being withdrawn from warehouse as to how much had been lost through leakage or evaporation; and there was a rule fixed, which had been followed, of making a certain reduction in the amount of tax collected based upon the estimate of this evaporation and leakage. That ran on until April 14, after this law was passed, when this new law had been referred to the Attorney General of the United States and he gave an opinion that there was no right or authority to allow this reduction. So the department issued an order that after April 14 the tax should be collected on all of the spirits withdrawn according to cask measurement, and that such a reduction should not be allowed.

This claimant, Mr. Backman, made a tender of the amount which he would have paid under the old rule, and the internalrevenue collector refused to accept it; he would not permit him to withdraw these spirits unless he paid the full amount of the tax, because it was after the order went into effect on the 14th of April. Because there had been a rule which allowed this discount for evaporation and leakage before that time under this act before it had been construed, he made the claim that they should refund to him this five thousand and odd dollars which he was required to pay. He presented his claim to the Auditor for the Treasury Department and it was rejected. That was away back in 1869. Nothing was done from that time on down to the Fifty-second Congress, when the first bill was introduced.

I ask that the amendment be allowed to remain as a pending amendment, and that we resume consideration of the bill to-morrow after the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that owing to the continued illness of my colleague [Mr. Dillingham], he is unable to be present in the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] is engaged in public business upon the committee investigating the Soldiers' Home in California, and has been so engaged since the beginning of this session of Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I have answered to my name, but I desire at this point to incorporate in the RECORD the statement that I have been absent for several days on account of sickness.

Mr. GARDNER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Johnson of Maine] is detained necessarily from the Chamber for a short time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on committee work for the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 58 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3047) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a oncurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, 1912, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock m. on Thursday, January 2, 1913, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeach-

The Secretary read the Journal of Wednesday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like William E. Lamb called as the next witness.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM E. LAMB.

William E. Lamb, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Give your full name to the Reporter.—A. William E. Lamb.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Chicago. Q. How old are you?—A. Forty-two years old.

Q. What business, occupation, or profession have you?—A. I am engaged in the practice of the law.

Q. How long have you been a practicing attorney?-A. A little over 18 years.

Q. Have you been connected with the Government of the United States in your professional capacity?—A. From October 19, 1907, until January 1, 1911, I was an attorney for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Q. As such attorney, Mr. Lamb, did you take part in the trial of the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. I did.

Q. Were you in that case from its beginning?—A. I assume that you mean the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., which was transferred from the Circuit Court of the Western District of Kentucky to the Commerce Court?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. I was.

Q. You participated in the taking of evidence?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And you were attorney of record before the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. No, sir; I was not. I simply represented the commission after the commission's order was entered and the Louisville & Nashville brought suit in the western district of Kentucky to enjoin the commission's order.

Q. Briefly, that case was originated by a complaint made before the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. It involved three complaints filed by the New Orleans Board of Trade, of New Orleans, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.

Q. Before the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Who represented the New Orleans Board of Trade in that proceeding?—A. Before the commission?

Q. Yes .- A. I think John A. Smith, the traffic director of the board of trade.

Q. After the commission had made its order the Louisville Nashville Railroad commenced an action in the circuit court?-A. It commenced an action in the circuit court of the western district of Kentucky, asking for a temporary injunction to restrain the order of the commission.

Q. When the Commerce Court was provided for by law, by the operation of the law that case was transferred to the Commerce Court?-A. Yes, sir. The case had not been finally submitted in the circuit court, and therefore under the law it was transferred.

Q. Before the circuit court and also before the Commerce Court you were the attorney for the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. Yes, sir. I may add that in the circuit court, as the law then existed, I appeared as special assistant to the Attorney General, as the Department of Justice then had control of those cases.

Q. In the Commerce Court, where the case was determined, you were the only attorney of record representing the Government or the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A. I was the sole attorney representing the Interstate Commerce Commission, and my recollection is not clear at this time, but since thinking it over it is my impression that Blackburn Esterline and James A. Fowler filed a brief for the Government, for the United States.

Q. In that case?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Mr. Lamb, do you remember when that case was finally submitted to the Commerce Court?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know when it was finally determined-judgment rendered?-A. It is my recollection that the opinion in the case was announced at the April, 1912, session of the court, and the opinion, as filed that day, I think, bore date February 28, 1912. Q. When was it submitted?—A. It was submitted at the April, 1911, term of the court.

Q. About 11 months elapsed after it had been submitted before it was determined?—A. Approximately 12 months had elapsed from its submission until the time that the opinion of the court was finally filed.

I am not trying to get the definite time, but approximately?-A. I should say about 12 months after its submission, before the opinion of the court was filed.

Q. From the time it was submitted in the Commerce Court up to the time it was decided, did you know of any correspondence that was going on between Helm Bruce, the attorney representing the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., and Judge Archbald, one of the members of the Commerce Court?—A. I had no knowledge of any such correspondence.

Q. When did you first learn that such correspondence had taken place?-A. From the newspaper reports of the proceedings before the House Judiciary Committee.

Q. It was not until after this investigation had commenced?-

A. I never heard of it until that time.

Q. I will call your attention particularly to United States Senate Exhibit No. 58 and United States Senate Exhibit No. 59, Exhibit No. 58 being a letter written by Judge Archbald on board a houseboat on the Indian River, Fla., dated January 10, 1912, it being addressed to Helm Bruce, and Exhibit No. 59 being the reply made by Helm Bruce, dated January 24, 1912. A. I have not had occasion to examine any of those exhibits and never have had an opportunity to examine them, but I can only say that I never knew of any correspondence between Mr. Bruce and Judge Archbald relative to this case,

Q. You had no notice from any source that after the case had been submitted, and before it was determined, an argument had been made in writing by Mr. Bruce, at the request of Judge Archbald?-A. I knew nothing of that and never had heard of such a thing until I saw in the newspapers the account as testified before the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You were about to say that there were three matters really in issue in that case. Will you tell us what they were?—A. I said there were three complaints filed before the Interstate Commerce Commission by the New Orleans Board of Trade. One complaint assailed the reasonableness of the class rates and some commodity rates from New Orleans to Mobile; another complaint, the reasonablness of class rates and certain commodity rates from New Orleans to Pensacola; and the third concerned the reasonableness of the class rates and commodity rates from New Orleans to Montgomery, Ala.

Q. In point of fact, when the Interstate Commerce Commission decided it, they only decided the question of class rates

A. That is all,

Q. And left the question of commodity rates open ?- A. Yes.

Q. And it was in that shape when the petition was filed in the Commerce Court by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.?-A. The commission's order involved only class rates and the application to enjoin and set aside the order was based solely on those class rates.

In point of fact, also, before the Commerce Court, the contention that was made by you in behalf of the United States and by the Interstate Commerce Commission was that the Commerce Court had no power whatsoever to review the findings of fact of the Interstate Commerce Commission?-A. I believe that was one of the contentions. I will qualify that by saying that I never did contend that they did not have a right to see whether or not there was any substantial proof before the commission. I simply said that, based on the facts as shown before the Commission, they had no right to determine the credibility and weight to be given to the testimony and to review and set aside the findings of fact.

Q. The distinction which I understand you to make is that if there was any disputable evidence from which the fact could be found, the Commerce Court's hands were powerless to consider the matter further?-A. Yes; that is my contention.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. Thank you.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I would like to call John A. Smith as a witness. As far as we are concerned Mr. Lamb may be discharged.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. No; Mr. Worthington informed me yesterday that he desired to interrogate this witness in regard to a letter addressed by Mr. Helm Bruce to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and requested me to have that letter in the Senate this morning. I have not been able to find it as yet, but I hope to produce it in a little while, and will produce it if I can find it; and then, Mr. Worthington informed me, he desires to ask this witness some question. We do not know whether that letter is admissible or not, but that question will be raised, if we see proper to raise it, when the letter is offered.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I would like to suggest to Brother Worthington that this particular count was taken up a little out of its order in order to accommodate Mr. Lamb as much as anything else, because he has very important business in Philadelphia and it is quite necessary that he get away if possible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want to say that the letter to which reference has been made is not, as Mr. CLAYTON recollects, a letter addressed to him, but a letter addressed to me when the hearings before the Judiciary Committee were going on, and I turned it over to the committee.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I stand corrected, Mr. President. Mr. WORTHINGTON. And also, that I did not mean to say that we proposed to cross-examine Mr. Lamb in reference to what was in that letter; but that I wanted to see that letter before we determine whether we want to further cross-examine I am informed that the letter will be here in a few moments, and then we will let Mr. Lamb know whether we want to ask him any questions. It is highly improbable that we will want to do so.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Call John A. Smith.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN A. SMITH.

John A. Smith, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Where do you reside?-A. New Orleans.

Q. What is your business?-A. Freight commissioner of the New Orleans Board of Trade.

Are you acquainted with the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was pending in the circuit court and transferred to the Commerce Court at the time of the passage of the law creating the Commerce Court?-A. I am.

Q. Representing the New Orleans Board of Trade, as I understand, you originated that case originally?-A. I did.

Q. Did you appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission when that case was argued and tried there?-A. I represented the New Orleans Board of Trade in the trial of that case at New Orleans and at Montgomery, Ala. The trial of the case was not completed at New Orleans and the commission adjourned to Montgomery, Ala., having cases there; and after the completion of those cases they again took up the case of the New Orleans Board of Trade versus the Louisville & Nashville Co. and completed that case.

Q. You filed a brief in the case before the Interstate Commerce Commission ?- A. I did.

Q. After the case was finally submitted in the Commerce Court, and before it was decided, did you have any notice from anyone of any correspondence between Judge Archbald, a member of that court, and Helm Bruce, the attorney who represented the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.?-A. I did not.

Q. You had no notice of any argument that was made by Mr. Bruce, at the request of Judge Archbald, during that time?-A.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. You can take the witness, gentlemen. Cross-examination:

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) Are you an attorney?-A. I am not. Q. Did the New Orleans Board of Trade appear at all as either parties or intervenors in the proceedings in the Commerce Court?-A. They did not. We did not do so because the law requires that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall prosecute its own cases.

Q. In point of fact, the Interstate Commerce Commission appeared by their counsel and did defend the case?-A. They did, and so did the Department of Justice.

Q. But you never represented either the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir. Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. Thank you.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire.

Do you wish the witness retained?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We do not, Mr. President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Nor do we.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not expect to produce any other witnesses on this, but the evidence of Mr. Lamb was that there was another firm engaged, and we may want to call them later. They are not in waiting, however, and have not been subpensed, but are in the city. We may want to call them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I might, in this connection, call attention to a sentence in the answer relating to this article:

He admits that, in so far as he was aware, the fact that either of said letters was so written was not made known to the Interstate Commerce Commission or its attorneys at the time it was so written.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I suppose it can be admitted that this firm of attorneys mentioned by Mr. Lamb had no notice

WORTHINGTON. It is admitted. We supposed we admitted that in the answer.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We understood that it was admitted in the answer, but we felt it our duty to bring this witness in order that Senators might avail themselves of the opportunity to submit any questions; and unless the Senate desires to do that, we will not have these other witnesses called. the Senate desires them called, however, they are in the city, and we can call them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be necessary, unless some Senator indicates a wish for it.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We desire to offer a telegram which I will ask to have marked as an exhibit and read in evidence at this point.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will state that we admit it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 62.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 6, 1911.

George M. Watson, Esq., East Stroudsburg, Pa.:

Almost any time you wish.

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We desire to recall Mr. C. G. Boland at this point The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be produced.

CHRISTOPHER G. BOLAND-RECALLED.

Christopher G. Boland, having been previously sworn, appeared.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President. I am instructed by the managers on the part of the House to repeat to Mr. Boland the question that I propounded to him the other day and to further insist upon its admissibility.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. At what page? Mr. Manager FLOYD. Page 364. Mr. SIMPSON. We renew our objection, Mr. President. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will first be propounded. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Shall I proceed?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Wait until I find it. Mr. Manager FLOYD. It is on page 364, near the bottom of

Mr. WORTHINGTON. All right.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Now, Mr. Boland, I will ask you to state whether or not during the course of these negotiations you had any conversations with Mr. Watson relative to Judge Archbald's interest or participation in this settlement, and particularly as to whether he was to share in the fee or receive any money or other pecuniary consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement?

Mr. SIMPSON. We renew the objection which was made, sir. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, I desire to state briefly

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the manager allow the stenographer to write the question out and hand it to the Chair?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I desire to state briefly and as nearly as I can the position of the managers in regard to this testi-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the indulgence of the manager for a moment. Is it in words identically the same question which was propounded before?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Yes, sir; I read it from the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. Proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. Proceed.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, Judge Archbald is charged in these articles of impeachment with misbehavior in office, and it is our contention that any facts or circumstances pertaining to his conduct that are calculated to bring his office into disrepute or to scandalize that office are admissible, provided we have connected him in any way with such a transaction.

Now, we have shown by the testimony of Mr. Boland, the witness on the stand, that he entered into negotiations with one George Watson to settle the disputes between his company, the Marian Coal Co., and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railway on a basis of $100,000, and if he could settle the controversy for that amount he, the said Watson, was to receive $5,000 as a fee for his services.

We have shown that within a short time thereafter Mr. Boland was called to the office of Judge Archbald in the Federal building in Scranton and Mr. Watson was present, and it was stated by Mr. Watson, in the judge's presence, that Judge Archbald had agreed to assist him in bringing about these negotiations. It was stated by Judge Archbald, in Mr. Boland's presence, that he had agreed to assist Mr. Watson, and that he would do everything in his power to assist him in the matter, and that at that time, or on a subsequent occasion very shortly thereafter, Judge Archbald had called up Mr. Loomis's office over the telephone with a view of getting in touch with Mr. Loomis, the vice president of the railroad company.

This evidence was before the Senate when we submitted the question before, but since this evidence was submitted we have produced other and further testimony connecting Judge Archbald with this transaction. We have shown by the testimony of Mr. Loomis that the first man who ever approached the railroad people in regard to this transaction was Judge Archbald himself; that he met Mr. Loomis upon the streets of Scranton and brought up a conversation about the difficulties and the controversy between the Marian Coal Co. and the railroad company, and suggested that they ought to have a settlement outside of court. Loomis replied that they would gladly settle their disputes outside of court whenever they could on a fair basis.

Then it is in testimony by Mr. Loomis that Judge Archbald told him that if he would see Attorney Watson, Mr. Watson was in a position to settle that controversy on a fair basis. Loomis immediately took up that matter and investigated it, submitting it first to Mr. Rine, then to Mr. Phillips, both officials of the railroad, and they reported adversely to it. Mr. Loomis reported adversely to it.

Then we find that Mr. Watson, the associate and partner of the judge, makes an appeal to Mr. Loomis to have an interview and a conference with the president of the railroad company. That letter was written on the 2d of October. We find that on the day following Judge Archbald writes a letter calling attention to the fact that he understands that the proposition has been made to take the matter up further with Mr. Loomis and possibly with Mr. Truesdale, and that he thinks it is a good idea and that he hopes that a settlement may be effected; that there is nothing like a personal interview in effecting a settlement.

Then immediately following that, on October 5, is the conference in which it is shown that Mr. Watson appeared and submitted a proposition, not of $100,000, the amount that the Bolands had agreed to take on settlement, but a proposition of $161,000, and that was turned down by Mr. Truesdale, the president of the railroad company.

Then we show that immediately, on the 6th, Mr. Watson telegraphed to Judge Archbald that he will meet him in Washington the next day. Judge Archbald replies on the 7th that he can meet him almost any time he wants to. further telegraphs that he will be at the Raleigh Hotel at 1.30 o'clock on that day.

Now, Mr. President, we submit that we have so connected Judge Archbald with this transaction that he is shown to be an associate or partner in the common purpose of bringing about this settlement, and when we have done that we contend that under the plain rules of law we are entitled to prove anything that either of those parties did during the course of those negotiations and anything that either of them said with reference to that transaction.

Upon that ground we insist that this testimony is admissible. Now, Mr. President, I desire that my associate manager, Mr. STERLING, may be heard briefly.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if I may interpose just a moment, we had supposed this matter was concluded-

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President— Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is not to reply to anyone, but to ask that the matter may go over for the present.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I beg pardon.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We had supposed the matter was at an end, and we are called upon to reply to authorities which were produced here the other day, to show under what circumstances the declaration by one of several alleged conspirators could be introduced in evidence against another, and what is the rule limiting the extent of those declarations. Since the manager has considered this a matter of so much importance, and especially in view of the fact that Mr. Watson is so ill he can not come here, we should like the argument or debate to go over until to-morrow morning, when we will be prepared to discuss it upon the authorities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that suggestion agreeable to the managers'

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I say to-morrow morning; I mean until the meeting of the court to-morrow.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. If the Chair is satisfied with that suggestion, the managers raise no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no objection to it unless the managers have.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. The managers have none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With that understanding, then, the argument will be pretermitted. Is the presence of this witness desired further?

Mr. Manager WEBB. No. sir; he may be excused for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will retire for the present.

The witness, Christopher G. Boland, withdrew.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I would like to have S. D. Warriner called as the next witness.

TESTIMONY OF S. D. WARRINER.

S. D. Warriner, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Warriner, what is your connection with the Lehigh Valley Rafiroad Co.?-A. I have no connection whatever at all at the present time. At the time of the hearing before the Judiciary Committee I was vice president and general manager of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. What connection has the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. with the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?—A. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. is a coal-mining company, the stock of which is owned by the Lebigh Valley Railroad Co.

Q. Then, in effect, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. owns the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., of which you were the vice president and general manager?—A. It owns all the stock.

Do you know Judge R. W. Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?-A. I have known him for a good many years.

Q. State some definite number .- A. I could not say-three or four years.

Q. How far do you live from him when his home is in Scranton?-A. I am now living in Philadelphia. At that time I was living in Wilkes-Barre.

Q. How far from Scranton?-A. Wilkes-Barre is about 18 miles from Scranton.

Q. State whether or not Judge Archbald ever had any negotiations with you with reference to the purchase by your company of the outstanding interest, belonging to the Everharts, in a tract of coal land containing about 800 acres .-- A. Yes, sir; he told me one day at an interview on another subject that

Q. Before that, let me ask you if your company owns a majority interest in such a tract of land.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much of the interest is outstanding and has not been purchased by you or your company? About one-fifth, I believe, is it?-A. It was somewhere in the neighborhood of from onefifth to a tenth-between a fifth and a tenth.

Q. Your company has been anxious for several years to purchase that outstanding interest, has it not?-A. They did purchase several years ago about two-fifths of the outstanding onehalf interest, leaving about one-fifth that was not owned by the company, but was held under a lease by the company.

Q. Since that time you have been anxious to purchase the remaining interest which you do not now own and did not own a year ago?-A. Well, I would not say that they were anxious. I would say they had made an offer for it and it had been under negotiation, but that these two small interests had not accepted the terms offered and agreed upon by the other undivided interests in that tract of land.

Q. Have you tried to buy from the Everhart heirs this outstanding interest?—A. We have negotiated, or did negotiate.

Q. You know what I mean. Have you tried to buy that outstanding interest?—A. No; not especially.

Q. Let me ask you if you did not answer this question before the Judiciary Committee last May

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page? Mr. Manager WEBB. Page 1183.

Mr. WEBB. Did you try to buy the other interests and fail? Mr. WARRINER. Yes. We have been negotiating with the Everhart estate for a great many years, on account of the complications arising out of the coal leases, and following out a general policy we have been endeavoring to clear up the legal tangle by the purchase of the fee.

A. I would say that we never had any direct negotiation with this especial interest, but we did with the representatives of the other interests who were acting with them, in a sense, and we were perfectly willing and desired to buy, of course, although we had never dealt with them directly.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Indirectly, did you not make them a proposition?—A. Yes; there was a general proposition agreed upon under which all of them were to receive a certain pro rata share in accordance with their interest.

Q. But these particular heirs I am now speaking of, who had not sold, declined to accept your proposition. Is that true?—A. No; they had never declined nor had they every agreed to accept.

Q. They had not accepted?—A. No; they had never accepted. Q. The truth is you still want to buy that interest, and did want to buy it a year ago?—A. I assume the company would still buy it at that price.

Q. Is it not true that you wanted to buy it a year ago?—A. But it was a matter of very small importance to the company one way or the other whether they did buy it. It was not a vital matter to the company, because it owned the lease for the life of the coal.

Q. It was a matter of $60,000, and not so small after all. I will ask you again if a year ago your company did not desire to buy and undertook to purchase the remaining outstanding interest which you did not own in this tract of land?-A. No; we had made no offer to these people, Mr. WEBB.

Q. You had made to their representatives, had you not?-A. We had to the representatives. There were five interests, and these negotiations grew out of a lawsuit.

Q. Let me ask you if you did not answer this question before the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page?
Mr. Manager WEBB. On page 1184:
Mr. Webb, Have you tried to buy this one-fifth interest?
Mr. Warriner. Oh, yes. We made the same offer to these people that we made to the other heirs at the time we bought them out.

A. We did make the same offer.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I will ask you further-The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). Answer the question as direct as you can, please. It will save a great deal of time.

The WITNESS. I am trying to do so.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) They have not accepted your offer, then?-A. No; they have never accepted the offer.

Q. Do you know James R. Dainty, of Scranton, Pa.?-A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Have you ever heard of him?-A. I have heard of him. I never saw him. Q. I will ask you if Mr. James R. Dainty was anxious to secure a mining lease to a certain tract of coal land, consisting of about 325 acres, which is owned by your company and which lease was discussed between you and Judge Archbald at the time he called on you with reference to the sale of the Ever-hart interest in the 800-aere tract?—A. I do not know whether it was at that time, but at or about that time Judge Archbald told me that Mr. Dainty had spoken to him, and desired to either lease or purchase a tract of land held by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. known as the Morris and Essex land.

Q. How many acres did that tract contain?-A. I should imagine about 300 acres.

Q. Now, when the judge called on you first did he call you over the phone or did he come to see you with reference to the purchase of the remaining interest of the Everhart heirs in this 800-acre tract?—A. I do not recall whether the appointment was made by telephone or not. I rather assume that it was. I think so. I think it was made by telephone, and we met at my office.

Q. Where did he telephone from? Where was he when he sent for you; do you know?-A. Oh, I do not know.

Q. Where did he see you in person with reference to the purchase of the Everhart interest?-A. At my office, at that time in Wilkes-Barre.

Q. When was that personal interview-what month?-A. I think it was the latter part of last year-November or December; I do not recall, exactly.

Q. About a year ago?-A. Of last year; yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell us what the judge told you when he called on you with reference to the purchase of the Everhart interest in the 800-acre tract .- A. He told me that he wanted to know if we still cared to purchase the outstanding Everhart interest. and I said yes. He said that through his connections in Scranton-whether or not somebody had spoken to him in regard to it I do not recall, but anyway he thought that through his connections in Scranton they could be brought together, and that the negotiations could be carried through successfully. He wished to know at what price we were willing to purchase this land, and I told him that we would buy it at the same price that we had paid the other heirs-on the same pro rata basis.

Q. Now, tell as near as you can everything that was said about Dainty's proposition for a 325-acre lease and the sale or purchase of the Everhart interest .- A. After I had told the judge that, he wanted to know what interest the various heirs held in this outstanding account. I called our engineer in and we figured out together the various interests. It was rather a complicated amount of figuring. We finally arrived at the proportion of these Everharts, with whom we wished to dealtheir proportion of the entire property they owned. Then he wanted to know how much money that amounted to, and I told him that I would have Mr. Jessup, our engineer, figure it up, which he did, and which, in accordance with my instructions, he telephoned, I believe, to Scranton and told the judge what that amounted to.

Q. In that conversation did he speak of Dainty?—A. I think he did. It is my recollection that he spoke something in regard to Mr. Dainty; yes.

Q. What did he say about him?—A. Nothing as I recall except that he had been talking with Mr. Dainty, and I rather gathered from what he said that through Mr. Dainty or in connection with Mr. Dainty, whom I had known at that time as having been in various business communications with the Everharts, he was going to see these various people and ascertain whether or not they would sell at that figure.

I will ask you this question: Then, through the judge's association with Dainty, Dainty and the judge were to get the consent of the Everhart heirs to sell you the remaining outstanding interest?—A. That is the way I understood it; yes.

- Q. Now, what did Dainty and the judge have to do with the 325-acre tract that it was proposed you should lease to Dainty?-A. Nothing whatever. That was a property that was owned in fee by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. That came up in this way: When the judge was going out at one of these visits, he told me that Mr. Dainty had spoken to him and would like to get a lease or a sale of this 325-acre tract. I told him that it was not the policy of the company to either sell or lease its coal lands, as we expected to eventually mine this, and that, in any event, it was not a very good piece of land for any individual to mine as it was. The coal-mining conditions there, from an engineering standpoint, were not especially attractive, and I did not think that Mr. Dainty would care to have it very much if he looked into it any further. I promised, however, at that time to consider that further, and later, I think, I told him we would not lease it. I am not sure whether I did or not.
- Q. I will ask you did either this man Dainty or Judge Archbald, or both of them, agree with you or suggest to you that they would bring about the sale of this outstanding interest at a sum satisfactory to your company, provided you would lease to them certain coal properties on this land, or on any other land belonging to your company?-A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you if you did not reply to that very question in this language before the Judiciary Committee, page 1187:

language before the Judiciary Committee, page 1187:

Mr. Warriner. I have an indistinct recollection that afterwards the judge said something to me about Mr. Dainty's wanting to lease what is known as our Morris & Essex tract. I did not recall that before, but that was subsequent to this time, and had, as I understand it, no connection with that. I simply told him I would consider it, and nothing more has ever been done in regard to it.

Mr. Weers. Do you recall that some such proposition as that was made to you?

Mr. Warriner. I think it was, afterwards; yes. I believe there was something said, but not in the form of a consideration for this purchase.

A. Yes; there was no connection whatever to my mind. nor has there been the slightest thought that the lease of the 325 acres was to be in any form a consideration for the judge's services or Mr. Dainty's services in purchasing the outstanding Everhart interest.

Q. Why were both propositions discussed in the same conversation if they were not twin propositions and were to be carried along together?—A. One was discussed in one room, and the other was discussed just as the judge was leaving, and was in my outside office, in regard to this Everhart land. He spoke of it just as he was leaving the office. It did not at that time, nor has it since-

He told you Dainty-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment, Mr. President. I submit that the witness should be allowed to finish his answer.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Certainly; I thought he had finished it. A. It did not at that time nor has it since appeared to me to be a consideration in fact. In explanation of that I would say that the purchase of the outstanding Everhart interest was a matter of comparatively small importance to the company, and the consideration of our giving a lease or a sale of another tract of land did not appeal to me as being a thing of any consideration whatever. It was spoken of as two separate and distinct transactions.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Can you understand why those separate and distinct transactions were always united in every conversation the judge had with you about either one?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, we object to that question. The Chair was not listening, I think, to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did listen to it. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is an assumption of what the witness has clearly and distinctly denied. He has said that one conversation was over in his office and as the judge was leaving he just made a remark about Dainty wanting to get this other tract of land. The manager has said that in every conversation these things were linked together as twins. I think the manager has no right to make an assumption as to things that are so absolutely inconsistent with the testimony.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The witness can take care of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of witness being called to it he can guard himself in that. Otherwise the Chair would ask the manager to propound the question in a different form. The Chair thinks the witness can guard himself. The question will be read.

The Reporter read the question, as follows:

Q. (By Manager Webb.) Can you understand why those separate and distinct transactions were always united in every conversation the judge had with you about either one?

A. I do not think they were, Mr. WEBB-not to the best of my recollection. The proposition relative to the 325-acre tract was made, as I said, when the judge was leaving the office at the termination of his interview relative to the Everhart lands. That is the only time that it was brought up then, and it was only brought up then for just that minute, and it made no impression whatever upon me. It was not in connection with the other subject, and I never considered that it was a consideration or any form of a consideration.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Do you know what Judge Archbald and Dainty had to do with the sale of the Everhart interest to you?-A. No: I do not. The judge came to me. known the judge as a man of responsibility in that district and acquainted with Mr. Dainty and with the Everhart people who lived in Scranton. He asked me if we desired still to purchase those lands. I told him yes. Whether he was doing that for friendship to them or for any other consideration, I do not know.

Q. Were you to pay the judge anything for his interesting himself in your behalf with the Everhart heirs' estate?-A. No. sir.

Q. I ask you again if the judge did not talk to you more than once about the sale of the Everhart interest, and at each conversation he always connected the Dainty lease of 325 acres?-A. No, sir; I do not think so.

Q. Answer the question .- A. I said, No, sir; I do not think so. Q. In the hearing before the House Judiciary Committee I asked you this question:

Did you not hear the judge mention his [Dainty's] name frequently? To which you replied:

Mr. WARRINER. I do not know that it was so very frequently-

Mr. Manager WEBB. From page 1189.

He did speak of him as you speak casually of anybody, but not frequently.

Mr. Webb. You did not understand that he was to lease any part of your coal land?

Mr. Warrier. As I said before, he spoke about desiring to lease this coal land, but not in consideration of making this purchase, because such a transaction as that, from a business standpoint, would be foolish.

O. Now, I ask you again how many times did the judge speak to you about this proposition of the sale of the Everhart interest?-A. About the sale of the Everhart interest?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. I think, in regard to the main proposition, only once at the office; in regard to details relative to their interests, the proportion of their interests, two or three times possibly-sometimes on the phone, and he may have been to see me once. I do not recall the exact details of it, but the main matter was settled at one interview.

Q. But he called on you more than once?-A. Well, I rather think he did; yes. I am not sure.

Q. Then I ask you if at each time he called upon you he did also suggest Dainty's desire to lease the 325-acre Essex tract?—A. No, sir; I do not think he mentioned that except that once; that is the only time. I finally gave him a definite answer on the matter, that the company would not care to make this lease, and not in connection with the Everhart purchase

Q. You told him the company would not care to make the lease, because it was contrary to the policy of your company to make a lease of any of your coal lands. Was that the truth?- A. I do not recall the reason that I gave him. I told him that we did not care to make the lease.

Q. That was the reason really, was it not?-A. That was probably the main reason.

Q. That it was contrary to the policy of your company to lease your coal lands?—A. The general policy; yes, sir.
Q. Did you ever have any other application from Judge Archbald to lease culm banks belonging to your railroad company or to your coal company?—A. Yes, sir; we had an application from him a year ago last summer to lease some culm banks in Schuylkill County, known as the Packer colliery banks.

Q. Now, before going into that proposition, let me ask you if you made this statement before the Judiciary Committee

Mr. WORTHINGTON. From what page is the manager going to read?

Mr. Manager WEBB. From page 1194. [To the witness:] Did you make this statement before the Judiciary Committee:

Mr. Warriner. Well, I don't know what passed through the judge's mind at that time. He simply mentioned to me that Mr. Dainty had spoken to him and that he would like to have that lease; and at that time it is my recollection that I told the judge many people had been after that lease and, personally, I did not think it was a very good mining proposition, but that I would consider it. We never had made efforts to lease it to anybody—it is against our policy to lease any property—but I told him I would consider it.

Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Now, Mr. Warriner, when was it he made application to you for other property?-A. I think it came up to me in July or August of 1911.

Q. Let me ask you, now, when you were at the Judiciary Committee hearing last May you could not remember anything about the correspondence you had with Judge Archbald about Packer No. 3, could you? You did not remember?—A. The correspondence was presented at the Judiciary Committee hearing-the second Judiciary Committee hearing.

- Q. I understand. It was presented, though, after you had gone away from the stand and after evidence had been produced from the Girard estate containing some of your letters. I ask you if you did not tell the Judiciary Committee that you had no correspondence of importance about this matter, and that whatever connection Judge Archbald had with the transaction with yourself was by phone and personal calls?-A. I said there were some letters, but I did not think they were of any importance, and that I had not read them or seen them since the time it had happened. That was my recollection, but I went back and secured the letters. When I was subpensed to bring them later on I found what was in the files.
- Q. When was the first conversation you had with Judge Archbald about Packers No. 3 and No. 4, belonging to the Girard estate and leased to you?—A. I think it was in July or August, 1911.
- Q. What was the purport of that conversation?-A. It came up first in the form of a letter addressed to Mr. W. A. Lathrop. Q. Was that letter dated August 1?-A. I do not recall the

Q. Is this [handing a paper to the witness] the letter?-A.

(After examining.) Yes, sir; that is the letter.
Q. Is that Judge Archbald's handwriting?

whole letter in the handwriting of Judge Archbald?-A. I think so; yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we would like to have the letter read. I believe the letter is admitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will say that this correspondence which is about to be offered is all in the previous record, and we have no objection to its being read from the record.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Neither have I any objection. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is all admitted. There is no question about it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Then, I ask the Secretary to take this record [handing volume to the Secretary] and to read

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the paper, which was marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 64," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 64.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, August 1.

W. A. LATHEOP,

Superintendent Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

DEAR SIR: Would it be possible to lease any of the culm dumps which you control in the neighborhood of the Oxford washery at shaft near Shenandoah? I have an option on this washery, and the culm dump which goes with it is not quite what it ought to be and ought to be strengthened with another. From a talk which I had this morning with my nephew. Col. James Archbald, of Pottsville, I think the concurrence of the Girard estate, etc., could be secured in any fair arrangement. Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Warriner, before you answered this letter, did you receive one from Mr. Lathrop, or before you answered Judge Archbald's inquiry?—A. That letter was referred to me by Mr. Lathrop-it was sent to me by Mr. Lathrop.

Q. And is this the letter [handing paper to witness] from

Mr. Lathrop to you?

Mr. SIMPSON. While that paper is being identified by the witness, with the consent of Mr. Manager Webb, may we be permitted to say that, on reading the correspondence, we do not think that Mr. Lamb will be of any further use, and he may be discharged, so far as we are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Lamb will be so notified.

The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, which was marked "U.S.S. Exhibit No. 65," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 65.]

437 CHESTNUT STREET, Philadelphia, August 7, 1911.

Mr. S. D. Warriner,
Vice President and General Manager
Lehigh Valley Coal Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

DEAR WARRINER: Inclosed I hand you letter I took to Montrose with me on Friday with the intention of handing it to you, but I did not me of Friday with the see you.

It is evidently addressed to me under the impression that I am still connected with the Lebigh Valley Coal Co.

I have replied to the effect that the letter has been forwarded to you.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. LATHROP.

(L. P.: Inclosure.)

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) What was the next communication you had from Judge Archbald, if any, with reference to this matter?—A. I think I got a letter from him next—

Q. Look at that [handing a paper to the witness] and see if that is the letter?

The Witness (after examining). Yes; that is the letter. Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask the Secretary to read exhibit marked "144" before the Judiciary Committee.

The Secretary read the letter referred to, and it was marked "U.S. S. Exhibit 66," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 66.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., August 11, 1911.

S. D. WARRINER, Esq.

S. D. Warriner, Esq.

Dear Sir: Your company, I am advised, is interested in some culm dumps at shaft near Shenandoah, Pa., in the vicinity of the Oxford washery, these dumps being made in connection with your operations on the Girard estate property. In negotiating with regard to that washery I find that it needs an additional dump, or will in the near future, and I am therefore writing to inquire whether any arrangement could be made with your company for one or more of the dumps which I have referred to. It, of course, would have to be subject, as I understand it, to the approval of the Girard estate, from whom you lease, but I think that this possibly could be secured if the terms were favorable. By mistake I wrote on this subject to Mr. W. A. Lathrop, not being aware of his change over to the Lebigh Coal & Navigation Co., and a letter from him advises me that he has forwarded my letter to you.

Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you reply to that letter, Mr. Warriner?—A. I think so; yes.
Q. See if that [handing a paper to the witness] is a copy of the letter you wrote Judge Archbald?-A. (After examining paper.) Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask the Secretary to read Exhibit.

142 before the Judiciary Committee of the House.

The Secretary read the letter which was marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 67," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 67.]

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

AUGUST 14, 1911.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 11th instant, just received, I beg to say that I will look into the matter soon as possible.

Our superintendent is away for a few days, but as soon as he returns I will have an investigation made and advise you.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you get another letter from Judge Archbald in answer to that ?- A. Yes; I think I did. Yes; there were several letters along that time.

Q. I presume it was not in answer to that letter, because the letter which I am going to offer for identification was dated September 12, and that letter was not written-yes; September 12. Can you state whether it is an answer or not?-A. (After examining paper.) Yes; I received this letter.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask that the Secretary read it.

The letter was read and marked "U.S.S. Exhibit 68," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 68.]

[R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.] SCRANTON, Pa., September 12, 1911. S. D. WARRINER, Esq.

Dear Sir: I do not suppose you have had time as yet to look into the matter of leasing me one or more of the culm dumps of your company on the Girard estate at shaft near Shenandoah, or I should have heard from you. I do not wish to unduly hurry the matter, but there are one or two things which are dependent upon it, which make me anxious to get a response as soon as possible, and, of course, I hope it will be favorable

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you answer that letter, Mr. Warriner?—A. I think I did; yes.

Q. See if that [handing a paper to witness] is a copy of the answer you sent him.—A. (After examining paper). Yes.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask the Secretary to please read

The letter was read and marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 69," as

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1911.

Dear Sir: Replying to yours of the 12th, I am sorry that our super-intendent has been away on vacation and has delayed my answer to your letter. He has now returned, and I will stir him up and get an early reply for you.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you write him another letter before hearing from him in answer to that one?-A. I may have; I do not recall.

Q. See if the letter I hand you is a copy of the letter you sent the judge.—A. (After examining paper.) Yes.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Secretary, will you please read it?

The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 70," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 70.]

SEPTEMBER 27, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sie: Replying further to your several letters regarding culm banks at Packer No. 4 colliery, I now have a report from our superintendent on the situation, and I think it will be possible for us to accede to your wishes. It is our desire to accommodate your wishes so far as it is possible, but I think an interview will be necessary, at which time I can arrange to have our superintendent present and go over the matter in detail. My reason for this is that there are a number of banks there and we hardly know just what it is you refer to.

If you will kindly set a date on which you can arrange to be at my office, I will be glad to meet you with our superintendent.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) That was the 27th of September, Mr. Warriner. Did you receive the letter which I hand you, dated September 28, from Judge Archbald in reply to the letter which has just been read?—A. [After examining letter.] Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Secretary, will you please read it? The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 71,"

as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 71.]

(R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.) SCRANTON, PA., September 28, 1911.

S. G. WARRINER, ESQ.

Dear Sir: I thank you very much for your letter of September 27, stating the possibility of your letting me have a lease on one of the cuim banks at Packer No. 4 colliery near Shenandoah, and suggesting that I fix a time when your superintendent may be present to go over the matter. I certainly shall avail myself of the first opportunity for doing so, but just at present I am called to Washington to attend a session of the Commerce Court which opens there on Monday, and shall be detained there a couple of weeks. I will let you know as soon as possible the time of my return, and trust that you will keep this matter open meanwhile.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHEALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) After receiving that letter, did you have a phone conversation with the judge with reference to making a date when he could meet you?-A. I think so;

Q. Do you remember the substance of the conversation?-A. I recall nothing except asking for a day at which to meet our superintendent.

Q. Was the judge in Washington when he phoned you?—A. No; I do not think he was. I think he was in Scranton.
Q. He said in that letter he would be away for a couple of weeks?-A. Yes.

Q. Do you know when it was he phoned you?-A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. With reference to the date?—A. I do not.
Q. Here is a copy of a letter sent by you December 22, 1911.
See if you wrote that to the judge, and perhaps that will refresh your memory as to when the phone conversation was .-A. (After examining letter.) It was probably a day or two prior to December 22, which is the date of this letter.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Secretary, will you read the letter? The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 72,"

as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 72.]

DECEMBER 22, 1911.

Judge R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our appointment for Tuesday, the 26th instant, I have an appointment here from 10 to 11, but will be very glad to see you at 11 o'clock or any hour thereafter which suits your convenience. venience. Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Warriner, that letter is dated December 22, referring to an appointment when you would meet the judge. Had you had no personal conversation with him before that time and discussed the terms and conditions under which you would lease him the culm banks, Packers Nos. 3 and 4?-A. No; I do not think so. I do not recall just when the interview was in my office, but I assume that letter was before that time.

Q. Is it your recollection, then, that up to December 22, 1911, you and the judge had not come to any agreement as to your leasing culm banks Nos. 3 and 4?

The WITNESS. May I ask what the date of the last letter was?

Mr. Manager WEBB. December 22, 1911.

The WITNESS. But the letter previous to that?
Mr. Manager WEBB. September 28, 1911.
A. I do not recall just when the date was.

Q. Well, this letter of December 22 speaks of a subsequent time when you would have a conference with him. I ask you if you did not have a personal conference with him before December 22 and agree that he should have culm banks, Packer Nos. 3 and 4?—A. I do not recall whether it was before December 22 or not. I had one or two interviews with him on that matter. Our first interview may have been prior to that time. I think I had probably two interviews with him on the matter, and the preliminary conversation with our superintendent may have been prior to December 22; I do not recall.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that there has been put in evidence here-you have probably seen the application-an application to the Girard estate, dated December 19, 1911, in which the judge and his associates said to the Girard estate that they had seen you and that you had agreed to lease them Packer Nos. 3 and 4.-A. If that was dated on December 19, then the interview that I had preliminary, the first interview I

Q. Was prior to that time?-A. I should think so; I do not recall the date.

Q. Well, now, what was the object of this interview you speak of in your letter of December 22?-A. That I can not say-whether it was in regard to the first proposition-that is, the lease of the Packer bank or to the sale of the Everhart property. I can not recall when those dates were.

Q. The Everhart transaction, the Dainty transaction, and the Packer No. 3 transaction were all being carried on during the months of September, October, November, and December, were they?-A. Yes; I think the Everhart transaction was carried on in December or about that time. The others dragged along from July until December.

Q. I ask you, Mr. Warriner, if you received the letter which I hand you, from Col. James Archbald, engineer of the Girard estate?-A. (After examining letter.) Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Secretary, will you please read the letter?

The Secretary read the letter, marked "U.S. S. Exhibit 73," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 73.]

GIRARD ESTATE, Pottsville, Pa., December 26, 1911.

S. D. Warriner, Esq., Vice President and General Manager Lehigh Valley Coal Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Lehigh Valley Coal Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Dear Sir: I have received an application from R. W. Archbald, James F. Bell, V. F. Petersen, and T. H. Jones, who propose to incorporate as the Jones Coal Co. for a lease of the Packer No. 3 and eastern No. 4 culm banks, in which they state they have the "assurance of your company that on certain terms and conditions, which have practically been agreed upon, it is satisfactory to you to have this lease made." Please advise me if this is correct, and give me a memorandum of what the terms and conditions referred to are, as our board of directors will want to know before making a lease of these banks. As the proposed lessees are anxious to have the matter presented to the committee on the Girard estate without the city at its next meeting on Thursday, January 4, an early reply will be appreciated.

Very truly, yours,

James Archbald, Jr.

Engineer Girard Estate. JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr. Engineer Girard Estate.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you answer that letter, Mr.

Warriner?—A. I did; yes. Q. Please state if what I send to the desk is a copy of the letter you wrote Mr. Archbald .- A. (After examining letter.) Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Secretary, will you please read it? The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 74," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 74.]

DECEMBER 28, 1911.

Mr. James Archbald, Jr., Engineer Girard estate, Pottsville, Pa.

Engineer Girard estate, Pottsville, Pa.

Dear Sir: I have your letter of the 26th instant at hand. Judge Archbald called to see me recently and said that he would like to rework some of the culm banks at Packer No. 3 colliery. I advised him that if it was the pleasure of the Girard estate to extend to him a lease of this bank we would not interpose any objection, provided he agreed to certain arrangements which we informally discussed.

I did not agree to let him have the No. 4 bank, as we are already putting some of this through the No. 4 breaker.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Warriner, is that all the correspondence you had with Judge Archbald in reference to this matter?—A. If that is all that I have presented to the Judiciary Committee, it is all that I had. I do not recall whether there were other letters or not.

Q. That is, the correspondence that you told the Judiciary Committee on your first examination before them that was of no moment?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I submit that, instead of making a statement of what the witness testified to before the Judiciary Committee, it would be fairer to him, and more intelligible to the Senate, to have that read to him and see if that is what he testified to. The words which my friend has used will not be found there.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will be delighted to read it, Mr.

President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. From what page? Mr. Manager WEBB. I read from page 1191:

Mr. Webs. You do not know whether he ever extended his operations or not?

Speaking of Judge Archbald with reference to the application to you for the bank-

Mr. Warriers. I think he did take it up. I assume he did, because they asked me and I told them—they asked me whether we desired to sublease this, and I told them no; we did not especially desire it, but were perfectly willing in case the board of directors of the City Trust desired to do this—that we would not stand in the way of the transaction. I never heard anything more about it. I assume it fell through.

Mr. Werb. You do not know whether they did extend any work over the line or not?

Mr. Werb. You do not know whether they did extend any work over the line or not?

Mr. Warriner. I know they did not, because they could not do it during the lifetime of our lease.

Mr. Werb. But you did agree, so far as the coal company's interest was concerned, to let him do it?

Mr. Warriner. I agreed to, within certain lines.

Mr. Werb. Well, that is agreeing to this request.

Mr. Warriner. Yes, sir.

Mr. Werb. Did he ever make any application to you in reference to culm banks?

Mr. Warriner. No. sir: not that I recall.

culm banks?

Mr. Warrier. No, sir; not that I recall.

Mr. Werb. Or coal properties?

Mr. Warrier. No, sir.

Mr. Werb. Or coal properties?

Mr. Warrier. No, sir.

Mr. Werb. Have you any correspondence with him in reference to any leases of culm dumps?

Mr. Warrier. No, sir.

Mr. Werb. You have no correspondence with reference to any of these matters that you now speak of?

Mr. Warrier. No, sir; I have no correspondence, except notes relative to making an appointment or something of that kind—but nothing of any moment at all. In fact, I have not seen any correspondence since it happened. I have not looked it over and know nothing about it. It was done by word of mouth and over the telephone.

You stated that before the committee, Mr. Warriner?-A. Yes; and in explanation of it I simply wish to say-I suppose that I am entitled to explain it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, indeed, sir.

The Witness. In explanation of it I will say that at the time I gave that testimony I had no recollection whatever—it was honest testimony—and I gave no special thought to the matter because the matter never came to a head and never was finished; that most of this correspondence was relative to making interviews and tentative agreements, but nothing relative to the terms of any agreement which was to be made, and to my mind was of no importance in connection with the deal or the negotiations which were being carried on, as the terms had never been reduced to writing.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Exactly. In your previous testimony, when you were asked whether you desired to sublease these you told them "no."

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page is that?
Mr. Manager WEBB. Page 1191. When you were first asked to sublease this culm bank to Judge Archbald did you tell them "no, that you did not want to?"

A. I told them just what I said in that letter; that if it was their pleasure to lease these banks we would interpose no ob-

Q. You swore before the Judiciary Committee, as I understand-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I ask what is the object of this? Is it to show that the witness is not to be believed on oath or to refresh his memory?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Just to refresh his memory-that is one object-and it is to show that when he was first approached about the matter, he told them that they did not want to lease it, but that afterwards he did lease it; that when the Girard estate asked him, representing the coal company or the railroad company, if they desired to sublease this proposition, this culm bank No. 3, he replied "no," but later did agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has he not already testified

Mr. Manager WEBB. Well; no, sir; I think not. He did say that he swore to this, but I want to examine him on that particular point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ask him the question direct whether or not he did.

Mr. Manager WEBB (to the witness). I will ask you this question that, if before the Judiciary Committee—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, ask him the question for the purpose of eliciting the evidence. If he does not answer correctly, the manager can then refresh his memory. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I ask when this proposition was first put up to you with reference to leasing culm bank No. 3, if you did not tell the Girard estate that you did not want to lease it?—A. I told them that we had not, and I think—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). Answer as directly as you can and then make any explanation you wish afterwards.

A. I told them that if it was their pleasure to lease these banks to Judge Archbald we would not interpose any objection, provided the negotiations were carried on in accordance with certain terms and conditions which I had verbally discussed with Judge Archbald.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Now may I ask him that question,

Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I wish you would repeat that question again, and I will again caution the witness to answer the question as asked him, and then make any explanation he wishes after repeating the question to him.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I ask you if when the Girard estate first asked you if you desired to lease the culm bank or Packer No. 3 and No. 4 if you did not reply to them "No," but that if it was agreeable to them you would agree to it?— A. I replied nothing more to them except what was in my letter which has just been read. That was the reply I made to them. I do not think I ever had any other talk with them in regard to it.

Q. Now, then, I ask you if you did not swear this before the Judiciary Committee when they examined you on the first examination? This is at page 1191:

Mr. WARRINER. I think he did take it up. Evidently referring to Judge Archbald-

I assume he did because they-

I imagined that you referred to the Girard estate-asked me and I told them; they asked me whether we desired to sub-lease this, and I told them, no; we did not especially desire it, but were perfectly willing in case the board of directors of the City Trust desired to do this.

A. You might say that the word "no" is a strong interpreta-tion of my letter. I simply said that if the board of the City Trust desired to make the lease we would interpose no objection. The letter has just been read. It is a question of memory.

Q. What were the terms and conditions on which you agreed to lease to Judge Archbald?—A. First, that the limit of the culm to be leased to him should be confined within a certain area and include only such culm as we had no intention of preparing ourselves.

Q. That is not an answer to my question, Mr. Warriner. I asked you the conditions upon which you agreed to lease to Judge Archbald?—A. I am trying to tell you, as near as I can explain to you the terms. First, that there was to be only a certain area of culm leased.

certain area of culm leased.

Q. That was Packer No. 3 and Packer No. 4——A. And part of No. 4, and Packer No. 3; yes. Secondly, there should be, I think, 2 or 3 cents a ton royalty to us for the consideration over and above the royalties to be paid by us to the Girard estate; thirdly, that there should be proper provision for the maintenance of the creek flowing in the property, and that the culm is the state of the creek should be been out of the creek; and fourth I and washings should be kept out of the creek; and fourth, I think, that the transportation of this coal should be via the Lehigh Valley Railroad. Those were the terms, as near as I recollect them.

Q. Had you agreed on those conditions before December 22, 1911?—A. I should imagine I had; yes. I think the judge took it up with the Girard estate after we had discussed those terms and conditions.

Q. Did you discuss this matter or report this matter to Mr. Thomas, your president?—A. I spoke to him. I made no formal report of it, because it had not reached a stage where I was sure that it would be carried through, as the consent of the Girard estate was necessary to it. I had told him that there had been this application for the culm bank and told him the steps I had taken, and he interposed no objection.

Q. But, so far as you were concerned, the agreements were thoroughly understood between you and the judge?-A. Yes, yes.

Q. And that you were willing to recommend this proposition to Mr. Thomas?—A. Yes.

Q. And your recommendation, in a small matter of that sort, goes with the president, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I believe that is all we wish to ask this witness.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I want to ask you whether in your testimony before the Judiciary Committee on this question as to at first refusing to consider leasing the culm bank to Judge Archbald this occurred? I read from page 1190 of the

He-

The judge-

wished to extend his operations over our lines and to take from us a part of these culm banks which were on this property. I explained to the judge that we were operating that property under a lease which expired in two years, and that we had no right to sublease the property without the consent of the owners of the property; that so far as our own rights were concerned we had no objection in case the owners of the property asked us to vary the line and allow him to take some of those banks—such banks as we did not need or would not put through during the life of cur own lease. I suggested to him that he had better take the matter up with the Girard estate afterwards, and that on request from them we would be very glad to consider the matter. matter.

Q. Is that your recollection of what you testified to?-A. Yes.

Q. And of what the fact was?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that connection I would ask you whether or not Judge Archbald at any time in these negotiations said to you, or suggested to you, or hinted to you, in any way that there was any secrecy about his connection with this business?-A. No. sir; none whatever.

Q. In his letter to you of September 12, 1911, which has been read in evidence, he says:

I do not suppose you have had time as yet to look into the matter of leasing me one or more of the culm dumps of your company.

Did the negotiations from that time on proceed on the understanding that it-between you and him-that the matter was going on and that he was to lease the dump?-A. I understood that the judge was to lease the dump on behalf of himself and associates who had owned or controlled the Oxford washery

Q. And in his first letter which was written to Mr. Lathrop and forwarded to you-his letter of August 1-he says:

I have an option on this washery-

That is, the Oxford washeryand the culm dump which goes with it is not quite what it ought to be and ought to be strengthened with another.

Did you understand from that that he was the person who was dealing with you in the first instance and that he was interested and proposed to lease the dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understood you to say that he never at any time intimated or suggested it was a matter which was a secret?-

A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. And was it, as a matter of fact, known to other people in your office that the negotiations were going on?—A. It was known to a great many. A great many other callers came in while the judge was there.

Q. Have you mentioned the name of Mr. Humphrey?-A. I do not think I mentioned his name. I mentioned him as the superintendent.

Q. What is his full name?—A. John M. Humphrey.

Q. What was his position in your company at the time of this correspondence with Judge Archbald?—A. He was a division superintendent.

Q. Do you remember whether or not he was present at any of the interviews you had with the judge on the subject of leasing the Packer dumps?-A. Yes; he was present with the maps at one of the interviews.

Q. Do you remember whether or not at one of those conversations he recommended to you, in Judge Archbald's presence, that I the time I severed my connection with the company.

it would be better to let the Packer No. 3 go, as your company could not work it satisfactorily or profitably?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Will you repeat that question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter will repeat the question.

The Reporter read as follows:

Q. Do you remember whether or not at one of those conversations he recommended to you, in Judge Archbald's presence, that it would be better to let the Packer No. 3 go, as your company could not work it satisfactorily or profitably?

A. I would not say that he positively recommended that. I will say, however, that in connection with him we agreed upon a line of the proposed lease which would not interfere with our operation and would include only such coal as we had no intention of mining ourselves and did not consider it profitable to mine during the life of the lease, and that both Mr. Humphrey and myself were agreed upon that.

Q. Is Mr. Lathrop living?—A. No; Mr. Lathrop is dead.

Q. How long has he been dead?—A. He has been dead since last April.

Q. Up to what time was he connected with your company—the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?—A. He closed his connection with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. in 1901.

Q. So that he really had not been connected with your company for about 10 years before Judge Archbald wrote this letter under the impression that he was still there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember that as to this Packer No. 3 dump, which is the subject of investigation here, your company had at one time worked it a little while and then stopped?—A. Part of the dump we had worked and stopped. We had worked it from chutes from inside the mine.

Q. Why did you stop?-A. We did not consider it very good coal to mix in with the other coal.

Q. With reference to this earlier transaction, or other transaction, with Judge Archbald, about the claim of the Everhart heirs, you said that that was rather a small or inconsiderable matter, and Mr. Webb said-I do not know whether you observed his language when he asked you the question-it was a matter of $50,000 or $60,000 and not so small after all. the outstanding claims of the Everharts involve fifty or sixty thousand dollars?-A. It was a small matter to the company, because these outstanding interests were held under a coal lease for the life of the property.

Q. And were you paying royalties to the Everharts?—A. We were paying royalties to the Everharts for the coal mined.

Q. And so it was a question whether you would pay the royalties or purchase it and be out the interest on the money. That was the difference to you?—A. That was all that the matter amounted to.

Q. And that did not strike you as being a matter of any great consequence to the company?-A. The only advantage to the company in the purchase of this was to eliminate chances of future lawsuits due to misconceptions of the terms of the lease, which was an old lease.

Q. Do you recall whether, when Judge Archbald saw you about the Everhart interests in your property, he told you that he was interested in getting into communication with the Everharts or getting settlements with them, because they had interests in another culm bank on which he had an option in connection with others or with another—the Katydid, I mean?—A. No, sir; I do not recall that.

Q. If he mentioned that to you--A. If he mentioned it, I have forgotten it. I do not recall it.

Q. I believe it has not been brought out in the testimony here, but James Archbald, to whom you have referred as the engineer of the Girard estate, is a nephew of Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir. Q. A son of his brother?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In reference to what has been asked you here as to whether you did not testify before the Judiciary Committee that your company was quite anxious to get in the Everhart interest, I will ask you whether this occurred in your examination before the Judiciary Committee on that subject. This is at page 1187:

Mr. Webb. Your company had been very anxious to secure this outstanding interest for quite a while, had it not?

Mr. Warriner. Not especially; no.

Do you remember giving that testimony?-A. Yes, sir; I think I said that.

Q. And also, reading on the same subject, at page 1189:

Mr. Webb. That is, you were not able to buy from the Everharts at

Mr. Weels. That is, you want this price?

Mr. Warriner. We made no special effort to buy or sell. It is up to them. It is not a thing of any particular advantage to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. one way or the other.

The Witness. That represents the facts as they existed at

Q. In the conversations you had with Judge Archbald on the subject was there any suggestion that you could be induced to pay the Everharts more for their interest than you had been willing to pay all along?-A. Not that I recall. My recollection is that I told the judge at the start what we had paid the others, and that we had agreed that all interests would be paid alike; and we calculated what that amount was, and Mr. Jessup, our engineer, telephoned to Scranton and told the judge what it amounted to.

Q. Do you remember about how many different interests there were originally in this claim that we call the Everhart claim?—A. The claims were divisible, I remember, by 103. There were so many claims that they were divisible by 103;

it was a very complicated question.

Q. And before you had talked to Judge Archbald about it had you got in a majority of those interests?—A. Yes, sir. Q. You had fixed a certain value for the whole interest?-A.

Yes, sir.

Q. And then paid each his fractional part on that basis?—A. Yes. sir.

Q. And your only dealings with Judge Archbald were on the same basis, as I understand you, and no other?—A. Yes.
Q. And they could take that price or take the royalty, as they pleased?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager WEBB. One or two questions in redirect examination, if you please.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You wanted, of course, to get the interests rather than to pay the royalty, and that is why you had bought the other interests?—A. Well, there was not the same advantage, Mr. WEBB, in all frankness, because the small remaining interests in the property were of such comparatively little moment that the danger of any large suit over the interpretation of the original lease was greatly minimized, and we were not so anxious to get those interests as we were the previous interests which we had got prior to that time. But at the same time, I will say, in all frankness, that we were desirous of closing up the entire transaction and getting the fee of the entire property.

Q. That is what I thought; and that is why you went to the trouble of having your engineer make the survey and ascertain the interest which each individual had?—A. Yes; it was a matter that we were not pushing, but would be glad to have closed up.

Q. I ask you, in regard to the outstanding interests, if in any of those conversations Judge Archbald did not tell you or make known to you that this man Dainty had some relations with the Everharts which would enable him to induce them to sell to you? Is not that what the judge told you, and is not that the only reason he mentioned Dainty?—A. Either he told me or I knew that Mr. Dainty had had some dealings with the Everharts in regard to culm banks. I had known of that; it was common gossip.

Q. Did you say you worked part of Packer No. 3?-A. We worked a part of that bank by a chute driven up from the mines inside, and at times had taken a part of this bank through a hole driven up to daylight.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. It was now and then during that time. I do not recall—

Q. During what time?-A. Prior to that time-when we had that hole there.

Q. Are you not mistaken in mixing bank No. 3 with bank No. 4? You did work some of bank No. 4, and is not that the bank you speak of now?—A. Well, it is a small bank there. It is the upper part. If you have a map I can show you.

Q. Yes, I have a map. Let me get the location of this, please. There is a creek that ran between your railroad and the Philadelphia & Reading, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On one side of the creek, the south side, the Oxford Coal Co. was located?-A. Yes.

Q. And the Oxford washery?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. On the north side there was Packer No. 3, and closely adjoining it, being almost a part of Packer No. 3, was Packer No. 4, a small dump?—A. Yes.

Q. About 48,000 tons?—A. Yes.

Q. And, then, still further south and below your present breaker there was another dump called Packer No. 4, which you did work some and took some of the coal and mixed it with the fresh coal from your colliery?—A. Yes; that is right.

Q. It was Packer No. 4, which you declined to lease to Judge Archbald, that you were working and not Packer No. 3, was it not?—A. Yes; but it is a small bank. As I recall it now, it was the small-

Q. Just look over that drawing, please; was it—this [indicating] is Oxford and this [indicating] Erie Packer No. 4, and there [indicating] is Packer Nos. 4 and 3?—A. There is where we had the hole, up here [indicating on map].

Q. You say you worked a part of the little bank adjoining Packer No. 3?—A. Yes.

Q. What is that bank known as?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Will you let me look at the map you have shown to the witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that ought to be marked for identification.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is my own drawing. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not care who drew it. It has been made a part of the evidence, and the witness has answered questions about it, and nobody can understand his testimony without reference to the map. I submit it ought to be marked and become a part of the record, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I shall be glad to have it done, Mr.

President.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) On one side of this little creek the Oxford people had a washery and on the other side, opposite, rather, the Lehigh Coal Co. had a breaker?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you work what is known as Packer No. 4 in connection with your fresh colliery coal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you also work what is known as a part of Packer No. 3 and known by your engineers as another No. 4 bank?-A.

Q. Did you work two banks down there at your breaker?-A. Well, we drove a hole up into that small upper bank and did take some coal from it.

Q. How much?—A. Oh, very little. Q. Give us an idea. That "very little" is indefinite.—A. I have no idea.

Q. Did you take a few tons?-A. A few tons; yes. It was not a very good bank and we took very little of it.

Q. Do you know whether it is good bank or not-Packer Nos. 3 and 4? Do you not know that the average of prepared coal in Packer Nos. 3 and 4 is 15 per cent above chestnut—that is, prepared sizes?—A. I know that so far as concerns the culm banks the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. has operated wherever the coal was in larger sizes it had to be crushed into smaller sizes, because it was not marketable in the larger sizes.

Q. I ask you if there were not 143,000 tons of prepared coal in this Packer No. 3?-A. I do not know that.

Q. You never knew that?—A. I never did.

Q. If there are 143,000 tons of prepared coal or an average of 15 per cent prepared coal it was a good bank, was it not; an average bank?—A. Well, our——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Answer the question; was it or was it not.

A. It would depend entirely on how much slate was mixed with the coal.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I ask you whether, if you find a bank with a proportion of 15 per cent of prepared coal in it, 4 per cent of pea coal, 14 per cent of buckwheat, and 12 per cent of rice, it is not a good average culm bank?-A. That is a good percentage of sizes, it is true; but it depends entirely on the condition of that bank for market purposes. It depends on the amount of rock and refuse with the coal.

Q. I understand that; but you never went into Packer No. 3?-A. We always considered that Packer No. 3 had so much refuse with the coal that at the royalties paid the Girard estate there was not any profit in working it, and so we have never worked it during the life of the lease.

Q. How far was your property from Packer No. 3 and 4 that you speak of; only 800 feet, was it not?—A. I should say that bank was perhaps a little farther.

Q. Well, make it a thousand feet. I ask you if you did not have your breaker within a thousand feet of this Packer No. 3 and No. 4?-A. Somewhere in that neighborhood; yes, sir.

Q. And you were using some of the lower Packer No. 4 in connection with your fresh coal?—A. Yes.

Q. And you could use Packer No. 3 in the same way?—A. No; Packer No. 4 was a much better bank. It was an older bank and contained a very much larger percentage of good coal-marketable coal.

Q. What is the percentage of Packer No. 4?-A. I do not recall those figures.

Q. Well, how do you know it was larger than 15 per cent?-A. With deference to you, I do not think that you understand. I take it from your question you are asking me for the percentage of those marketable sizes.

Q. Yes.—A. Suppose you get a hundred thousand tons of coal mixed in a million tons of refuse, you have to move the whole quantity in order to get out the marketable coal.

Q. I understand that.—A. And that was the trouble with Packer No. 3 as we considered. There was so much refuse in it that we could not afford to move the entire quantity in order to get the marketable coal out of it for shipment.

Q. Do you know the cubical contents of Packer No. 3?-A.

No. sir.

Q. If I were to tell you that it was 46,000,000 cubic feet, and that in those 46,000,000 cubic feet there was 472,000 tons of coal to be won and saved, I ask you if it would not be a splendid average culm bank?-A. It certainly would, if there was not too much refuse with it to handle.

Q. Say there are 46,000,000 cubic feet of bank, and in those 46,000,000 cubic feet there are 472,000 tons of coal to be won and marketed, is not that a good average culm bank?—A. I would have to figure that out. I am hardly engaged in the business of calculating that offhand. I simply say to you that as in general charge of that property, the reports of my subordinates had been that that bank was not a desirable bank for the company to operate.

Q. Have you ever read Maj. Archbald's report on banks Nos.

3 and 4?-A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. You would not know anything about it, then, if I were to ask you questions connected with it?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any application from anybody else to lease Packer No. 3 or No. 4 or any of those banks lying along on that side of the creek in the neighborhood of your present washery?—A. Yes. We had an application some time prior to that from Madeira, Hill & Co. They wanted to lease the entire bank. They wanted to lease Packer Nos. 4, 3, and Packer No. 2 bank, at which point we intended to put up a washery, and that is the bank they especially desired to get. And the Packer No. 4 we were putting through the breaker, and we declined that proposition.

Q. I ask you if you did not have an application for all those banks, including Packer 2, 3, and 4, and the rest of them?—A. Yes; I think they wanted the whole thing.
Q. You declined to let them have it?—A. Yes.

Q. Either 2, 3, 4, or—
The Wirness (interrupting). We declined to let them have the whole bunch of banks.

Q. So, although they offered you 10 cents a ton royalty additional to what you were paying the Girard estate—is not that so? I ask you if Mr. Hill, representing the Oxford washery, did not propose that on all sizes above rice taken from your banks-these four banks-they would pay 10 cents per ton on all domestic sizes, and 5 cents a ton on pea and buckwheat in excess of the royalties due by you on these grades to the Girard estate?-A. Is that a copy of the letter?

Q. I suppose so. I was asking the question first.-A. I do not recall. He did make an offer. It may or may not have been 10 cents and 5 cents a ton. He wanted to get all of the banks on that side of the creek.

Q. I ask you if you do not remember that he proposed to give you 10 cents royalty per ton on all domestic sizes, and 5 cents a ton on pea and buckwheat, additional to what you paid the Girard estate if you would agree to let him have these banks, some of which you now say were not good?-A. No; I do not recall the figure. I recall he offered some excess. Have you a copy of the letter?

Q. I will ask you, then, if you received that letter from him [indicating]?—A. (Examining.) Yes, sir; I think that is the letter I received—10 cents a ton on domestic sizes, prepared sizes; 5 cents a ton on pea and buckwheat; no additional royalty on

- Q. Then, Mr. Warriner, I will ask you—
 Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I see that letter?
 Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes. It has been put in evidence.
 (The letter was handed to counsel for the respondent.)
 Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) That was about a year or a year and a half before Judge Archbald applied to you?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you declined to accept from the Oxford people 10 cents a ton royalty on prepared sizes and 5 cents on smaller sizes a year or a year and a half ago, and agreed to let Judge Archbald have it for 2 or 3 cents a ton extra, and in the meantime culm has gone up in price and value?—A. No, sir; I do not think that is a fair statement of it, Mr. Webb.

Q. Explain it, then, Mr. Warriner.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the witness answer. [To the witness:] What do you say in response to the first part of the question?

The Witness. I say I do not think Mr. Webb's statement of the question is correct.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I want to be perfectly fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Answer as to the first part of the question. Let one question be put at a time.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I asked you if about a year or a year and a half before Judge Archbald applied to you for this Packer No. 3 and No. 4 Mr. Hill did not apply to you for these same banks for the Oxford washery and offer you 10 cents a ton in excess of what you were paying the Girard estate on prepared sizes and 5 cents a ton in excess of what you paid the Girard estate on buckwheat, and that you declined it? A. I declined the proposition made by Madeira, Hill & Co. because it embraced all of the banks on the Girard estate property in that vicinity, and especially the bank which they were very anxious to get hold of, namely, Packer No. 2. At that time we had contemplated the erection of a washery at that bank, Packer No. 2 being used in connection with Packer No. 4, they being the best banks, in our judgment, to be reworked. They were the banks which Madeira, Hill & Co. were tables. auxious to get and were not embraced in the negotiations we had with Judge Archbald. It is true that Judge Archbald also wished-these banks, but we declined to give him those banks, agreeing only to give him Packer 3 and the upper part of Packer 4, which were of small value.

Q. At 2 and 3 eents a ton extra royalty?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, did you not want to work all these banks yourselves? Did not your company want to work them all, not only 4 and 2, but did you not want your company and expect your company to work all these banks on the north side of that creek?-A. We did not, because we had never put up a washery on that We had contemplated at several times doing it, but we had been in hopes that we might secure a concession in royalty from the Girard estate and had delayed from time to time in putting up a washery at Packer No. 2

Q. You answered this letter from Mr. Hill to you?-A. I suppose I did. I do not know.

Mr. Manager WEBB. May we put that in evidence and have

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

OXFORD COAL Co., March 26, 1910.

Vice President and General Manager
Lehigh Valley Coal Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

the recent conversation between us

Dear Sir: Referring to the recent conversation between us in regard to the preparation for market of the coal from your Packer No. 4 culm bank through our Oxford washery—

We will operate this bank for you, pass through the washery and deliver the rice and barley sizes obtained therefrom to cars furnished by you at our plant (of course, assuming that this would not be considered an unfriendly move on our part or be objected to by the Philadelphia & Reading Co.) at prices on the basis of the 65 per cent contract.

delphia & Reading Co.) at prices on the basis of the 65 per cent contract.

We would reenforce this supply with the same sizes of coal from our Oxford bank up to the capacity of our washery. We will find disposition via the Philadelphia & Reading Rallway Co, of the sizes of coal above rice taken from your Packer No. 4 bank.

We would pay you on the sizes above rice coal taken from your bank 10 cents per ton on all domestic sizes and 5 cents per ton on pea and buckwheat in excess of the royalties due by you on these grades to the Cliench extern

Girard estate.

The life of the proposed arrangement to be that of the life of your present lease with the Girard estate, unless the bank should be exhausted sooner.

hausted sooner.

Of course, any arrangement made would have to be subject to strike, accident, and water-supply conditions. If the above meets with your approval we will take pleasure in closing the matter with you, and in such case will be very glad to take up with you the consideration of our operating for you the Packer No. 2 bank.

Awaiting the favor of an early reply, I am,
Yours, very truly,

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Does it appear by whom the letter was signed?

- Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Who wrote that letter?-I think either Mr. Madeira or Mr. Hill, of the firm of Madeira, Hill & Co. I assume that letter is correct.
- Q. What are Mr. Hill's initials?-A. Frank, I believe, is his name.
- Q. You say he wanted all the banks on the north side of the creek. I ask you if you did not tell them or write to them that you thought it was the best proposition for your company to operate these two banks yourselves?—A. I do not recall what I told them. I declined the proposition.
- Q. (Presenting letter.) Mr. Warriner, did you write that letter?—A. (Examining.) Yes; I wrote that.
 (The letter was handed to counsel for the respondent.)

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask that the Secretary read the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 76.]

MAY 3, 1910.

(The Lehigh Valley Coal Co., Coxe Bros. & Co. (Inc.), Wilkes-Barre, Pa., S. D. Warriner, vice president and general manager.)

Pa., S. D. Warriner, vice president and general manager.)

Mr. Frank A. Hill,
Care of Madeira, Hill & Co., Pottsville, Pa.

Dear Sir: Replying to your communication of March 6, I beg to say that I have had our division people go over the matter of leasing the culm banks at packer No. 2 and No. 4 and dividing the coal up as suggested by you, very carefully. As a result of their report, I am luclined to believe that our best proposition is to operate these banks ourselves. There are a number of complications which I do not see that we can get around by leasing them to you, and on this account would prefer to take the matter up on our own account.

Yours, very truly,

S. D. Warriner,

S. D. WARRINER, Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Now, Mr. Warriuer, you took this matter up with Mr. Thomas, did you not?—A. That matter?

Q. The Oxford washery proposition.—A. I do not recall.

think I probably did.

Q. He turned it down?-A. I think so; yes. I suppose that was it.

Q. Do you not know, Mr. Warriner, that the reason why you leased or agreed to lease this Packer No. 3 to Judge Archbald at a rate of royalty or excess of royalty of 2 and 3 cents was because he was the judge of the United States Commerce Court in Washington and had a suit then pending between your railroad company and the Interstate Commerce Commission?-A. I knew nothing about that suit, Mr. WEBB.

Q. Did you know that he was judge of the United States Commerce Court?-A. I knew he was judge of the Commerce Court; yes, sir.

Q. You did not-—A. I considered the proposition on its own merits as a good business proposition for the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. That is the first time you ever leased one of the culm banks to any man in 35 years?—A. No, sir; we leased a culm bank in the city of Wilkes-Barre about the same time.

Q. Owned by the Girard estate?-A. No, sir; not by the Girard estate.

Q. That is the first time in 35 years that a culm bank was leased by you from the Girard estate, is it not?—A. I do not recall, so far as the Girard estate is concerned, that we ever leased any culm bank; but we had leased other culm banks.

Q. I am speaking about the Girard estate, from which you held these leases.—A. I do not recall. I have not been connected with the affairs of the company that long; but I do not recall any other.

Q. In all your official connection with the company, did you ever know the company to agree to sublease any of the land leased by your company from the Girard estate except in this one instance to Judge Archbald?—A. No; I do not recall any.

Q. Did you and President Thomas speak about Judge Archbald's connection with this proposition and discuss whether you should grant him his request or not?-A. I simply told him at that time that this application had been made. I do not think he gave me any instructions whatever in regard to it. At the time I spoke to him it had not reached a head where it was such a matter as I could definitely take up with him as a finished proposition for his approval or otherwise. I simply discussed it with him in an informal way as simply giving him a piece of information, not with the object of reporting to him a piece of information, not with the object of reporting to min or securing instructions from him.

Q. I believe you said he would agree to your recommendations about such matters?—A. Oh, yes.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that hereafter the managers and counsel must confine themselves within the rules of practice ordinarily applied to direct examination. On cross-examination counsel are permitted to reexamine on the matters upon which the witness has been examined; but the Chair will not permit a redirect examination except upon such matters or upon a matter which the managers or counsel state they inadvertently omitted. would be no termination of an examination. Otherwise there

Mr. Manager WEBB. I thought I confined my redirect to the counsel's cross-examination.

Recross-examination:

When you are talking about No. 4 Packer dump, will you explain what you mean? Is there no designation of one from the other ?- A. There were two culm banks, separated by a slate pile, or something of that kind, and locally known as No. 4. The main Packer No. 4, being the larger one, was the dump we were working. The small one we had worked at one time. nearer Packer No. 3, but it is locally known as a part of Packer No. 4 dump.
Q. What is the direction of that smaller Packer No. 4 from the larger Packer No. 4?-A. East.

Q. I will speak of it as eastern No. 4 as distinguished from western No. 4. How far is eastern No. 4 from Packer No. 3?-A. It is adjacent to it.

Q. It is close to it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. This hole that you spoke of, into which you put a part of this material and had worked or used, is between those two, between eastern No. 4 and No. 3?-A. Yes; as I recollect.

Q. Can you tell me whether the Oxford dump is nearer the western No. 4, the main No. 4 dump, than it is to No. 3? Which is the nearer to the Oxford dump, Packer No. 3 or main Packer No. 4 or western No. 4, if you can tell us?—A. I would not want to say.

Q. You say that about the same time that these negotiations were going on your company leased another culm bank?-A.

Q. I wish you would tell us what bank that was, very briefly, so that it can be identified.—A. We leased a culm bank in the city of Wilkes-Barre to Siebold Dougherty, of Wilkes-Barre. It is a small bank. That was not adjacent to our mining operations.

Q. You also used the expression "We have leased other culm Have you leased others besides that one?-A. We have leased some others, or agreed to. I do not know whether the transaction is finally completed yet or not. There were a number of transactions in process of completion at the time I left the service of the company, and I am not sure whether they have been definitely signed or not. They were banks in the neighborhood of Wilkes-Barre.

Q. I notice in the proposition that was made by Madeira, Hill & Co., which has been read here, there is nothing said about coal being transported over your road. Was there any agreement or understanding of that kind outside of the letter?— A. Not outside of the letter from Madeira, Hill & Co. One of the complications in connection with leasing was whether an arrangement could be made for transporting from the Reading to the Lehigh Valley tracks. There was a complication we did not feel like bringing up at that time.

Q. You have said that Madeira, Hill & Co. offered to lease all your dumps?—A. Yes.

Q. All the packer dumps?—A. Yes; they were very anxious to get them.

Q. I find that in the letter which has been read here there is a proposition to lease only No. 2 and No. 4.-A. 2 and 4; Those are the desirable banks on the property. business standpoint packers No. 2 and No. 4 were desirable. They are certainly the best banks.

Q. Packer No. 3 was right across the creek from them, was it not?-A. It was on the north side of the creek. I do not recall how near.

Q. Packer No. 3 was right across the creek from the Oxford dump?-A. They were all close together.

Q. They made you their proposition for No. 4 and No. 2, leaving out No. 3? They did not ask for that?—A. I do not recall how that was. Q. The letter speaks for itself. Do you know whether or not, as a matter of fact, Madeira, Hill & Co. shipped their products from the Oxford dump over the Reading road?—A. Yes, sir; they shipped on the Reading.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) We would like to ask one further question. Did not he, in this proposition submitted to you, agree to take a part of the Oxford output over your road, together with a certain size of coal taken from Packer No. 4 and No. 2?-A. As I understand the letter, it was to be delivered to us; but the Reading were to get a part of the haul.

Q. Exactly .- A. It was not to be mined and shipped on our

Q. Exclusively, no.—A. But shipped from the Reading and delivered to us for purchase if we desired it.

Q. With reference to Packer No. 4, mentioned in this letter, the washery of the Oxford people was below this Packer No. 4; Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Warriner, two No. 4s have been spoken about here, and I am a little confused and I fear others may be in knowing what you are talking about.

Q. But Packer 4 and 2 were nearer the Oxford washery than 3, were they not?—A. I can not tell you. I never looked at it with that object in view, and would not be able to tell you.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire,

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE E. KIRKPATRICK.

George E. Kirkpatrick, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Kirkpatrick, what is your position with reference to the Girard estate?—A. I am the superintendent in charge of the Girard estate.

Q. Briefly, what is that?—A. Stephen Girard died in 1831 and left a large, extent to the circ of Philodolphia in trust. What eft a large estate to the city of Philadelphia in trust. That estate is cared for under an act of the Assembly of the State of Pennsylvania by a board of trustees, 12 of the board appointed by the courts, the other 3 ex officio members of the Philadelphia city government; and I am the officer chosen by that board to manage the property.

Q. Does the estate consist in coal fields or coal property in Schuylkill County, Pa.?-A. It consists of a large amount of real estate in Philadelphia, and a large quantity of coal land in Schuylkill and Columbia Counties, Pa., and a certain amount of personal property.

. Q. Have you leased your coal lands, or a part of them, to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?—A. A considerable portion of the coal land in Schuylkill County is leased to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. That is owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. So

I have been given to understand.

Q. Is Packer No. 3 covered by one of those leases?-A. Packer No. 3 is one of those leases.

Q. When does that lease expire?—A. December 31, 1913.

Q. State whether or not you know that the value of culm or culm banks has increased within the last 8 or 10 years .- A. Very decidedly.

Q. Have you with you the original records or letters containing the correspondence between yourself and Maj. Archbald and S. D. Warriner?—A. I have the Archbald letters in the Sergeant at Arms' office and the copies I have with me here.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Please bring them in.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You may use the copies, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We shall use the copies. To the witness:] I will ask you, first, if you know what the general policy of coal-owning railroads is with reference to leasing or subleasing or selling their coal property?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit the witness should not be called on to testify as an expert in regard to railroads generally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be read.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will withdraw it if any objection is made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do object to it.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is withdrawn.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Kirkpatrick, go along in your own way and as briefly as possible state your connection and association with Judge Archbald or Maj. James Archbald, your engineer, and give the correspondence between your estate with reference to Packer No. 3. Give the first communication, A. In the latter part of December, 1911, Judge Archbald made an obligation for a lease or license to work what we call Packer 3 and 4 culm banks. Those culm banks are at present under lease to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. Judge Archbald said that he had made arrangements with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. by which we would be permitted to make this lease to him, notwithstanding the fact that—

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness, I think, is stating correspondence which is here.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I want you to hand over the correspondence and have it read.—A. I have it seriatim here [producing papers].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is all in the correspondence, the Chair submits, the facts can be proven in that way and no other.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think the Chair is entirely right, and that is what I asked the witness to give.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the letters be identified and read in evidence. The witness ought not to be asked to Mr. Manager WEBB. I did not ask that.
Mr. SIMPSON. Let them be identified and read.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is no question about the letters.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Is this all the correspondence that you have in reference to this matter?—A. It is.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 77.]

(Girard estate in Schuylkill and Columbia Counties. James Archbald, fr., engineer and agent. Office of the engineers, rooms 404, 405, and 406 Thompson Building.)

George E. Kirkpatrick, Esq., Superintendent Girard Estate, Philadelphia.

George E. Kierpatrick, Esq.

Superintendent Givard Estate, Philadelphia.

Dear Sir: I inclose an application which I have received from R. W. Archbald, James F. Bell, V. L. Petersen, and T. H. Jones for the lease of the Packer No. 3 and the upper or eastern Packer No. 4 culm banks, shown on blue print which I inclose. R. W. Archbald is my uncle and one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court. I have written him asking him for information regarding his associates in the application, with special reference to their financial responsibility and experience in the coal business. I have also asked him the terms and conditions upon which the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. will agree to release these banks, which it now holds under its leases of Packers No. 2-4 and No. 3 collieries. I have also written General Manager Warriner, of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., for this same information. I will forward their replies to you.

These banks are considered among the poorest banks on the Girard estate, though probably better than what is left of the Oxford bank. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. reclaimed some of the upper No. 4 bank, but gave it up because of the ashes in the bank. I think these are only on top and could be easily removed before the culm is taken. I have had surveys made of these banks, and since I received this application have asked Mine Inspector Weller to make tests, which he will begin to-morrow. From these I can determine with reasonable accuracy the amount of coal in the bank.

Some time ago I suggested to Mr. Frank A. Hill, manager of the Oxford Coal Co., that as these banks were not first rate the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. might be willing to release them, and suggested that the Oxford Coal Co. when an application for them, which, after examining them with Mr. Weller and myself, he intimated that it would do. On receiving the inclosed application, I informed him of it and told him the Oxford Coal Co. should have made an application. He told me it had done so through its Philadelphia representative, Madetra, H

JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr., Engineer Girard Estate.

SCEANTON, Pa., December 19, 1911.

Col. James Archbald,

Engineer of Stephen Girard Estate.

Dear Sir: We hereby make application for a lease of the culm bank near Shenandoah, known as Packer No. 3, the same to cover also the upper part of the adjoining Packer No. 4 dump. We propose to incorporate as "The Jones Coal Co.," with a capital of $25,600, and to put up a washery which will handle some four or five hundred tons of coal a day. We understand that these dumps are now subject to a lease to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which expires December 31, 1913, and which possibly will be renewed. But we have the assurance of that company that on certain terms and conditions, which have practically been agreed upon between us, it will be satisfactory to them to have us lease from you to the extent suggested. We shall expect to pay the current royalties, but we suggest that owing to the character of the dump, which is not the best, the royalties should not be the highest. We shall be prepared, if the lease is made, to put up the washery with reasonable promptness.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. Archbald.

DECEMBER 27, 1911.

Mr. James Archbald, Jr.,

Engineer Girard Estate.

Dear Sir: Your favor of the 26th instant, inclosing statement of rent charges falling due at Girardville January 1, 1912, is duly received, as is also your inclosure of an application of Messrs. Archbald, Bell, Petersen, and Jones for a lease of certain portions of the Packer 3 and 4 culm banks. Messrs. Madeira, Hill & Co. (the Oxford Coal Co.) have repeatedly made verbal application for a lease of these banks, but we have declined to consider their application pending the negotiation of the new leases, which, as now considered, cover these banks.

George Kirkpatrick.

[Extract from report of engineer, Dec. 30, 1911.]

PACKER NO. 3 AND PACKER NO. 4 EAST CULM BANKS, APPLICATION FOR LEASE.

On December 26 I forwarded to you an application from Robert W. Archbald, James P. Bell, V. L. Petersen, and T. H. Jones for a lease of the Packers No. 3 and upper or eastern No. 4 culm banks, in which it was stated that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which now holds these banks under its colliery leases, would, under certain conditions, consent to release them.

I now inclose letters from Judga Arabbald, Acta D. Company of the consent of t sent to release them.

I now inclose letters from Judge Archbald, dated December 27, 1911, and General Manager Warriner, of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., dated December 28, 1911, with reference to these conditions. Mr. Warriner's statement with reference to the No. 4 bank refers to the western No. 4 bank, which is much better than the eastern. Judge Archbald is a member of the United States Court of Commerce. He is my uncle. With reference to his associates, I inclose letter from him dated December 26, 1911.

Air. Frank A. Hill. representing the Oxford Coal Co., has spoken to me several times with reference to securing these banks for that company, and I believe that Mr. P. C. Madeira has also made a verbal application to you to the same effect. As the Oxford Coal Co. has handled the very poor bank which it now has so thoroughly and to the advantage of the Girard estate, all possible consideration should be given it on our part, but it is not probable that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. will consent to release these banks except for preparation through a washery shipping over the Lehigh Valley Railroad, which the Oxford Coal Co. can hardly do from its present plant.

In view of the fact that the banks in question are at present covered by the mining licenses of Packers Nos. 3 and 4 collieries, and will be covered until December 31, 1915, by the proposed new mining licenses of these collieries, and also thereafter, if the new lessees desire to work them, it would seem best to postpone consideration of any other disposition of them until the new mining licenses are made. It is, of course, to the advantage of the Girard estate that these banks be worked as soon as possible at a fair royalty. I have had a survey made of these banks, and Mine Inspector Weller is now making tests of them. From these I will make an estimate of the coal to be won from them, which I will have in your hands by January 3, 1912.

[R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.] SCRANTON, PA., December 26, 1911.

Col. JAMES ARCHBALD.

Col. James Archbald.

Dear Sir: In response to your inquiry of December 23 with regard to the experience and financial standing of those who are associated with me in the application for a lease of the culm banks near Shenandoah, permit me to say that Mr. Petersen, who will have charge of the proposed washery, is a man of exceptional ability in coal matters. He was for a long time with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and at present has charge of the operations of the Humbert Coal Co., having mines at Jessup, in this county, and others also in Schuylkill, I do not know just where. Mr. Bell is a lawyer and is very conversant with coal matters, and is interested with Mr. Petersen in the Humbert Coal Co. I am advised that their interests in that company ought to make them worth about $25,000 each. Mr. Jones is worth anywhere from $50,000 to $75,000. He has a general acquaintance with coal matters, and is also interested in slate quarries at Slatington, Pa. In addition to these, there are other parties whose names do not appear. One of them, Mr. Howell Harris, is a well-known coal man here in Scranton, and Mr. Hulbet, of New York, is associated with the coal men there who are going to take the product. Mr. T. F. Farrell, a retail coal dealer of New York City, is going to put up the money. Care has been exercised in these selections so as to make a combination that will insure success. Trusting that this will be satisfactory,

R. W. Archbald.

SCRANTON, PA., December 27, 1911.

Col. JAMES ARCHBALD.

Col. James Archbald.

Dear Sir: Replying to your inquiry of December 26, permit me to say that the conditions upon which the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. consent to our having culm dump Packer No. 3 and the eastern part of Packer No. 4 arc simply these: First, that the coal shall be shipped over the Lehigh Valley Railroad; second, that in addition to the royalties paid to the Girard estate there shall be 2 or 3 cents a ton extra paid to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.; third, that no slush shall be allowed to get into the stream; fourth, where the creek has to be cleared there shall be a proportionate sharing in the expense; and, fifth, that reasonable diligence shall be exercised in the prosecution of the work.

Yours, very truly, Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

THE LEHIGH VALLEY COAL CO., COXE BROS. & CO. (INC.), Wilkes-Barre, Pa., December 28, 1911.

Mr. JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr., Engineer Girard Estate,

Engineer Girard Estate.

Dear Sir: I have your letter of the 26th instant at hand. Judge Archbald called to see me recently and said that he would like to rework some of the culm banks at Packer No. 3 colliery. I advised him that if it was the pleasure of the Girard estate to extend to him a lease of this bank we would not interpose any objection, provided he agreed to certain arrangements which we informally discussed.

I did not agree to let him have the No. 4 bank as we are already putting some of this through the No. 4 breaker.

Yours, very truly,

S. D. Warriner,

[Extract from report of superintendent, Jan. 4, 1912.]

Messrs. R. W. Archbald, James F. Bell, V. L. Petersen, and T. H. Jones (who propose to incorporate as the Jones Coal Co.) have made application for a lease of a portion of the Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm banks.

application for a lease of a portion of the Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm banks.

They propose to erect a washery capable of shipping four or five hundred tons per day and to pay "current royalties."

These banks are now included in the Packer leases and are also included in our offer to renew, which is now under consideration by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. The applicants for this lease state that they have arranged with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. the terms on which that company will assent to this use of the culm banks.

Mr. Percy C. Madeira, for the Oxford Coal Co., has also made application (verbal, but oft repeated) for these banks, proposing to work them through the Oxford washery, already erected and in operation. The answer given to him has been that the banks at present are in the control of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which company also has the option of renewal upon the terms approved by the board of directors of city trusts at its meeting of November 8, 1911, and that so long as this option is outstanding the separate leasing of these culm banks can not be taken into consideration.

The fact that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. has arranged to consent to the working of these banks by Messrs. Archbald et al. somewhat changes the situation, but I believe should not change our attitude, and recommend that action upon this application be postponed until the negotiation for the renewal of the Packer leases has at least made more definite progress.

Geraed Estate, Office of the Engineer.

GIRARD ESTATE, OFFICE OF THE ENGINEER, January 3, 1912.

GEORGE E. KIRKPATRICK, Esq., Superintendent Girard Estate,

DEAR SIE: I inclose estimates referred to on page 9 of my report of December 30, 1911, of the amount of coal contained in and to be shipped from the Packer No. 3 and Packer No. 4 eastern banks. These together make 521,383 tons to be shipped. The royalty value at the present Oxford washery rates would be $122,925, or at the rates proposed under the new mining licenses for the Packer collieries, $179,580. Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr., Engineer Girard Estate.

Superintendent reported:

Submitting request of Messrs. R. W. Archald. J. F. Bell, V. L. Peterson, and T. H. Jones for a lease of portions of Packer Nos. 3 and 4 culm banks, and stating that Mr. Percy C. Madeira, representing the Oxford Coal Co., has also made application for a lease of these banks, but has been held off on the ground that the offer to renew the Packer leases to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. prevents an immediate consideration of his request. Therefore, recommending that action on the application be postponed.

Engineer reported:
That an application from R. W. Archbald and others has been received and forwarded for a lease of portions of Packer Nos. 3 and 4 culm banks, for which banks also the Oxford Coal Co. has made verbal application.

Consideration of the application of Messrs. R. W. Archbald and others for a lease of the Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm banks was postponed, pending the conclusion of the negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. relative to the renewal of the colliery leases in which these culm banks are now included.

GEORGE E. KIRKPATRICK, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I expect to be in Philadelphia next Monday afternoon, February 5. on my way to Washington, and I write to inquire whether I could call and see you briefly with regard to the application recently made by myself and others for a lease from the Girard estate of Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm dumps at Shenandoah. It would accommodate me if you could fix an hour as soon after 1.30 as possible.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

GIRARD ESTATE, January 30, 1912.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your favor of the 29th, suggesting that I fix an hour on Monday next, February 5, at which I can arrange to meet you at the office of the Girard estate in Philadelphia. At this time I believe that I can, without difficulty, see you at 1.30 p. m. on that day and will do my best to be at your service at that hour. Should anything transpire to prevent my meeting you, I will endeavor to advise you, so that a later hour may be arranged.

Yours, truly,

Geo. E. Kirkpatrick.

GEO. E. KIRKPATRICK, Superintendent Girard Estate.

[Extract from report of George E. Kirkpatrick superintendent to the committee on Girard estate without the city, dated Feb. 8, 1912.] Judge R. W. Archbald, of Scranton, applicant for a lease of Packer Nos. 3 and 4 culm banks, has called at the Philadelphia office of the Girard estate to urge a consideration of his application, and I repeated to him the conclusion of your committee—that the leasing of culm banks would not be considered until after the closing of the negotiations for the renewal of the colliery agreements, which conclusion had already been sent to him in writing through the Pottsville office.

[Extract from the minutes of the committee on Girard estate without the city, Feb. 8, 1912.]

Superintendent reported:

[Packer Nos. 3 and 4 culm banks. Lease of.]

That Judge R. W. Archbald, of Scranton, applicant for a lease of Packer No. 3 and Packer No. 4 culm banks, has called at the Philadelphia office to urge consideration of his application and that the conclusion of the committee has been repeated to him to the effect that the leasing of culm banks would not be considered until after the closing of the negotiations for the renewal of the colliery agreements.

During the reading of the exhibit,

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, it is agreed between the managers and counsel for the respondent that the table might be printed instead of being read; it can be better understood after having been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done without objection.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Kirkpatrick, I understand from this correspondence in the record that after the application had been made to the Girard estate, setting forth that the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. had been obtained to the sublease, or re-lease as we would call it, your estate declined to agree to it?-A. That is right.

Q. And after your estate had declined to agree to it, you sent notice of that declination to Judge Archbald at the Pottsville office?-A. Through the Pottsville office.

Q. And that after that time the judge wrote you a letter asking for a date or an hour when he could see you, and did see you, and that you used the language in your report, that he urged you or urged the estate to agree to re-lease to him this Packer No. 3. What language did he use or what did he say?-A. I can not recall the exact language, but the general effect was calling attention to the fact that the quicker a culm bank is worked the better for a landowner, which, of course, we both knew. That is my recollection of the urging, calling attention to the advantage to the Girard estate of making a quick lease of this property.

Q. When the present lease of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. expires in 1913, I believe, is it?—A. On December 31.
Q. Will you thenceforward get larger royalties?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit this witness is a witness and not a prophet. Mr. Manager WEBB. I will ask the witness, Mr. President, if he expects to demand larger royalties, if the counsel desires it put in that way.

The Witness. If I expect to demand higher royalties?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, sir.

I have already done so. The WITNESS.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB,) Mr. Kirkpatrick, how long have you been associated with the Girard estate?-A. For 34

Q. How long has the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., or the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., been leasing from your estate?was leasing through its subordinate corporation, the Philadelphia Coal Co., when I went into the employment of the Girard estate in 1878. I can not offhand say how long before that time.

Q. Did the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. ever before during your experience as manager of the Girard estate consent to a re-lease or sublease of any of the land that you had leased to it?-

A. No.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Kirkpatrick, the question was put to you just now by Mr. Manager Webs that the Girard estate declined to make the lease that was asked for by Judge Archbald and his associates. Now, as a matter of fact, I understand what you did say was to tell him and to tell few moments and present it to the Senate.

the Madeira Co. that their applications would not be considered until the question of renewing the lease of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. was settled .- A. That is a statement of it more exactly.

Q. It was simply postponed?—A. Postponed.

Q. And not declined?—A. Not declined in the offhand manner that the word "declined" would imply.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Temporarily declined.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I observe in the proposition that was made about leasing this bank, signed by R. W. Archbald, James F. Bell, V. L. Petersen, and T. H. Jones, that Judge Archbald thereby makes known that "we hereby make application for a lease," and so forth; that he is a party to it. It appears that you had with Judge. to it. In any of the communications that you had with Judge Archbald on the subject written or-you put in all the writing, I believe?—A. All the writing was put in; yes, sir.

Q. In all the talk that you had with him-did you talk with him more than once?—A. Only this one time.

Q. That is, when he stopped at Philadelphia on his way down to Washington to the Commerce Court?-A. Yes.

Q. Did he at that time make any suggestion or intimation that the fact that he was one of the parties was to be concealed from the whole world or from anybody?-A. No; not a word.

Q. Did anybody during these negotiations make any suggestion to you that it was not to be known that Judge Archbald was dealing in the matter?—A. No such thought was advanced.

Q. There is an expression here in one of these papers that has been read which I will read. I do not understand it, and perhaps you will explain it. It is an extract from the report of your engineer on December 30, 1911. It reads:

In view of the fact that the banks in question are at present covered by the mining licenses of Packer Nos. 3 and 4 collleries and will be covered until December 31, 1915.

Is that a misprint or a mistake?-A. It is correct; but it requires possibly a little explanation.

Q. That is what I wanted.—A. In that letter the engineer assumes that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. will renew its lease. One of the terms in the lease which the Girard estate proposed to the Lehigh Valley Co. was that it should have two years at the beginning of its new lease in which it could work these culm banks; but at the end of those two years if it had not started to work the culm banks they would be taken from them and we would be free to deal with any applicant who chose to appear.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it desired that the witness shall be retained further?

Mr. Manager WEBB. No, sir; the witness may be excused, so far as the managers are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally ex-

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we would like to call Mr. V. L. Petersen and Mr. James F. Bell, signers of this application, but we are informed that they are not here, although they have been served.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do you desire to have them called?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will call the witnesses.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I think it is due to the witnesses whose names have been called, or to Mr. Petersen at any rate, to state that we subpænned him, and we have, as to our witnesses, communicated with them about the time we want them here. I think it is possible that the reason he is not here may be owing to the fact that he thinks he is not to come until we want him.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Under that explanation I will not ask that an attachment be issued at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does that relate to both witnesses

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; Mr. Bell is not on our list. Mr. Manager WEBB. I should like to have Mr. Bell called, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will call the witness.

The Sergeant at Arms. James F. Bell! James F. Bell! Appear and answer summons. James F. Bell!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the witness has not reported in obedience to the subpæna.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask for an attachment for this witness. We will prepare the order in a

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let me make another explanation about Mr. Petersen. I am just told by my associate that his name appears on the list as V. L. Patterson. Probably that is the trouble about his being served on the managers' list.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will say that he has been personally served, we are informed.

I should like to call Mr. Edward B. Smith as the next witness.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD B. SMITH.

Edward B. Smith, having been duly affirmed, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Smith, are you a director in the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. I am.

Q. Are you a director in the Girard estate outside of the city?—A. I am a member of the board of city trusts, which has charge of the Girard estate and other charities.

Q. Do you know Mr. Eben B. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. I do.

Q. State if he ever said anything to you about a proposition of Judge Archbald to lease Packer No. 3, and, if so, what it as.—A. I spoke to him about it. Q. You spoke to him about it. What was said?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I do not see exactly

Mr. Manager WEBB (to Mr. Worthington). You may object to that, if you wish, and I will withdraw it; but I want to ask him for the purpose of showing what conversation took place between Mr. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., and Mr. Smith, director of the Girard estate, with reference to that dump.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do object to that unless it is proposed in some way to connect Judge Archbald with it or to show that he had knowledge about it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We propose to connect this application of Judge Archbald with this conversation, Mr. President; to show that that application at the time of this conversation was pending before the Girard estate, of which this witness was a director; and that the president of the railroad company, who was vice president and general manager of the coal company, who had formally agreed to lease this culm bank, subject to the action of the Girard estate, was then talking to this witness with reference to the very matter that was pending before the Girard estate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Of course, you perceive we make no objection to what was done in the way of action, either by the Girard people or by the Lehigh Valley people, on Judge Arch-bald's application, but when it comes to any talk that was had between persons connected as associates that did not involve action upon it, I do not see how it would be competent to affect us. Suppose we should say that this gentleman had had a conversation with another officer of the Lehigh Valley, or somebody connected with the Girard trust, and that one said, "I think it is proper that the application ought to be granted," we could not offer that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be necessary to connect the respondent with the conversation in some way. The fact that there was an application pend-

Mr. Manager WEBB. I want to show that as a result of this conversation between the witness and the president of the railroad company this witness let the application die or took no more interest in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He can testify as to the fact that he did do something in consequence

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am going to ask him that question next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What the conversation was is an entirely different matter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that, because it has already been shown what action was taken at a formal meeting of the board of city trusts, which had this matter in charge. All this correspondence and the reports of engineers were submitted to them, and the minutes show that they decided they would postpone the matter until after it was determined whether the Lehigh Valley would get another lease, a continuing lease of the property, and Judge Archbald and his associates were so notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection, then, is to the repetition of testimony; is that it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If he expects to repeat it, it is unnecessary; and if he expects to contradict it, it is incompetent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the question to be this: The manager desires to prove that certain action was taken, and then desires to prove what was the cause of that action. The Chair does not understand by that that it goes to the extent of proving what the conversation was. For instance, to take an illustration from the books, a witness can say that he went around a certain corner of a street and that he did so because of something that had been said to him—not to be permitted to state what the particular thing said was, but to give it as a cause for his action. The Chair understands that to be the limit of the manager's question, that the action was taken in consequence of certain transactions.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) In consequence of your conversation with Mr. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., what action did you take with reference to this application for Packer No. 3 before the Girard estate?—A. At the next meeting of the committee, of which I was one, the committee on property throughout the city, I remarked-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). Answer the question. The statement you made is not necessary.

The WITNESS. There was nothing done.

Mr. Manager WEBB (to Mr. Worthington). Examine the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not care to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire. Mr. Manager WEBB. The witness may be excused, so far as we are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be excused.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The next witness we would like to have is Mr. Eben B. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Eben B. Thomas will be called into the Chamber.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am informed that Mr. Thomas is not present. Therefore I will call Maj. James Archbald as a TESTIMONY OF JAMES ARCHBALD.

James Archbald, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Archbald, what position do you hold with reference to the Girard estate, please, sir?-A. Engineer.

Q. Did you ever have any negotiations with Judge Robert W. Archbald with reference to securing from the Girard estate what is known as Packer Nos. 3 and 4?-A. Packer 3 and eastern No. 4 bank; yes, sir-culm banks, not collieries.

Have you any correspondence between yourself and Judge Archbald with reference to the matter?-A. I have; yes, sir.

Q. Have you copies of it?—A. I have.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are willing that the Secretary may read them.

The WITNESS. I will say, Mr. Webb, that I culled out, while hearing Mr. Kirkpatrick, all the letters which he read. I have a full set now. I have picked out only the letters which have not heretofore been read in the case; but if you want all of

Mr. Manager WEBB. I shall only call for those. The Witness. There may be one here that Mr. Kirkpatrick read; I am not quite clear as to that. I will say also that two or three of these are personal letters. As you know, they appeared in the record before; but they are really personal letters,
Mr. WORTHINGTON. They may all be read by the Secretary, so far as we are concerned, without proving them further. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be read.

The Secretary read the letters, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 78," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 78.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., August 14, 1911.

SCRANTON, PA., August 14, 1911.

MY DEAR JIM: In the negotiations passing with regard to the Oxford washery at Shaft, the question comes up as to whether the lease with the Girard estate contains any provision for a renewal. I understand that the lease runs out in about two years or so and that the dump would not be exhausted by that time. If this is the case and there is no privilege of renewal, would it be possible to secure an assurance from the Girard estate that the lease would be extended to cover the life of the dump? I am addressing you both at Pottsville and at Marthas Vineyard, not knowing just where you are.

I have written to the Lehigh Valley people to see whether I could get any arrangement with them about one or other of the adjoining dumps, but have not heard from them.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Aechbald,

A true copy.

AUGUST 16, 1911.

JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of August 14, relative to the Oxford washery lease, this lease, which expires on December 31, 1913, contains no provision for renewal. It is probable that the bank will be nearly, if not completely, exhausted by that time; but I think the Girard estate will assure the lessee that the lease will be renewed for a period sufficient to allow its complete exhaustion. This can be ascertained upon an application from the lessee for such an assurance, which I would submit to our board of directors. With my present view of the conditions upon this lease, I would approve such an application.

Very truly, yours,

James Archbald, Jr., Engineer Girard Estate.

SCRANTON, PA., November 17, 1911.

My Dear Jim: You will remember that I wrote you two or three months ago about trying to make an arrangement with regard to getting one of the dumps of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. on the Girard estate near Shenandoah. I communicated with Mr. Warriner to that end, and have recently had an interview with him, with the result that if I can get from the Girard estate a lease of the particular dump which I have in mind, which is at Packer No. 3, on favorable—that is to say, current—terms and conditions, the Lehigh Valley will approve of it provided they get transportation and certain other things they ask for. I am not quite in shape as yet to see you definitely, but I thought I ought at the earliest practicable moment to communicate in this way, letting you know what had been done and preparing you for it. For the purpose of having a definite understanding in the matter I shall, of course, expect to come to Pottsville and talk it over with you. And when I am in a position for this I probably will call you up by long-distance telephone and make an appointment. This letter is therefore simply by way of anticipation.

When I see you I will have quite a little to tell you of Commerce Court experiences. I go down to Washington for a day's consultation the middle of next week, but after that I do not expect to be called there until along in January. Perhaps not then, if some of the hotheads carry out their threats to put the court out of business.

Very truly, yours,

Scranton, Pa., November 22, 1911.

My Dear Jamie: The bank that is recommended to me is Packer No. 3. And this, as pointed out to me by Mr. Warriner on his map, was the one farthest up the creek and on the opposite side from the Oxford washery. As I understand it, it is the largest one there on the Lehigh leases. As described to me, it is a sort of double dump. I think probably that I will ask for a separate lease and not tie up with the Oxford people, and, of course, will have to pay the colliery rate which you mention, the same as others. As soon as I am positive that I can carry the matter through with the parties with whom I am negotiating I will call you up and come down and see you, so as to make a definite arrangement.

Yours, very truly.

R. W. Archeald.

If Mr. Hill is after this dump, please do not let him get ahead of me.

Dear Sir: I have received the application of December 19, of yourself, James F. Bell. B. L. Petersen, and T. H. Jones for a lease to the Jones Coal Co. of Packer No. 3 and Northern No. 4 culm banks. I expect to present this application to the committee on Girard estate without the city at its next meeting, which will be held on January 4, 1912. Please give me, at your earliest convenience, such information as you think I will need with reference to the financial standing of your associates and their experience in the coal business.

Very truly, yours,

Engineer Girard Estate.

DEAR SIR: At the stated meeting of the committee on Girard estate without the city, held on Thursday, the 4th instant, the following action was taken:

"Consideration of the application of Messrs. R. W. Archbald and others for a lease of the Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm banks was postponed pending the conclusion of the negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. relative to the renewal of the colliery leases in which these culm banks are now included."

Col. James Archbald, Pottsville, Pa.

Dear Sir: Judge Archbald, under date of January 2, 1912, wrote me from Florida in regard to the matter he was speaking to you about and for which an application had been made to the Girard estate. In his letter he stated that he had written you and you would advise me of the result of the application, which I should expect shortly after the close of this month. Since the receipt of the judge's letter the other gentlemen interested have been to see me several times regarding it and to see what information I had. I wish you would let me know, if convenient, what disposition was made of the application.

Yours, very truly,

James F. Bell.

DEAR SIR: At the meeting of the committee on Girard estate without the city, held on Thursday, January 4, 1912, the following action was taken:

"Consideration of the application of Messrs. R. W. Archbald and others for a lease of the Packer No. 3 and No. 4 culm banks was postponed pending the conclusion of the negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. relative to the renewal of the colliery leases in which these culm banks are now included."

Supt. Kirkpatrick and I had a meeting with General Manager Warriner, of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., yesterday with reference to the renewal of the colliery leases, and it is probable that these will be definitely settled within the next two months.

Very respectfully, yours,

James Archbald, Jr.,

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Archbald, your report shows that Packer No. 4 contained 48,705 tons to be shipped or to be won. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is Packer eastern No. 4?—A. Eastern No. 4; yes, sir.
Q. Your report shows that in Packer No. 3 there are 472,678 tons to be won; that is, coal to be taken out and shipped?-A.

Q. A total of something over 520,000 tons in those two dumps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these Packers about the average Packer dumps?—A. consider them below the average.

Q. How much below the average?—A. That would be merely a matter of opinion. I would say not very much below. At the time this matter came up, Packer No. 3 dump, which was the larger one, was marked on our maps "slate bank," and we had an idea that it was very much poorer than any bank we had, as you will notice from my statements in the letters; and after making those tests we found that it was practically, as far as concerns where there was coal, an average bank. There are, however, large deposits of rock and slate that are more or less separate banks, but intermixed with the coal banks, so that it is undoubtedly below the average. And No. 4 eastern bank is very much below the average. That is really a slate bank and not a coal bank.

Q. That is the smaller bank?-A. Yes.

Q. The 48,000-ton bank?-A. Yes.

This bank showed 15 per cent prepared sizes, did it not?-

A. Yes, sir.

cerned.

Q. And it showed 14 per cent buckwheat and 12 per cent rice. Is not that a little above the average bank?—A. I think you are wrong about those percentages. They would be bigger than you quote. Those are the percentages of the whole content. The percentages of coal—well, yes; if you do not care to go into detail, it does show better. But, as I explained to you in the committee, the hand tests always show a much larger proportion of prepared coal than we are able to get out of the bank under any conditions. At that time you asked me what the average was and I said between 5 and 10 per cent, and I find on examination last year our banks averaged 8 per cent.

Q. This bank, on hand tests, averaged 15 per cent?—A. Yes, sir; but if I were making that estimate for a buyer or operator. I would cut that down 50 per cent, at least, and say we would get only one-half of that so far as actual shipments are con-

Q. That would be about 7½ per cent?-A. Yes; that would be about our average—8 per cent is our average.
Q. Then this is about an average bank, is it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Within one-half of 1 per cent of an average bank?-A. No, sir.

Q. The difference between 7½ and 8 per cent?—A. No. It contains too much rock to be an average bank.

Q. And yet your hand tests showed 15 per cent prepared sizes?—A. Yes; where there is coal. But a large part of the bank is rock, and it is undoubtedly, in my mind, not an average bank. But not very much below the average. I would say this bank and the Oxford bank are about on a par. I consider the Oxford below the average.

Q. As to whether it is an average bank or not depends on your judgment as to how much refuse is there besides real coal?-A. Yes.

Q. Suppose this bank contains 46,000,000 cubic feet and 472,000 Yes; but we would not win that much, quite.

Q. That is what your report shows.—A. Very true.

Q. 472,000 tons in Packer No. 3 bank to be won.—A. Very true.

Q. And 48,000 tons in Packer No. 4 to be won?—A. Yes.

Q. And if that much coal can be won out of 46,000,000 feet cubic contents, that is a good content, is it not?-A. Well, I would say it was, off hand, in that respect. It is, however, not an average bank; it is not up to the average.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all. The witness is with the respondent.

Cross-examination .

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Had any part of Packer No. 3 culm bank been taken away at any time from the way it was originally made?—A. No; not Packer No. 3.

Q. Not Packer No. 3?—A. Yes; by the Lehigh Valley Railroad It had taken some under a track which they expected to but in that ran through the bank. They took some of that away-the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co .- and delivered it to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. Did they use the part that they removed to put their road in there?-A. What the road was built on, of course, they did not remove; but the bank that was rendered unavailable by reason of preparation by the road was removed by them and taken to Packer No. 4 breaker-that is, No. 3.

Q. Mr. Witness, will you look at this letter dated November 20, 1911, purporting to have your signature and to be addressed to Judge Archbald, and tell me whether that is one you have read? I was out of the Chamber part of the time while the letters were being read by the Secretary.

The WITNESS. A letter of Judge Archbald? Let me see it. Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; a letter from you to Judge Archbald. Let me show it to you. The Witness. No, sir; that was not included; I must have omitted it. I think I have it here. It should have been in-

Q. I would like to have that read, then .- A. I must have taken it out by mistake.

Q. It may be read from the record, Mr. Webb, I presume, without explaining it?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Oh, yes.

The WITNESS. I overlooked it. I have not got it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is on page 1577.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 79.]

NOVEMBER 20, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa. Hon. R. W. Archello, Scranton, Pa.

My Dear Uncle Wodrow: I received your letter of November 17.

I am not sure whether the bank about which you spoke to Mr. Warriner is the Packer No. 3 bank or the upper; that is, eastern No. 4 bank. Neither of these banks is very good, and would hardly warrant a separate operation. It would pay the Oxford Coal Co., however, to take them, which is probably your idea. Mr. Hill, managing director of the Oxford Coal Co., some time ago asked me for the eastern Packer No. 4 bank, and I promised to take the matter up with Mr. Warriner for him as soon as I could make a survey to show the exact location of the bank. This has not yet been done.

The Oxford royalty rates are as follows:

Cents.

		ents.
	prepared
Size No.	buckwheat	. 30
Size No.		74
Size No.	ery rates which are also paid on all culm-bank coal	. 3 pared by collieries, are at present:

		CC CC	No. of Section
Size		1	40
Size	No.		36 23
Size	No.	4	10
Size	No.	5	5

As these two banks are not first class, the Board of Directors of City Trusts may be willing to have them worked under the Oxford royalty rates if taken by the Oxford Coal Co. Otherwise they will probably want the full colliery rates, and that will be increased on size No. 1 when the present leases expire on December 31, 1913.

I shall be glad to see you with reference to this matter whenever you come down. I hope you can arrange to stay overnight with us.

Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES ARCHBALD, Jr.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, Col. Archbald, you spoke on your examination by Mr. Webb about conclusions reached after making tests. When were those tests made?—A. Very late in December.

Q. Last December?—A. Of 1911.

Q. They were made, then, after this letter of November 20, 1911, was written?—A. Yes, sir. I had to make my report very promptly, and I had no time to go over it personally. The calculations were made in my office and checked up in my office. I did not pass any judgment on what there was.

Q. In this letter you say that neither Packer No. 3 bank nor the eastern No. 4 bank is very good. What was the information you were going on when you wrote that letter?—A. Just my opinion, having looked them over. I had no information at all. As I say, they were marked "slate banks" on my map, and I wanted to warn Judge Archbald that they were not good banks.

Q. When were the Oxford royalty rates, referred to in this letter just read, put in force?—A. I will have to refresh my memory. [After referring to paper.] On July 1, 1904.

Q. Why were those rates adopted for the Oxford instead of taking the rates paid by the Lehigh?-A. They were on the plea of the North American Coal Co., at that time a lessee, that the bank was a poor bank, which we admitted, for the Girard estate, and reduced the rate.

Q. Your judgment now, if I understand you, is that Packer No. 3 and the Oxford bank are about on a par?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are about the same?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us anything about any deposit of rock having been made on eastern No. 4 bank?-A. No; not specially. There is a rock all through the bank, and there are ridges of rock running through it. Rock was dumped in one place, coal in another, and so on, and they were not separated very

Q. Is there not what you call a rock pile adjacent to eastern

4?-A. You asked me about No. 3. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, yes

A. In our eastern No. 4 bank there is a rock dump right close to it; adjacent to it.

Q. How did that rock get there?-A. It was deposited there by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. Do you remember that you stopped them-Q. When they were piling that rock on the dump?-A. I have had occasion to do so within the past 10 days, again.

Q. You did that on behalf of the Girard estate, the lessor?-

A. Yes, sir. Q. You say the Lehigh Valley has been putting rock over that dump lately?—A. Not over it, but adjacent to it, so as to practically cut it off. The danger would be that they would cut it off so that nobody could take it but themselves.

Q. Yes; and you stopped that again?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Col. Archbald, it appears in the correspondence that you have read that the name of your uncle, Judge Archbald, was used all through the correspondence. I want to ask you whether at any time there was any suggestion from him or from anybody else that the fact that he was interested in this proposed leasing of Packer No. 3 should be concealed from anybody?—A. No, sir. I said to him, "Of course, you understand that your name will appear," and he said, "Of course, I understand that any desire it." that, and desire it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President. This witness may be excused, so far as the managers on the part of the House are concerned.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Just one moment. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you have a map made, or did you prepare a map, showing the relative situation of the Oxford dump and the Packer dumps?—A. I did.

Q. Is this the map [exhibiting blue print]?—A. It is. Q. Is it correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should like to have this map marked now simply for identification. We will have to use it when we come to our testimony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so marked.

(The map referred to was marked for identification "U. S. S. Exhibit M."

Mr. WORTHINGTON (to Mr. WEBB). Do you want to see it?

Mr. Manager WEBB. No, sir.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is not put in evidence. It is simply marked for identification. Mr. President, this witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally dis-

" JAMES F. BELL.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, after you have satisfied yourself that James F. Bell has been subpensed to attend this Mr. President, after you have satisfied trial, and as he has either failed or refused to do so, we ask for the following order:

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That an attachment do issue in accordance with the rules of the Senate of the United States for one James F. Bell, a witness heretofore duly subpænaed in this proceeding on behalf of the managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the order just read? If not, it will be considered as agreed to by the Senate, and the attachment will be prepared and will be

SAMUEL D. WARRINER.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I believe the witness, Mr. Warriner, who has been examined, was not formally discharged. I will ask now that he may be formally dis-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The witness Mr. Warriner is finally discharged.

ORDER AS TO EVIDENCE.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I desire to say that we had expected to have several other witnesses right at this juncture to conclude the testimony under the particular articles now under consideration, but we have just ascertained that several of these witnesses are not present this afternoon. So I have requested—and I hope it meets the approval of the Chair—the Sergeant at Arms to notify all absent witnesses on the part of the managers of the House of Representatives who have not heretofore testified to be in attendance upon the session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment to-morrow, as we expect to get through with all the testimony which the managers shall offer to-morrow, or certainly by Saturday. We hope and expect to get through with the examination of all of our witnesses by Saturday at the furthest.

In the meantime, Mr. President, we will now examine witnesses touching other counts in the articles of impeachment other than those that have been under immediate consideration this afternoon.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I should like to have an understanding, if it be agreeable to the Senate and to the managers, that we shall not be expected to begin introducing evidence on behalf of Judge Archbald until Monday morning. It is likely that the testimony on the part of the managers will last until some time on Saturday, and it is very embarrassing to ask witnesses to be here, all of whom of course are very anxious not to come, or to get away as soon as possible. We do not want to have to get them here and keep them over Sunday if it can be avoided.

It would also give us an opportunity to go over the testimony that has been taken and arrange the order of our defense. would be a great accommodation to us. Perhaps we could eliminate a good deal, because we think the managers have proved a good many things which we expected we would have to prove ourselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be for the determination of the Senate. Could not the respondent have here some one witness whose testimony he knew would be quite

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; we could not do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And have him in attendance and begin on Saturday? Counsel will realize the fact that expedition is of the utmost importance to the Senate at this time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We certainly understand that.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask counsel how long he anticipates their testimony will take? Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is an exceedingly difficult question to answer, but I should think we would be able to close it next week

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would not undertake the responsibility of saying that the session would be suspended on Saturday before the expiration of the regular hour. That would be for the Senate to determine.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, I hope that we may have some friend in the Senate who will make that motion. I understand we can not make it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the Senate in regard to it?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I desire to make one observation. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager will pardon the Chair for a moment?

Certainly. Mr. Manager CLAYTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If perchance the managers should conclude to-morrow, it would be a very serious matter to the Senate at this stage to lose a whole day. It might necessitate the loss of the entire time that is usually dedicated to

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I be permitted to say that I do not think we can conclude the examination to-morrow of the witnesses on behalf of the managers on the part of the House. But I expressed the belief and the hope that we would be able to do so at least by Saturday. Since I have conferred with some of my associates, we think it unlikely that we can conclude the examination of our witnesses to-morrow, but we are still of the opinion that we can do so on Saturday.

Of course, the managers will be ready to do whatever the Senate may determine, just as they have heretofore expressed their willingness to always await the pleasure of the Senate in the conduct of this proceeding. If we should conclude Saturday and the Senate should think it wise and proper, or for any other reason sufficient to the Senate, that the examination should be postponed until Monday, the managers would not offer any objection. They simply hold themselves in readiness at all times to meet the wishes of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Would it be sufficiently early, the Chair would inquire of the counsel for the respondent, to have that matter determined to-morrow?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that it be postponed until then and an opportunity be given for conference

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; but the difficulty about that is that most of the witnesses come from Scranton, and in order to get here one day they have to leave there about noon the day before.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I offer the following order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed order will be

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the evidence of the managers upon their case in chief be concluded Saturday, December 14, and the evidence of the defense be commenced Monday, December 16, at 1.30 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the order just presented?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, may I be heard, hriefly?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Manager.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I understand that if that order were adopted now the Senate could, and I apprehend would, for good reasons, modify it to whatever extent might meet the judgment of the Senate.

We are of the opinion that we can conclude the examination of our witnesses in chief in the presentation of this case by the end of Saturday's session. Of course, Mr. President, whether we will be able to do that is dependent upon two things. First, we may not be able to get all our witnesses here by Saturday. We are doing our best. I directed the attention of the Chair this afternoon to the absence of some of them, and mentioned the efforts that we were making further to have those witnesses here.

Assuming that those witnesses are all here, so that we may have the opportunity to examine them, the matter then will be conditioned somewhat upon the length of time occupied in the cross-examination, but we apprehend that the cross-examination will not be very long.

So far as the lights which are now before us can enter into the solution of the question, we think we can agree to get through with the testimony in chief by Saturday.

But I desire to say, Mr. President, that should any good reason appear we may be called upon to ask the Senate at the proper time, should the occasion arise, for a modification of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will always be within the power of the Senate, of course, to modify the order. Is there objection to the order which has just been read? If not, it will be considered as adopted by the Senate. The managers will proceed with the other witnesses.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We will call the witness James

R. Dainty.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES R. DAINTY

James R. Dainty appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Dainty, where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. Where were you last May when the House of Representatives sent a subpæna for you to appear before the Judiciary Committee?—A: Fishing.

Q. Where were you fishing?—A. In the Pocono. Q. Where is that?—A. It is in Monroe County.

Q. Monroe County, Pa.?-A. Pennsylvania, yes; about 40 miles from Scranton.

Q. How long did you fish?—A. I fished most of the season.

- Q. You were fishing all the time the Sergeant at Arms was trying to find you, that you might come here and testify in this case?-A. I was fishing most of the time, when I was not automobiling.
- Q. You were automobiling and fishing, and you knew the House of Representatives wanted you here to testify in this case?—A. Not of my knowledge.

Q. You had heard of it?-A. Indirectly.

Q. You left your family in Scranton when you went fishing?-

A. Some of my family.
Q. They notified you that the Sergeant at Arms had been there hunting for you and looking for you, the papers were full of it, and you kept on fishing and automobiling?—A. They did not.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I do not quite understand what this has to do with the case, unless it is proposed to show that Judge Archbald was concealing the witness.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I want to show the character of the witness before we examine him.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If you want to show he is an adverse witness before you ask him questions about the case—

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think I have a perfect right to ask this witness why he did not appear last May when he was subpænaed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It seems to me we are not engaged in trying the witness, but Judge Archbald, and if the counsel will show that they propose

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. Worthington tried a witness the other day in this respect very much like it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In view of the facts already brought out, the manager will proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Do you know Judge Archbald?—A. I do.

Q. Have you ever been to his office in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often?—A. A number of times. Q. How many?—A. Probably a dozen times or more. Within what time?-A. Within the past two years. Q. What did you call on him about? What was your busi-

-A. Sometimes I would go in while passing by and say, "How do you do?" to him, and go on.

Q. Well, at other times what did you discuss with him in the way of business?—A. Well, I was requested to call there.

Q. By whom?-A. Mr. Williams. J. Williams?-A. Yes, sir.

Did you call?-A. Two or three days after that I did.

You did call, you say?-A. Two or three days afterwards.

You did call, then?-A. Yes, sir.

What did Williams tell you to call there for?-A. He said the judge requested to see me. He did not say what for. Q. In consequence of what Williams told you, did you go to see the judge, and, if so, what did the judge tell you and what did you tell the judge?-A. I went there to see the judge.

Proceed.—A. He wanted to see me to obtain the address of the Everharts. He was desirous of closing up some matter pertaining to the little Katydid culm bank with the heirs of the Everharts. I said, "Do you expect to write to them and get in communication that way?" He thought so; he said, "Yes." I said he would have a very hard time in getting any satisfaction in correspondence with those people, because most of them were ladies and, to my knowledge, knew absolutely nothing about this particular property in question; that the best thing to do was to see them and explain it to them.

Q. You are referring to the Katydid property now?-A. That is the property that he called me in to talk about.

Q. The Katydid culm bank?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Go ahead .- A. However, I said maybe I would be going to Philadelphia myself shortly, and if I did I would bring it to their attention and explain it to them. Some two months or so after that I was in Philadelphia and talked the matter over with them, and explained to them their equity as near as I could, assuming that they owned the culm that was on the surface—the one half, of course, the other half belonging That family, composed of five people, owned to the Hillside. one hundred and twenty-fifth part each, and they wanted to know what it was worth. Of course, I knew something of the transaction, of the selling price, and of the purchase price, and said it was probable that if they got two or three hundred dollars each-

Q. As far as we are concerned, you need not tell your conversation with the Everhart heirs. After you had spoken to the Everhart heirs did you go back and see the judge-after you had gone to Philadelphia to see them?-A. I do not think that I saw the judge after that for a long time. It may have been a month or more. Q. You went up there for the judge? -A. Went where for the judge?

Q. To Philadelphia to see the Everhart heirs.-A. No, sir.

Q. How did you happen to be interested, then, in the Katydid culm bank after talking with Judge Archbald?—A. I was not interested in the Katydid culm bank after talking with Judge Archbald at all, because I frequently visited the Everharts.

O. You did go to see the Everharts almost immediately after your conversation with Judge Archbald about the Everhart interest in the Katydid?-A. I said probably two months afterwards.

Q. When was your conversation with the judge?-A. Two months prior to that time.

Q. What month was that?-A. I do not remember the exact date. It was some time during the negotiations of the Laurel That probably could fix the date. I do not remember it

Q. That is, the sale of property to the Laurel line?-A. Yes; somewhere along that time.

Archbald?-A. By Williams or Archbald or Q. By Judge whoever was selling it.

Q. That continued from December, 1911; really from November, 1911, until April 13, 1912. Now, can you not tell us a little more definitely when that first conversation of yours was with him?-A. I do not remember when the first conversation was, because it was immaterial and I did not charge my memory with it. I did not think anything of it because I was not interested one way or the other.

Q. Had you before talked with the Everhart heirs about their interest in this Katydid culm bank?—A. No; because no one ever thought they had any interest.

Q. Then was it in consequence of your conversation with Judge Archbald that you went to Philadelphia to talk with them?-A. No; not necessarily so. I was going to Philadelphia. I did not make any special trip to Philadelphia to speak to them in regard to this culm bank.

Q. That is, you did speak to them after you had arrived in Philadelphia because of your conversation with Judge Archbald. Is that it?-A. No; not directly, because I was talking to them about a great deal of other matters that they were familiar with in the land that they owned.

Did you mention their interest in the Katydid culm bank?-A. I certainly did.

Q. Did you not do it because Judge Archbald had spoken to you about it?-A. I had promised the judge that if I went to Philadelphia I would call their attention to it and see what they thought about it.

Q. If you had told that a moment ago-A. I did tell you that before.

Q. After you came back from Philadelphia did you ever have any other deal with Judge Archbald with reference to an 800-acre tract of land owned by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?— A. Not 800.

Q. Well, 500 or 300 or whatever number it was?-A. I had no dealings with him in regard to that because that did not belong to Judge Archbald.

Q. No; I understand it did not.—A. The judge in the first interview in talking about things said to me, "Dainty, what became of your Derringer property"? I said I had disposed

Q. Does he call you "Dainty"?-A. Sometimes. had disposed of that property. He said, "Was that not ad-joining to the Derringer property"? I said, "Yes, it was—the adjoining tract—some 1,600 acres adjoining the Derringer prop-I was very familiar with the Derringer property, being neighbors there for four or five years, and I knew that the Derringers had not transferred over their leases to the Valley. During the conversation he said, "Don't you think you could get the Derringer leases for the Valley? You know the property." I said "Yes, I know the property; I know the people; and, as I understand it, the difference is the price, whether the Valley wants to pay enough money; they could get it."

Q. I want to see if we understand each other. Is the Derringer property the 800 acres in which these Everhart heirs own about one-fifth?—A. Absolutely nothing. The Everhart heirs own absolutely nothing of the Derringer property.
Q. Who do own it?—A. The Derringer heirs; 72 of them.

Q. I do not want to talk about the Derringers.-A. I am getting to it.

Q. All right; go ahead, then.—A. I said it is possible to get that, and at my suggestion I said that the Lehigh Valley has not acquired one of the Everhart heirs in their lease. He said, "I understand not from something I read in the papers," or something of that kind. He said, "Do you know the trouble, why she did not transfer?" I said, "Because they did not make the she did not transfer? I said, Because they did not having sold price large enough, the other brothers and sisters having sold for $100,000 each for the two leases." He said, "You are well acquainted with Mrs. Llewellyn?" I said, "Yes." So he suggested the suggestion of the suggesti acquainted with Mrs. Llewellyn?" I said, "Yes." So he suggested that I go and see Mr. Warriner and talk the matter over with him. I said, "Well, I do not know Mr. Warriner very well.
Of course, I know him to see him, but I did not know him well enough to approach him on this matter. However," I said, "if you come in contact with Mr. Warriner at any time, I would thank you if you would mention it, and I will go down later and probably go over the matter with him." He said something "Well," I said, about what would be considered for my services. "I did not know that I wanted any money, but they had a piece of coal at Moosic that was detached from any of their own property, separate and away from their own railroads, which they could not mine under any conditions unless they shipped it over some other road, and not a very choice piece of property, a piece that they have held for a number of years.'

Q. That who has held?-A. The Lehigh Valley, with the expectation of making some exchange with one of the other companies for some coal somewhere else more convenient for them to get. I said if they could see their way clear, I would consider a lease on that property for my services. Of course I realized that there were at least a year or two years' work to accomplish what was set out for.

Q. Well, is that all?-A. That is all.

Q. Did you ever know what became of your request to lease 325 acres? That is the Morris & Essex tract, is it not?-A. It is the Morris & Essex warrant

Q. Was Judge Archbald to help you get the lease from the Lehigh Valley?-A. He was not.

Q. For the 325 acres?—A. He was not.
Q. Why did you mention it to him that you wanted to get it of the Lehigh Valley for services you were going to render the judge?—A. No, no; for services that I was about to render to the Lehigh Valley.

- Q. Then, why should the judge be interested in a proposi-tion in which nobody else seemed to be interested but the Lehigh Valley, yourself, and the Everhart heirs?—A. The only reason I could see that the judge would be interested would be more through friendship. There came one thing after another that developed through our conversation, as I have related.
- Q. Friendship for whom?-Probably friendship for myself. Q. Although he sent for you first?-A. That is true, and I gave him the information he asked.

Q. I ask you if this was not the agreement, that you were to help him clear up whatever little lack of title or cloud of title there was on any land he was interested in, and in turn he was going to help you secure from Warriner this 325-acre lease?-A.

No, sir; no, sir.

Q. Why should you have told Judge Archbald what you wanted to get from the railroad in the way of compensation for your services?—A. I have explained that. The judge said, "What would your services be worth for obtaining those leases?" and I said it did not need any money; that I would be satisfied if the Lehigh Valley could see their way clear to make a lease to me of the Morris and Essex property.

Q. And that was your consideration for getting the Everharts to sell to the Lehigh?-A. That was my consideration for getting the Derringers and Everharts and another property that was adjoining on the opposite side of the creek.

Q. And the judge was to help you accomplish those desires, was he not?-A. He was not.

Q. Then tell us why you were telling the judge what you wanted done .- A. I was not telling the judge what I wanted done. I was answering the judge's question.

Q. Why, then, can you tell us, should he have wanted to know what you would request in return for the favors you did the railroad, and you told him that you would like to have the 325-acre tract?—A. I am not a mind reader.

Q. I ask you if Mr. E. J. Williams did not tell you that the judge wanted to see you, and that the judge could help you make that deal?-A. I say no.

O. Is that all you know about this transaction?-A. That is as far as the transaction went.

Q. You never got the 325 acres?-A. No; never. I did not acquire the lease.

Q. No; that was because, was it not, that about that time it came out in the newspapers that Judge Archbald's conduct was being examined down here in Washington, and this whole thing stopped?-A. Not exactly that.

Q. How near it?-A. If you will give me a chance to explain it, I will tell you.

Q. Yes, sir; proceed .- A. The reason, mostly, was that I had not had an opportunity to get the attention of Mr. Warriner to finally decide and define the interests and what I should get.

Q. Mr. Warriner swore that his engineer did make a report to him, and that he reported to Judge Archbald just what those interests were. Did the judge never tell you what they were?-A. He did not, sir.
Q. You say Mr. Warriner did not swear to that?—A. Not in that respect; no, sir.

Q. I understood Mr. Warriner to say that he had his engineer, Mr. Jessup, or some engineer, calculate the various interests that these heirs owned, and that Mr. Jessup communicated with the judge, or that he communicated with the judge?—A. I know what the Everharts own myself; it was not necessary for the judge to tell me or for Mr. Warriner to tell me. I was not referring to that. My statement was that I had not seen Mr. Warriner to go into the matter to define what interest or how the agreement should be made, providing that I accomplished the work that I set out for—what conditions, what terms, what minimums, what royalties should be placed on this There were large and difficult conditions there to property. contend with.

Q. The reason why you did not pursue it was because this matter came out in the paper that Judge Archbald's conduct was being examined?-A. I have said-

You said a while ago when I asked you that question "Not altogether." Is not that one of the reasons why you did not prosecute your request with Warriner and why the judge did not persist and help you further in it?-A. No: I did not need the assistance of the judge to help me further. If Mr. Warriner was satisfied to do that, to give me that lease in consideration of my obtaining those leases, it was up to Warriner; and if Mr. Warriner said he could not see his way clear to give me that lease, then, of course, I had nothing to do.

Q. In that connection, you can not explain to us what Judge Archbald was to do toward helping you to get the lease, or whether he was to do anything or not?-A. Judge Archbald was to do nothing. What was there to do? I had the work to do.

Q. The thing he wanted done was to get a lease of 324 acres of coal land?-A. The thing that he wanted to do-

Q. Just a moment. You knew that as the policy of the Lehigh Coal Co. was not to lease its lands, you would have to have more influence to get it than your own. Is not that true? A. If the Lehigh Valley wanted those leases sufficiently bad enough, if it was to their interest to get those leases, it would be naturally to their interest to give me coal in compensation.

Q. Well, you could not have done all that without the judge's intercession?-A. It simply came up in conversation.

Q. Did you know that the judge went to see Warriner about the matter?—A. I did not know that he had been to see Warriner. How should I know?

- Q. He never told you that he had been to see Warriner; that he had inquired what the Warriner interest was and whether they were willing to buy them out, and suggested in that connection that you would like to have a lease of 324 acres of the Morris & Essex plant?—A. You get two questions in one. Q. No, sir; that is one question.—A. It is two questions,
- Q. Did the judge ever tell you that he had been to see Warriner about the sale of the Everhart interest in this tract of land to the Lehigh Valley Co.?-A. No.

Q. Did he ever tell you that he had seen Warriner and had told Warriner that you wanted the 324-acre lease?-A. He had not, as I understand, seen Mr. Warriner.

Q. Did he ever tell you that?—A. No; he did not tell me that he had seen Mr. Warriner. Did he tell you that he would see him in your behalf?-

No; not in that way. Q. In what way?—A. In the way that I have suggested. was my suggestion that he see Mr. Warriner, and ask Mr. Warriner if he would see me when I came down after our talk.

Q. Anyway, he never told you that he had seen Warriner?

A. No.
Q. I ask if you do not know that the reason why these negotiations were cut short was because this whole matter came out in the newspapers and that stopped them? Did you see it in the newspapers about the time you were negotiating :- A. Certainly I had.

Q. And about the time you were carrying on these negotiations?-A. No; the negotiations were prior to the hearing, but they had not matured.

O. Yes; and the newspapers had it published prior to the hearing, too?-A. Well, not very long.

Q. Not very long; but I ask you this direct question, if that is not the reason why these negotiations were stopped-because Judge Archbald's conduct was being investigated?-A. I will say, then, to you that I knew of these proceedings long, long before any paper ever saw it or printed it.

Q. Who told you?-A. I knew all about it.

Q. Who told you?-A. We were all associated together.

Who-you and the judge?-A. No; Mr. Boland and myself and Mr. Williams; and all of us knew of these proceedings long before they matured.

Q. Did Mr. Williams tell you that he had been down here to testify?-A. I knew the proceedings were coming before Mr. Williams ever came to Washington.

Q. I ask you now, again, whether you will answer it-if that is not what stopped the negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?-A. It is not.

Why have you not negotiated since you made your proposition?—A. Because I have not seen or had an opportunity to see Mr. Warriner to go into the matter. Q. Where have you been since last February or March?-A.

I have been in a great many places.

Q. You have not been able to see Mr. Warriner?-A. I have not seen Mr. Warriner; no. Mr. Warriner, you remember, a short time ago changed his position and went with the Lehigh at Wilkes-Barre.

Q. But you often go to Philadelphia?-A. That is true; but at the present time Mr. Warriner would not be the man to see.

Q. Why did you not pursue your proposition to lease the Morris and Essex tract of land?—A. Because, if you want to know, I was feeling my way to see what I could do on the other hand with the lessors.

Q. Had you any peculiar influence with the lessors—the Everhart heirs?—A. I know what coal property is, and I tried to tell them the value thereof; and it was through my efforts, probably, that the other lease was not sold during those negotiations. There is only one lease to be sold, not two.

Q. Are you any relation to the Everhart heirs?-A.

Q. Are you kin to Mrs. Llewellyn?-A. No, sir.

Q. And the only reason why you say you interceded with the Everhart heirs is because you are a coal man and know the coal business?-A. I know the Everhart heirs very closely and visit them very frequently, and I know of all the property that

Q. Well, one more question. The first time you ever had anything to do with this proposition, or that you knew the Lehigh people wanted the Everhart remainder, was when Judge Archbald sent for you to come to his office. Is that right?—A. Yes; but not for that purpose.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all the questions we desire to ask the witness

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no questions to ask, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We shall not excuse this witness, Mr. We should like to have him remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will not be finally excused.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We now desire to call John Henry Jones as our next witness.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN HENRY JONES.

John Henry Jones, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Where do you live, Mr. Jones?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. Clerk and bookkeeper.

Q. Clerk of what?-A. I am assessment clerk.

Q. Is that an official position of the county or city?-A. An appointive position.

Q. In the county or city?—A. In the county.
Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Since the 1st of January

Q. Of what year?-A. 1912.

Q. What was your business before that?-A. Well, doing various jobs, bookkeeping and clerical work, and promoting.

Q. What did you promote?—A. I promoted—one was a culm dump, which is in question, and I am still working on another promotion.

Q. Are there any other projects you had in charge?-A. I can not very well recollect.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?-A. I have known the judge for a number of years.

Q. Do you know E. J. Williams?—A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?-A. Well, probably 13, 14, or 15 years

Q. Did you have a land project in Venezuela in 1909?—A.

Q. Did you talk with Judge Archbald about that matter?-

A. I did. Q. I will ask you if he took any interest in that deal?-A.

He did not. Q. On one occasion when you talked with him about it, did you make a note to Judge Archbald or did he make a note to you?—A. The first time when I took the matter up with Judge Archbald—it was a different time—Judge Archbald did not take any interest in the matter.

Q. That is not what I asked you. During the time of these negotiations, was there a note made by you to him or by him to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About when was that?-A. It would be about the 3d of December, 1909.

Q. A little before that?—A. No, sir. Q. What was the note?—A. It was a bank not for $500.

Q. Just tell how it was made .- A. It was signed by me, payable to Judge Archbald, and indorsed over to me.

By whom?—A. By Judge Archbald. Who wrote the note?—A. Judge Archbald. Was it delivered to you?-A. It was.

Q. What did you do with it?—A. I put it in my pocket until got to the office where I was working.
Q. Well, what did you do with it then?—A. I presented it at the bank to be discounted.

Q. What bank?—A. The Westside Bank.
Q. Did they discount it?—A. No.

Q. What did you do with it then?—A. An offer came through Edward Williams-

Q. Just tell me what you did with it. To whom did you give it, after the bank refused to discount it?-A. I was just going to recite, Mr. Manager, that an offer came from the Bolands, through Edward J. Williams-

To whom did you give Q. I did not ask about any offer.

it?—A. To the man who came with that offer. Q. Who was it?—A. E. J. Williams.

Q. Do you know what he did with it?—A. All I know is what he said, that he took it over to the Bolands's office, and it was kept there.

Q. To be discounted?—A. Until I requested it back.

Q. Did he take it there to be discounted?—A. Yes; at their request: so he said.

Q. Did he bring you the note back, or money for it?—A. I requested it to be brought back.

Q. The note?—A. Yes. Q. Do you know whether he took it elsewhere besides the Bolands to get it discounted ?- A. No, sir; I do not

Q. After you got it back what did you do with it?-A. I took it to Mr. Von Storch. Q. Who is Mr. Von Storch?-A. He is president of the Providence Bank.

Q. And a lawyer?-A. Yes.

Q. At whose suggestion did you take it to Mr. Von Storch?—A. At the suggestion of T. Ellsworth Davies. I did not remember at the time when I testified before the Judiciary Committee, but I have recollected since.

Q. Who is Mr. Davis?—A. A mining engineer of Lackawanna County

Q. Where did you see Von Storch?-A. In his office.

Q. At his law office?—A. Yes, sir. Q. He is also president of a bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you presented the note for discount to Von Storch, what did he say or do?-A. So far as I recollect, he said, Have you tried it in your own bank where you do business? and I said, "Yes."

Q. That is the bank which refused to discount it?-A. Well, they refused for reasons.

Q. I am not caring about the reasons now. What did Von Storch say?—A. He said, "Does Judge Archbald wish the note discounted?" I said, "I think Judge Archbald would appreciate it if you would discount it for me." I recited to him what the purpose of it was, and he said, "All right; there will be a bank meeting, and I will let you know after the bank meeting what will be done."

Q. While you were there did Von Storch call up Judge Archbald and talk with him over the phone?-A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether he did afterwards or not?-A. I only know from hearsay.

Q. Well, Von Storch discounted it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has the note been paid?—A. Not yet. Q. Any part of it?—A. Yes, sir,

How long was the note for?-A. I believe it was for four months; I am not sure.

Q. And has it been renewed from time to time until the present time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is still outstanding, is it, in that form?-A. Part of it; yes. Q. I will ask you if any part of it has been paid?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. $45. Q. When was that paid?—A. Well, there were $25 paid before the Judiciary Committee investigation, and there have been $20 paid since.

Q. And the present note is for how much?—A. $455. O. Who indorsed the note besides Judge Archbald?-A. An indorsement, an unnecessary indorsement, came on it.

Q. I am not asking you about that. Who indorsed it afterwards?-A. E. J. Williams.

Q. When Williams returned the note to you it bore his indorsement, did it?-A. When he returned it, but not when he received it.

Q. After it became due it was renewed from time to time until the present time in the same form ?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. With Judge Archbald and E. J. Williams as indorsers?-A. No; I do not think E. J. Williams's indorsement is on it now.
Q. Has it not been on it at least every time until the last renewal?—A. It was never necessary; it was superfluous.

Q. I am not asking you about that now. Answer my question. Was it on every renewal up until the last one?-A. No; up to the last two renewals.

Q. Were you present when Von Storch testified before the Judiciary Committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not see the note that was running at that time?-A. I did.

Q. You saw Archbald's name and Williams's name both on it, then, last August or July?-A. It was on then.

Q. Who has paid the interest on this note?—A. I have.
Q. And who made the two payments of $25 and $20?—A. I paid them.

Q. I ask you if the bank demanded payment?-A. No, sir; they are satisfied.

Q. Did not the bank demand payment at one time?-A. They demanded a reduction, and they got the reduction.
Q. And it was reduced $25?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING (to counsel for the respondent). Take the witness.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) The refusal to discount this note by the bank with which you usually dealt had no relevancy to Judge Archbald at all?—A. None, whatever; I can explain that.

Q. Well, it is not necessary to go into the details of the transaction. Did Judge Archbald get any benefit out of that note at all?—A. Not a cent.
Q. What was the money realized used for?—A. I needed it in order to finance myself to go back to England.

Q. In connection with this Venezuela matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, as I understand you, Judge Archbald had no interest whatsoever in it at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Judge Archbald have any knowledge of that note being taken to the Bolands?-A. Positively not.

Q. How did it come to be taken there?-A. It came in this manner: E. J. Williams came to me and said that the Bolands were anxious to discount that note-he evidently had mentioned it to them-and that they were anxious to discount that note as a favor to Judge Archbald. Naturally, I allowed him to take the note, and through some ruse or other they got him to indorse that note.

Q. We do not care about that--A. That is not necessary-Q. He held it how long?-A. He held it for three days, promising that there would be a check for the proceeds coming as soon as it could come back from Buffalo.

Q. At the expiration of the three days is the time when you demanded that it be returned to you and it was returned?-

Q. Was that the first time you had any knowledge of Mr. Williams's indorsement on it?—A. That was the first; when it was returned.

Q. You said Mr. Davies suggested you taking it to Van Storch?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the judge anything to do with that?-A. The judge did not know I was going to take it until-I do not know whether he knew anything until Mr. Van Storch called him up.

Q. As far as you know, he had no knowledge of it prior to the time it was taken and left by you with Mr. Van Storch?— A. No; no knowledge whatever.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Who is Mr. Davies?-He is a mining engineer.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the counsel for the respondent desire to ask anything further?

Mr. SIMPSON. No, not to ask a question, but that there may be no difficulty about it, to state that the witness is under subpoena from us and we do not wish him to be discharged.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may stand aside now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may stand

The witness thereupon retired.

JAMES F. BELL.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I ask that the order which was adopted a while ago for an attachment to be issued against Mr. Bell be vacated. I am told that Mr. Bell is away on account of some understanding, and that he has held himself in readiness to come at any time, and that he will be here tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be vacated.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, the witnesses we had hoped to go on with this afternoon are not here. In fact, I believe we have examined all the witnesses who are in the city. The other witnesses whom we expected to be here are not here this afternoon. They will be here to-morrow, I am informed. Therefore, it being a quarter to 6 o'clock, I suggest to the Chair that we will not be ready to proceed with other witnesses until to-morrow, because they are not here at this time.

There are two witnesses here, Mr. Madeira and Mr. Hill. The testimony taken has so far developed the facts that we will not need those witnesses, and I ask that they be discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One of those witnesses is under subpæna by us, and he will have to be held, because we want him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He will be discharged, as far as the managers are concerned, but not discharged from his obligations under the summons issued at the request of counsel for the respondent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection to his going back if he will hold himself in readiness to come back when needed here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be discharged from his obligations to respond under the subpæna issued at the instance of the managers.

Mr. ROOT. I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the managers on the part of the House, the respondent, and his counsel retired.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 16314. An act to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. ROOT. I am directed by the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the message from the President of the United States transmitting a report of the Lincoln Memorial Commission and its recommendations upon the location, plan, and design for a memorial in the city of Washington to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, in accordance with the act ap-proved February 9, 1911, to report a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32), and I submit a report (No. 1071) thereon. I ask that it lie on the table. The papers accompanying the report are already a public document, and it will not be necessary to print them again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be received and take the course indicated by the Senator from New York.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, WYOMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

Mr. WARREN. The bill refers to a local matter, and I ask that it be not disposed of to-night, because I wish to consult with the parties interested on the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from Wyoming.

PROPOSED HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House concurrent resolution 66.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, 1912, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock m. on Thursday, January 2, 1913.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: From the Committee on Appropriations I report favorably the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the holiday recess, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. You do not mean to pass it to-night?

There is a very slim attendance here.

Mr. WARREN. I can report it from the committee anyway. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. If there is objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution, I ask that it lie on the table, giving notice that I will call it up in the morning. It has been reported in the regular way from the Committee on Appropriations, and the usual course is to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, fill us with the holy spirit of truth, that Thy thoughts may be our thoughts, Thy ways our ways, Thy work our work, Thy life our life in intent and purthat we may further Thy plans and fulfill our destiny, for it is written all things work together for good to them that love God. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-M'LEAN AGAINST BOWMAN.

The SPEAKER. The unfinshed business is the contestedelection case of McLean against Bowman. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] has 36 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] 34 minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I think a matter of this importance ought to be considered by more than a mere handful of Members. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 290 Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted-To Mr. Woods of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of illness. To Mr. Sherwood, for 10 days, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation of a member from a committee:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1912.

. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker, House of Representatives.

SIR: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Yours, very respectfully,

S. F. PROUTY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-M'LEAN AGAINST BOWMAN.

The SPEAKER. In this debate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is scant reason for the unseating of Mr. Bowman as a Member of this House, and far less reason for the seating of his competitor, the contestant in this case, Mr. McLean. There is little that has been adduced in the testimony or in any addresses made upon this floor to warrant the harsh proceedings that are proposed against the seated Member. Surely the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], in his eloquent statement of the laws of Pennsylvania and in his personal expressions with regard to general election conditions in that State, has not presented sufficient to warrant the unseating of the gentleman whose seat is contested. He has spoken generally of political conditions which prevail in Luzerne, and admits having been a native of that county from which he removed, perhaps, before he knew of the conditions of which he complains. He is anxious for the improvement of the ballot of the State. I would like to know what Member upon this side of the House is not anxious for a simplification of the ballot of Pennsylvania, or the ballots of other States that have confused the voters in recent campaigns.

Any simplification of the ballot is welcome which gives to the honest voter a chance to fairly express his will at the polls, but the difficulty has been not only with regard to some of the laws of Pennsylvania, but with regard to those of other States, that the man who is a trickster or who is not loyal to his party on one side or the other seems to be the one to take advantage of the very laws of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania complains.

With one fell swoop he would take away from Mr. Bowman 700 votes which were given to him under the heading of the Prohibition Party. By what right are those votes to be taken away, not only from the gentleman who occupies a seat in this House but from those who prefer in their wisdom or according to their preference to vote the Prohibition ticket? If that rule were to be adhered to, or is by your vote to be included in the precedents of the House, then a number of Pennsylvania Representatives would be immediate candidates for unseating, because their names were upon more than one party ticket. It is a matter of regret to many of us who wish ballot reform that this opportunity for tricking at the polls is permitted by law in Pennsylvania or in any other State. But apart from the generalities that have been indulged in by gentlemen upon the other side, particularly those advanced by my friend from Virginia [Mr. Holland], who seems to have based much of his argument upon alleged utterances of Mr. Bowman to agents or third parties, it would seem there is a serious side to this question for the Members of this House.

The contest system as it is encouraged in the House of Representatives is a disgrace to the intelligence of the House and a disgrace to this Nation. [Applause.] It is a positive in-ducement to crooked men in politics to unseat one who has obtained a majority of the votes of his constituents. First of all, we permit any man who has the desire in his heart or in his political make-up to contest the seat, for instance, of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] or my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], to say, "I will make trouble for him or I will force him to terms with me, and I will do it with the reward that is to terms with me, and I will do it with the reward that is offered to me by the House of Representatives for annoying and harassing him in his position." It is within the power of any defeated candidate, black or white, who has had the temerity to run against a sitting Member in the South or elsewhere to institute proceedings and to come here with the right to a seat upon this floor. The inducement is $2,000 lawyer's fees for counsel who may have helped to stir up the trouble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RANDELL of Texas). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have two minutes more? Mr. Speaker, then I ask the privilege of extending my May I have two minutes remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ans-DERRY] now use some of his time?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I think the gentleman from Iowa had better proceed to use 20 minutes, and then the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Covington] will have 20 minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. I yield one minute further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in that one minute, getting down to concrete facts in this particular case, I want to say that if you unseat Mr. Bowman and allow $2,000 counsel fees to the attorneys of Mr. McLean you will, in addition to that, if you seat Mr. McLean, vote to him, for no services performed to this House, $13,125, which he can stick in his own pocket for nothing done whatever except to harass Mr. Bowman. You are going to offer him not only the $2,000 counsel fees, but you are going to give him a premium of $13,125, plus three months' actual service in this House.

Now, if you seat Mr. McLean, and later some majority comes into this House different in political complexion from that which now controls it, the precedent that you set to-day may plague every man who happens to be in the minority. You had better stick to your 30 days' law and tell Mr. McLean and every other contestant that he will have to comply with the law, and that you do not intend to extend the limit in which he may give notice to the seated Member. But you are not going to do it for yourselves or the future if you seat Mr. McLean and unseat

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] to use a little more time.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis]. [Applause.]
Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to do justice to the merits of the controversy involved in this case in 10 minutes. I shall therefore not undertake to discuss the legal phase of the proposition; this has already been done in the discussions heretofore had in this House. I simply refer to the fact that according to a provision of the Revised Statutes, section 105, which reads as follows:

Whenever any person intends to contest an election of any Member of the House of Representatives of the United States he shall, within 30 days after the result of such election shall have been determined by the officer or board of canvassers authorized by law to determine the same, give notice in writing to the Member whose seat he designs to contest, of his intention to contest the same, and in such notice shall specify particularly the grounds upon which he relies in the contest—and which has been quoted several times, and according to the absolutely unbroken line of precedents, that there is no case pending in this House. The cases upon which the minority of your committee rely are as follows:

your committee rely are as follows:
[McDonald against Jones, Fifty-fourth Congress; 1 Hinds' Precedents, p. 426.]

The legal time for serving a notice of contest in an election case is extended by the House only for good reason and where there seems to be reasonable grounds for a contest.

On February 28, 1896 (first session Fifty-fourth Congress, H. Rept, 568; Journal, p. 254; Record, p. 2281), the Committee on Elections No. 1 reported on the case of McDonald against Jones, from Virginia. In this case the contestant applied for leave to serve notice of contest, which he had not served within the time required by the statutes. The committee concluded that with reasonable diligence the notice might have been served within the prescribed time.

The House, without debate or division, agreed to the resolution of the committee denying the application of the contestant.

[Thomas against Arnell, Thirty-ninth Congress; 1 Hinds' Precedents, p. 875.]

For exceptional reasons the House may authorize an election case to be made up as to notice and answer after the time prescribed by law.

[O'Hara against Kitchin, Forty-sixth Congress, 1 Hinds' Precedents, p. 941.]

Testimony of contestant being taken after the légal time and against contestee's protest, the committee reported that it should not be considered, and that sitting Member's title should be confirmed.

A condemnation by the Elections Committee of oral arrangements between parties to an election case for taking testimony out of time.

[Bradley against Hynes, Forty-third Congress, 2 Hinds' Precedents, p. 123.]

The notice of contest being served after expiration of the legal time and the testimony taken without regard to the statute, the committee did not examine the case.

[Pearce against Bell, Fifty-fourth Congress, 2 Hinds' Precedents, p. 597.] A contestant giving no notice of contest as required by law and taking no testimony, the House, without further examination, confirmed returned Member's title.

In this case the contestant gave no notice of contest, as required by law, and has taken no evidence to sustain the allegations of fraud and intimidation claimed by him to have been committed.

The 30 days' rule is a rule that has to be set aside only upon reasonable grounds, and I assert and shall undertake to prove that there is no reasonable ground for setting aside the rule in this case. In the first place, the objections of the contestee were made at every stage of the proceedings, as will be found on the first page of the record and at page 749 of the record and in the hearings before the committee. The contestee insisted all the time that, in order to preserve his rights, there was no case pending, because the plain provisions of the statutes had been violated. But it is asserted that the contestant in this case was not able to begin the contest or give | testant.

notice of contest because he was sick. On this point the minority report says, at page 3:

notice of contest because he was sick. On this point the minority report says, at page 3:

We insist that this record does not show that Mr. McLean, the contestant, used reasonable diligence. It is true that he was sick, but not so sick but that he transacted other business requiring more energy and concentration than the preparation or the direction for the preparation of a notice of contest. The evidence shows that the contestant was attacked with some intestinal trouble about the 31st of October, 1910. (Evidence, p. 7.)

It shows, however, that on the 5th day of November, 1910, he had so far recovered that two of his political friends, Messrs, McKenna and Kehoe, visited him (p. 624), and that the editor of the Times-Leader had a conversation with him either the 5th or the 6th, and during that time contestant claims to have written a political letter to the editor of the Wilkes-Barre Record (p. 183). The day before election he read, or had read to him, articles from the Record, and personally dictated a political letter for the Times-Leader, and had conferences with his brother manager and others. This was the day before election, which was held on the 8th. On that day he rode out and went to the polls and voted. He was up and around the 9th, the day after the election (p. 9). He personally wrote and signed a check for $25 on the 11th (p. 567). On the 12th he examined bilis and wrote and signed several checks, some of them for political bilis (p. 716). On that day he learned the official results of the election (pp. 682-683). The contestant was then evidently taken worse, and went to bed on the advice of his doctor (p. 716). During that time he drew at least one political check. Contestant improved rapidly in the few weeks that he was in bed.

By the 28th of November he had so far recovered that he began checking over his political bilis and making checks for the same. On the 28th of November he personally drew and signed 30 political checks, and personally made out his political expense account for filing, a

I refer to the undisputed fact, as shown by the evidence and the reliable, carefully prepared brief of the contestee, that on November 11, shortly after the election, the contestant was able to write and sign a political check; that on November 12 he looked over bills and wrote and signed five checks. It appears, then, that he was ill for four or five days. A little bit later, on November 18, the contestant prepared other political checks, went over his expense account, and prepared it for filing-all of this in his own handwriting. I assert, Mr. Speaker, that the contestant was able to do these things, and subsequently was able to make a trip to Florida, stopping a few days in Philadelphia for political conference or otherwise. He was able to say to his manager the three words necessary to start the contest. Those three words were simply "Start a contest."

But the contestant did not do that. He sinned away his day of grace. He was guilty of laches. He slept upon his rights, and it was not until he came back from Florida, early in January, and had conferred with somebody in Philadelphia or Washington, that he received assurances that he could still begin a contest; that the law, the precedents, and the rules of this House would be overturned; and that he would be given an opportunity to obtain a seat herein.

I assert, Mr. Speaker, that it is highly important that the rules of law and the rules of this House should be adhered to in this particular case. The minority say, at page 2 of their report:

report:

There are very many cases cited in Hinds' Precedents confirming the doctrine that where the rule established by the law of 1851 was not applicable or grossly inequitable the House had the power to prescribe different rules and regulations for the penalty. There are several cases where the parties have failed to give notice within the time prescribed by the statutes where the House, for equitable reasons, has fixed another time or mode in which notice might be given, but we believe that there is not a case cited in the precedents where a committee had reported the unseating of the Member where the notice was not given within the time provided by the statutes. We can see that if the contestant had been for any good reason prevented from giving notice in this case, he might have applied to the House for permission to give notice, and that the House had the power to grant additional or different time, but no such request as that has been made of the House. The contestant filed his notice 32 days too late and took his testimony out of order, all under protest by the contester, and we insist that under the precedents the committee had no power or authority to consider the case. The laws of Congress are certainly binding upon Congress until set aside by Congress itself, but the minority contends that even though the contestant was now presenting to the House the question as to whether or not he was entitled to further and additional time in which to give notice his showing does not entitle him to the application of the equitable rule. There is no showing in this record that would excuse the contestant from giving the notice within the time prescribed by the statutes. Certainly the House would not wish to establish a precedent that would warrant anyone in coming in any time he pleased and filing a contest. This would be unfair. No one would know when his seat was secure. Fallure to file a notice might lult the sitting Member into such indifference as would allow the testimony by which he could defend his case

And then I call attention to another interesting fact, Mr. Speaker, and that is this, that the majority of this committee, a majority made up of distinguished and able gentlemen on that side of the House, after a most careful consideration of this case have declined to bring in a report in favor of scating the con-

They give certain reasons in their report, but some other reasons occur to me that are not given in this report. We have heard a great deal in the discussion of this case about the contestee and his acts, and since the contestant has been dragged into the case by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] I propose to say something about what the record shows concerning him. I say that another reason why this House should not decide in favor of seating Mr. McLean is because this record is groaning with evidence of the actual doing by the contestant in this case of the very things which it is merely alleged the contestee did.

Why, take the matters referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ainex]. It is said here that the employment of special watchers by Mr. Bowman is a heinous crime, and yet when they are employed by Mr. McLean and his agents it is altogether good and holy and proper. I ask you to look at page 398 of the Congressional Record of December 10. There you will find the items of expenditure for poll men and special watchers:

There is an item, "John Bigelow, Esq., special watchers, first district, $60." That is good so long as it is done by the contestant, but when the same thing is done in behalf of the con-

In the next item we see, "Roger Devers, Esq., special watchers, first district, $100," and, following that, "William S. McLean, jr., poll man, second district, $270." William S. McLean, jr., the chairman of the contestant in this case, credits to himself $270 for the employment of poll men. I am quoting here from the official statement filed under the laws of Pennsylvania. Here is another one: "Hon. M. J. Healey, special poll man, Avoca, $30." These same men, whose employment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] and others have alleged to be unlawful when employed by Mr. Bowman, are hired and paid by Mr. McLean or his representatives, and when it is done by them the employment is claimed to be perfectly proper.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield. Mr. PALMER. The gentleman knows that the law of Pennsylvania permits three watchers at a polling place, and the gentleman knows also that these items were explained in the testimony. Now, was there any polling place in all Luzerne County where Mr. McLean had more than three watchers, the number allowed by law? And is it not a fact that in district after district Mr. Bowman had in some cases as many as 15 of these

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, some of that is true and some of it is not true; and I am going to tell the gentleman some of it is not true, and I am going to tell the gentleman some things that he may not know about his special watchers here. I will refer to the last item on this list, "Mose Solomon, for special watchers, $160." Now, let us investigate about Moses and find out concerning him. You will find this at page 573. Let us see about this:

Q. Are you a Republican in politics?—A. I have been. Q. You have been. You are not now, are you?—A. I am.

Note first that this $160 is paid by a Democrat to a Republican for his political services. If there is not on the face of that the semblance of bribery, then I do not know what it is. But listen:

Q. I believe you received a sum of money from McLean prior to the election, from George McLean's brother, to use for Mr. McLean's behalf?—A. I did.
Q. How much?—A. $160.
Q. How did you get it—by check?—A. By check.
Q. When did you get it?—A. Either on Thursday or Friday preceding

- Q. When did you get it:—A. Educ.

 c election.

 Q. What were you to do with that money?—A. Hire poll men,
 Q. Where?—A. Up in the city wherever I am acquainted,
 Q. In the city of Wilkes-Barre?—A. Yes.
 Q. Did you hire the poll men?—A. Yes.
 Q. You hired what is known as extra watchers, did you?—A. Yes.
 Q. You hired what is known as extra watchers,

Q. About how many did you hire?—A. I have my receipts here. [Witness produces papers.]
Q. I wish you would give me each man's name.—A. I will, and his residence and occupation.
Q. Just the name, to whom you paid it, where they live, and where they work.—A. William H. Eddy, first district, third ward, $10. He is employed as an electrician and lives on North Welles Street. John A. Miller: his place is on North Welles Street. John A. Miller: his place is on North Welles Street, $10; first district, Q. Why did you pay them $10?—A. I always paid my man according to his ability. If I know he is a good worker I give him $10.
Q. Then where you gave a man $10 it was always for himself?—A. Yes.

Yes. Q. Who is next?—A. Val Apple. He is an axle worker also in the same district.

Q. How much did you give him?—A. $10.

Further, on page 574, talking about a man by the name of Bausch:

Q. What was he to do with that $5?—A. Bausch was for McLean, talking for McLean, and taking an interest on election day, and I had that paid him.

Q. Then he worked at the polls?—A. Yes; exactly.

Q. He is a Republican?—A. Well, there are lots of Republicans last fall that did that—hundreds of them.

Q. He is a Republican?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know that he was deputy prothonotary; don't you know he was?—A. For Walser, a Democrat.

Q. He was a deputy prothonotary?—A. I know that.

Q. Under a Republican official?—A. Also under a Democratic official.

Q. How long have you known John Bausch?—A. For the last 15 years or more.

Q. And he is known as a Republican, isn't he?—A. I can't tell what he is.

Q. Now, you say you hired these men, and you have accounted for $95. What did you do with the other $65?—A. I considered my own services was worth something. I was working for McLean for nearly Q. Now, you say you hired these men, and you have accounted for $95. What did you do with the other $65?—A. I considered my own services was worth something. I was working for McLean for nearly five months up to this time, and I hadn't received a penny.

From this it appears that Moses was a thrifty person.

So that, under the guise of decent citizenship and high and holy polities, the contestant in this case pays $160 for a Republican to hire him to work for the contestant, and this man says in his testimony that he went out and hired other Repub-That is in the name of decent citizenship and good licans. ean politics. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman allow me clean politics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like a little more time. Mr. PROUTY. I yield two minutes more to the

Mr. PROUTY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I have not time to go in detail into various cases. I simply want to refer to them, and I challenge a denial of what I say by anybody on either side of this House. I say the record shows at page 542 that Mr. Buss, the direct personal representative of Mr. McLean, received $250, and by his own testimony went out and bought men. You will find it on page 542. And yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] says that we must seat this contestant in the name of decency, in the name of pure politics. I do not understand his notion of pure politics, if receiving $250 to buy men is his conception of it. I want to say to gentlemen on both sides of the House that if you propose to seat Mr. McLean, you are proposing to seat him on the absolute proof of his having done or procured to be done the very things that are simply charged against Mr. Bowman. IADplause on the Republican side.]

But that is not all. At page 542 there is incontrovertible testimony as to buying watchers in the interest of McLean. Somebody look it up and deny it if he can. Mr. Butler, at page 529, says that he had $1,000, a large portion of which came directly or indirectly from Mr. McLean.

At page 654 Mr. Wiegand, of the Stegmaier Brewing Co., says that he spent $750 in Mr. McLean's behalf. At page 591 Mr. Price said he did not hire any watchers, but he visited 140 saloens, spending some $80 or $90. That, I suppose, was in the interest of the pure politics represented by the contestant in this case. At page 582 it is shown that John Bigelow became active in distributing $550 to the faithful.

Mr. Clauss testifies, at page 647, that he had $150.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WHAIS. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to give me a minute more.

Mr. PROUTY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.
Mr. WILLIS. At page 646 I call attention to the testimony of one William Kelly. It is highly interesting and instructive.
He says, pretty well down the page:

Q. What did McLean say to you?

That was the contestant's brother, his manager, his agent. The testimony in full is as follows:

What is your occupation?—A. Driver for the Bartels Brewing Co. Did you receive any money last summer on behalf of McLean?—A. lous to the election I received $10 from Walsh; he said it came from McLean.

What were you to do with that?—A. I was to keep it.

And you did?—A. I certainly did.

What were you to do for it?—A. Work in the interest of McLean.

At the election?—A. Yes.

Do you remember coming to McLean's office with Philip Straub?—

Tes.

A. Yes.

Q. How did you come to go there?—A. Why, Assistant Chief of Police Kennedy came to my house, and he told me that Phil Straub wanted to see me, so I went down there, I think, on a Tuesday morning, and he and I went to McLean's office.

Q. What did Straub say when you got to his place?—A. He said McLean wanted to see me, and I went over there and met Will McLean, jr., and we talked in regard to the election, and I was under the impression that I was to hire the watchers in Edwardsville.

Q. In all the wards in Edwardsville?—A. Yes.

Q. What did McLean say to you?—A. He asked me about how much it would cost, and I told a rough estimate would be about $225, and there was nothing doing.

He got the price too high for Mr. McLean.

Q. What else was said to you?—A. There was John Moore and Ed. oore there that day, the first one.
Q. You say the 2d of November you went the first time?—A. I think

Q. You say the 2d of November you went the first was.
Q. Then you were told to come back on the Friday before election?—
A. Yes.
Q. And you and Straub came back?—A. He wasn't with me when we went back.
Q. What happened the second time?—A. I told him the price was reduced to $100, that was for the first, third, and seventh, and he said that wouldn't do.
Q. How much did he say he would pay you?—A. He didn't set any price at all.
Q. What did McLean say he sent for you for?—A. As far as I understood, him and Straub were talking over it and he wanted to place men in the borough of Edwardsville, and Straub suggested me, so I went over and we couldn't come to any agreement.
Q. So you didn't meet Straub at McLean's office, as he testified to?—A. No.

Q. Did you want $225 for the second was borough.
Q. Did you want $225 for the second was.
Q. McLean was willing to pay $75, wasn't he?—A. Yes; $75.
Q. And the $75 which he was willing to pay was for the vote of the second ward alone?—A. No; he didn't say that.
Q. What did he say he was willing to pay the $75 for?—A. To place second ward alone?—A. No; ne didn't say that.

Q. What did he say he was willing to pay the $75 for?—A. To place watchers.

Q. Isn't it a fact that when you discussed with question, the only question you discussed was getting the vote of the second ward?—A. No; we talked over the whole borough.

Q. And he said he was willing to pay $75?—A. I am not positive whether he said that or not.

Q. You said a minute ago that he did?—A. I am not positive.

Q. Didn't you hear it all?—A. I am not positive whether he did or not.

not.
Q. You said a minute ago that he was willing to pay $75?—A. That is the rumor; I am not positive whether he set that price.
Q. Did you work for McLean at the polls?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you receive any money for it?—A. No.
Q. Except the $10 that Walsh gave you?—A. That was all.

That is in the name of the lofty politics, the lily-white politics represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the contestant in this case. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. If I had the time I would be glad to yield to him, but I have not. The gentleman knows I do not want to be discourteous to him.

Mr. PALMER. I did not want the gentleman from Ohio to misquote the evidence.

Mr. WILLIS. I am quoting from the printed record. Now, here is a representative of the Susquehanna Brewing Co., who says he spent $300 in 150 saloons in the interest of the contestant. That is more of the lofty politics and decent citizenship invoked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 14 minutes remaining. Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Covington].

[Mr. COVINGTON addressed the House, See Appendix.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to use the balance of my time in which to close. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty] proceed?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I never knew a kinder, more unselfish, more open, frank, straightforward, honest man, in the broadest, deepest sense of these words, than the contestee, Mr. Bowman. [Applause on the Republican side.] I know him better than I know myself. Every waking minute of that gentleman is given to earnest thought and effort for the good of mankind. I believe that he thinks his bounden duty is more to do something for some one else than for himself. You gentlemen have seen that gentleman in his close attendance on the business of this House, even if there were only 20 men here. Before and after the adjournment of the House he has been at his office in strict attendance on public business. Every vote, every thought that the gentleman has given expression to here is an indication of the splendid, good, practical Christian life that he lives every minute of the day. It amazes me to see this brazen, brutal attempt to blacken the character of so good a man as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Bowman.

Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. FARR. I regret I can not yield. I have only seven minutes

Mr. GUDGER. I wish the gentleman would explain why the contestee returned on his oath that he had expended $7,194.40, and then on his oath in the testimony he admitted that he had expended $9,272.70?

Mr. FARR. This discrepancy is a mistake. I can explain that. The contestee filed just what his bookkeeper gave him as properly chargeable to this election—$7,194.40.

As regards the temperance attitude of this gentleman, the contestee, I desire to say that he is as frank and open in that as in any other feature of his life. He has been president of the Antisaloon League of his county this year and last year, and since 1909, and he is a man who lives in truth and action, an honest believer in the cause of temperance.

My friends, that man is not capable of doing a dishonorable thing, and this charging up to him all the money spent by the chairman of the county committee, calling him his manager, is wrong. Mr. Jonathan R. Davis was chairman of the Republican county committee, with 14 or 15 different candidates on that ticket. Mr. Davis is an honest and good man. I know him, and I know him intimately. He represented the 14 or 15 candidates on that ticket, and not Mr. Bowman alone. think, as chairman of the Republican Party, he was entitled to nearly twice the number of watchers recorded here. Mr. Bowman, as the candidate of the Republican Party, was entitled to three watchers in each district. There are 311 districts in Luzerne County. That would make 933 watchers, and with three regular watchers, not special watchers, for the Prohibi-tion ticket, there would be 933 more, or altogether 1,866 watchers to which they were legally entitled. And then they were entitled to an overseer for each district. That would make 311 more.

Luzerne County has a population of 350,000 people, with 60,000 miners; somebody says slightingly—ignorant foreigners, and ignorant Poles and Hungarians, sail the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Covington]. I want to tell the Members of the House that the literacy among the foreign-born population of Luzerne County, and in my district, compares favorably with the native-born population of the State of Maryland. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And I want to tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] that it does not come with good grace from him to talk about the coercive methods upon employees used by a corporation. As I understand, he is the local attorney of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, the greatest anthracite coal producing company of my community, taking in a large part of Luzerne County, and running its great and splendid lines out through the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] must not forget the efforts that that corporation, through its officials, made for him at his solicitation.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. FARR. I refuse to yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PALMER. But the gentleman will yield. Mr. FARR. I do not want to see and hear evidences of demagogism and misrepresentation on that side to blacken the character of a man on this side.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman say he charges me with having the corporation coerce men to vote for me?

Mr. FARR. I say it comes with bad grace from the gentleman from Pennsylvania to talk about the coercive methods of railroad corporations on their employees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will come to order, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will cease making personal remarks.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] that

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be in order. Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I have my rights on the floor of this House. I said nothing personal about the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. I said that it came with poor grace from the gentleman from Pennsylvania to charge the officials of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western and other coal corporations with coercive methods in the election of this gentleman, inasmuch as officials of that company worked with might and main for the election of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] himself. [Applause on the Republican

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. FARR. I refuse to yield. I have made my statement, and I am in order.

Now, $9,000 was the total amount expended in this last campaign in the interest of Mr. Bowman and a dozen or more other candidates. Mr. Bowman was generous. He was assessed $5,000 and he contributed it. There were a lot of poor men on that ticket, men running for the legislature, getting about $1,500 for an office lasting two years, and they could not afford to pay this money; and Mr. Bowman was generous and paid in all about $7,000 to the county chairman of the Republican Party toward the election of the Republican State and county tickets in a county of 350,000 people, containing 311 districts.

Where is the chance for corruption? Where is the chance for excessive expenditure? And yet you gentlemen want, some of you, to seat the contestant. Let me tell you something about the contestant

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FARR. I must have a little more time. It is very

Mr. PROUTY. I yield to the gentleman seven minutes, the rest of my time.

Mr. FARR. How many saloons did the contestant—Mr. George R. McLean, the contestant in this case—visit? Here is the evidence:

the evidence:

Q. How many saloons did you visit in Avoca with George Buss and Roscoe Conkling Keating?—A. Really I could not tell you.

Q. About how many?—A. I don't know where Avoca begins and Pittston Township ends, or where Duryea begins.

Q. That day you were out in the automobile how many saloons did you visit?—A. I presume we visited 10 saloons, possibly more.

Q. You spent money in these saloons?—A. I spent money in practically every saloon we went into.

Q. You bought drinks?—A. If a man wanted a drink.

Q. And you spent the money in furtherance of your candidacy?—A. If I hadn't been in the position of a candidate I possibly would not have been in Pittston Township or Avoca or that part of the county at that time.

have been in Pittston Township or Avoca or that part of the county at that time.

Q. And the money you spent in there and the other places you visited in the buying of drinks was spent in the furtherance of your candidacy?—A. Mr. Jones, if I should happen to go into a saloon and there would be people around there I knew, I would naturally say, "Will you have a drink with me?"

Q. Didn't you buy drinks in these saloons for men you didn't know?—A. Certainly, there was men I didn't know in there.

Q. And the money spent in that way was in furtherance of your campaign; that is what you were doing it for that day?—A. I was out campaigning.

Q. And this money was so spent in furtherance of your campaigning.

A. I presume it was, as a general proposition.

I vield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from

I yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has six minutes remaining

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish to use the six minutes left to me in making just as vivid as I possibly can the parliamentary questions presented to you by the record in this case.

I told you in my opening statement that this notice had not been served until 63 days after the result of the election had been officially declared. This is conceded by the committee in its report, as appears on page 3. I further told you that there was not a precedent in the history of the American Congress where the House had taken jurisdiction of a contest when the notice of contest had been served after 30 days unless the party appeared before the House and asked permission for the setting aside of the statute and the rules of this House, and the House, after hearing the situation, extended the time or provided some other method by which the contest might be taken up.

If you will turn to pages 386 and 387 of the Congressional RECORD of last Tuesday, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], the only man who discussed this question, was on the floor, you will find that I asked him this question:

Mr. PROUTY. Have you found any case where there was no notice given within the time that the House considered it, unless they prescribed another kind of notice, and that was given?

And after a good deal of firing back and forth I repeated the question again:

Mr. PROUTY, Have you found a case reported in the books where no notice was given where the contest was entertained by the House without prescribing another notice and compliance?

Mr. PALMER. No.

In all the precedents of the House where there has been an extension of time or a different rule prescribed it has never been done except upon equitable grounds, where the giving of the notice was made impossible or impracticable by reason of the peculiar circumstances. There is not the record of a single case where any man has been excused from giving this notice by reason of his own negligence, carelessness, or ignorance, either of himself or his attorney.

The third proposition is this: Even if this man was appearing before the House and asking for time, it has been solemnly found by both the majority and minority of this committee that this man had no such equitable ground or reason for not giving his notice as would justify either the committee or the House in granting the extension.

I call attention to page 3 of the report of the majority, in which it says:

The committee is not, however, satisfied that the reasons alleged by the contestant are sufficient to entirely excuse him from serving upon the contestee his notice of contest within 30 days from the 12th day of November, 1910, and, not believing that he should be the beneficiary of his own negligence, under the findings of the committee, they have not considered the case from the viewpoint of reporting a resolution to seat the contestant.

Had that record been presented to the House they would have found the same-that he had not given that diligence and care to the preparation of his case that the law requires, and if you had followed your committee there would have been no contest in this case.

Now, what have we got? What does the record show? That here is a man who has come in absolute violation of the rules adopted by this House and by this committee, without showing, in the judgment of your own committee, that he has done the things the statute requires, or given an excuse for not doing it, and you say, "We will nevertheless hear his case."

Now, gentlemen, there was an election held on the 5th of November. More than 30 days have now elapsed since that time. I apprehend that most of you feel secure in your seats; but I want to say to you gentlemen that if you vote down the resolution that I have offered here and vote for both of the other resolutions that have been offered from that side no man's seat is free from contest in this House, because a man can come in any time and present his contest, and he need only to cite the record in the case of McLean against Bowman, in the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, as a precedent and justification and possibly an invitation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY]

is recognized.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to this remarkable situation. The gentlemen who represent the minority on the committee, three in number, have not during the course of this debate disputed a single proposition with reference to the facts in this case as they affect the seat of the sitting Member. Serious charges were made in the majority report. Serious charges were made on the floor of this House, and evidence quoted-not from the brief of counsel for contestant, but from the record-in support of the charges, by the chairman of the committee in your presence in August last, when this matter was being considered. The gentleman from Iowa, a distinguished lawyer, who for years ornamented the bench of his great State before he came into this House, occupied nearly an hour in this debate and never said a single word either in criticism or in answer to the charges made against the contestee, Mr. Bowman. He contented himself with presenting a technical question, which, reduced to the last analysis, means simply that even though corruption and wholesale violations of election laws were resorted to, as was done in this case by contestee—corruption running riot and all law disregarded, he would invoke a technical rule and apply the procedure which obtains in criminal courts of narrow jurisdiction, so that contestee may escape the consequences of his unlawful acts. This House has the undoubted right to act on this resolution, and no technical plea should intervene between contestee and his deserts. This House, with a broad jurisdiction, has the right to take up this question of high privilege at any time, and it should not invoke the strict rule holding a man to 30 days' notice of a contest in the face of proven fraud and corruption. The purpose of this and all rules of this House should be to procure and not prevent substantial justice. The gentleman from Iowa knows that the precedents established by this House are not favorable to his contention; that this House has been memorialized in the middle of a session, after months have expired, for the purpose of calling attention of the House to some person occupying a seat not entitled to occupy it by reason of fraud and corruption.

The House has taken notice of it. Why? Because the 30day rule is only to provide an orderly procedure to protect the rights of all parties, not to defeat them, and to procure substantial justice; and in every case where this rule was invoked the usual procedure was, if the House was in session, to procure the consent of the House to begin a contest, and the House, good cause having been shown, gave permission and always directed the time notice should be given and answer filed, and also provided the time in which the contestant should take his depositions and the time that the contestee should answer them. invoke the common-sense rule that a technicality should not prevent substantial justice, and in these days when courts are freeing themselves of absurdities caused by following senseless rules technically applied this House should refuse to entertain the proposition that corruption and violation of election laws should be waved aside simply to preserve from exception a rule of procedure; but I have no doubt the House will turn a deaf ear to such a plea.

The right of the contestee to a seat in this House has not been prejudiced one iota by the failure of the contestant to file his notice within 30 days. So I say the gentleman from Iowa, a lawyer of long experience, defended not his own report on the facts, not the report I referred to as being the weakest reply ever written to an indictment of this character, but he contented himself with raising this technical question. I congratulate the gentleman. I do not see how the gentleman, knowing every word and line of that record of infamy, could come in here and dispute the proposition laid down in the majority report.

And then we have the other member of the committee, my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Willis], a man educated in the law, although he never practiced it; a man who taught the law to young men who aspired to that honorable profession in a great university in our State. He likewise was familiar with this testimony. He sat with the committee day after day and heard the testimony discussed and heard the arguments. He has read the record and he knows every line of it, and yet he never raised his voice in defense of his own report on the facts in this case. He never has said one single word in this House, and never will, to controvert the facts set forth in the majority report relative to the corruption practiced by the contestee in this case. third member of the committee [Mr. MATTHEWS] was incapacitated by sickness and knows nothing of the record, and I suppose signed the minority report as a matter of form. never said a word in this House, and he never will say it out-side if he reads the record; to antradict the majority report with reference to the facts, with reference to the corruption, with reference to the fraud, with reference to the violation of law practiced by the contestee in this case. And so the reply to this indictment was left to whom? To two or three personal friends whose districts are up in the hard-coal regions of Pennsylvania, with the possible exception of one or two men, among whom is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]. His defense was left to these men who know nothing of the record, and their very statements disclose, beyond peradventure, that they are not familiar with the facts in this case. What was that defense? It consisted principally of a high tribute paid to the contestee's character by the gentleman from Pennsylvania representing the Scranton district [Mr. Fare], who, I am sorry to say, has left the Chamber for a moment. He paid contestee a high tribute, but, if I recall correctly, his opinion of this man is discounted by the position which he took in the famous Archbald impeachment case, for he was the only Member of this House who defended by his vote the charges against Judge Archbald.

Mr. FARR. And the judge will be acquitted in accordance with my prophesy.

Mr. ANSBERRY. If he is, it will be the result of the application of a technicality.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be in order. Mr. ANSBERRY. And, now, while I am at it, for the purpose of showing the weight which should be given to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] and who defended the contestee and paid him such a high tribute and who knows nothing of the facts, I desire to refer him to contestee's record with reference to his attitude on the temperance question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Fare] said that contestee is a temperance man; that he was president of the antisaloon league; that he is incapable of a dishonorable action, and that he could not be guilty of the facts contained in the record, because it was not testimony taken under oath-and not the statement of a personal friend reflect his position. In the record, page 214, is to be found an article which appeared in the Nanticoke News, printed in his district, on the 14th day of October, 1910, under the heading, "Bowman visits Nanticoke":

BOWMAN VISITS NANTICOKE.

Hon. C. C. Bowman, of Pittston, the Republican candidate for Congress, spent a couple of hours in town on Wednesday. He made a very favorable impression on all whom he had the pleasure of meeting. There is but little doubt Mr. Bowman will carry Nanticoke by a handsome majority. The people in this part of Luzerne County are learning more about Mr. Bowman every day, and the more they learn the more they admire him. The attempt made by some political tricksters to array the saloon men and the liquor interests against Mr. Bowman has proved futile. The question of local option will never be heard of in the House of Congress. Should such a measure be introduced, the reputable, law-abiding liquor dealers can trust Mr. Bowman. We know his neighbors in Pittston can trust him. If you doubt this assertion we refer you to Brewer Dick Hughes and Liquor Dealer John Kehoe.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] asserts with great vehemence that his colleague is not responsible for the acts of Jonathan R. Davis, because Davis was the chairman of the Republican county committee. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Fare] will acquaint himself with the record in this case he will find that contestee sought out Davis and employed him as his manager and that on several occasions he had personal knowledge of the acts of his agent which are now being discussed, and that contestee himself asked Davis to pay money, notably to Lawrence Cosgrove, page 69, for special watchers.

His manager testified that $68.75 was paid to the Nanticoke

News for advertising of a political nature. The liquor dealer. John Kehoe, met him on the street afterwards and remonstrated with him and said:

I am holding an office as a Democrat, and you should not have put that in there, Mr. Bowman, because when you did you discounted me with my party, or words to that effect.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANSBERRY. I yield; yes. What has the gentleman to

Mr. BOWMAN. I would not ask the gentleman to do it if he did not-

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, I refuse to yield for a speech. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield. Mr. BOWMAN. I had nothing to do with it at all.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must obey the rules of the House.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I am sorry that the gentleman did not tell Liquor Dealer Kehoe that he had nothing to do with the publishing of the article when he asked him about it, and remonstrated with him. The gentleman's denial of responsibility comes rather late in the day; his attention has been directed to it and his responsibility for it has never been denied under oath.

Mr. BOWMAN. Well, I did.
Mr. ANSBERRY. No; the gentleman did not.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.
Mr. ANSBERRY. And then this gentleman who said that he did not authorize that article in the newspapers-this article in which he shows the true position he holds on the temperance question-and the very language in which it is couched, the reading of it, proves beyond question that he did.

Here is another instance of the gentleman's stability on this question. I will read you his own version of it given under oath (p. 163).

Mr. Bowman being on the witness stand.

Answer. I will explain the thing fully, so there will be no misunder-standing. I came down from a meeting that was arranged by the chair-man, Jonathan R. Davis; he was anxious that I should meet the liquor dealers of Nanticoke. At his earnest solicitation I agreed to meet them.

I regret to say that he was coerced into doing it; in the midst of this campaign he attended a meeting of-what, do you think? The Anti-Saloon League? No; a meeting of the Retail Liquor Dealers of Luzerne County. He did it under coercion. Jonathan R. Davis compelled him to do it. Jonathan R. Davis, the man the contestee says is a man who is incapable of a dishonorable act, the man who contestee says is a bank director, a business man of means, and active in church work; this man coerced contestee.

So I assume, then, that the gentleman-and the record is silent as to why he consorted with these retail liquor dealers on the eve of the election, why he met with these men and made the speech which he made—I assume that he tried to win them from their wicked ways of selling rum in Luzerne County, Pa.; or did he read them the article from the Nanticoke News? And this manager paid $10 to the secretary of that organization to go out and disseminate information with reference to this gentleman, this "holier-than-thou" sort of person, the man who says that he never offended against his God or the consistent with his character. Let the record in this case—the | State, and in passing, that he never told a lie. The following testimony appears on page 89 of the record, Mr. Bowman's campaign manager, Mr. Jonathan R. Davis, being on the witness

Q. Mr. Frank Matejewski, you gave him $10?—A. Yes.
Q. He lives in Nanticoke?—A. Yes.
Q. What is his business?—A. Liquor dealer.
Q. He is in the liquor business, su't he?—A. Yes.
Q. What relation did he hold to the liquor organization in Nanticoke?—A. He was secretary of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association in Nanticoke.
Q. And you gave him $10. What for?—A. Disseminating information

The only person who has sought to refute the statement made by the chairman of this committee when this resolution was first called up in August last was the contestee himself. He stated his position in that speech, and he verifies the correctness of the judgment that the committee reached when they said that the item of $700 for the taxicab and the $50 given to his friend-Giering-were items that he did not put into the report for the reason that they were not political items. does he say about it in his speech?

does he say about it in his speech?

The next subject taken up is the matter of an incorrect expense account having been filed by contestee. It is insisted that an item of $700 was left out. Why should it not be left out if it had nothing to do with political matters? If I purchase an auto from the Republican county chairman after election what has that to do with my political expenditures? Other statements regarding this auto are incorrect. I knew the car, having ridden in it when the property of Mr. Shepherd, of my city. Before purchasing it Mr. Davis told me he paid $600 for the car, and that he had spent nearly $200 in improvements, new tires, and so forth, and that it was in good running order. He bought it to help a poor fellow support himself and family. I was glad to help Mr. Davis out by buying the car, as he managed my primary campaign and acted as chairman of the county committee without the promise of reward of any kind or character. The gentleman from Ohlo [Mr. Ansberry] stated in his address to the House that there was an erasure on the stub of this check. He was mistaken; no erasure has been made upon the stab of that check. The check book and check are open for his inspection or that of any other person. Jonathan R. Davis is incapable of a dishonorable act. He is a business man of means, a bank director, active in church work. During the last year he was appointed by the nonpartisan court as president of the board of assessment and revision of taxes for the whole county, called the richest natural area in the world.

He says that he recognizes it as a political expenditure; and

He says that he recognizes it as a political expenditure; and that he sought to conceal these items is proven beyond all question. Contestee is ever ready to throw the cloak of religion over the shoulders of men who are implicated with him in this unfortunate case. I want him to recall the old saw, "A man who exhibits his religion in his show window has mighty little in stock," and to ponder on it well.

Contestee tried to conceal the $700 check by having the bookkeeper write on the stub of the book, "personal," followed by "taxicab for political purposes," all according to his own testimony and according to the testimony of the bookkeeper, all of which testimony was pulled from him and the bookkeeper by the strongest sort of cross-examination. Then the gentleman justifies what I said and the committee's report with reference to the $50 check given Eugene Giering, an editorial or lead writer in one of the Wilkes-Barre papers, in the same way. In his sworn statement of expense contestee said it was a political expenditure and he thus justified the position of the committee.

Contestee likewise fails to satisfactorily explain his failure to account for $50 given to his friends, Hollister and Jennings. He pays his usual high tribute to their character, the same tribute which he has paid to all men who handled his money. An examination of the record will disclose the use to which at least one of these gentlemen put this money. Some of it went to a man by the name of O'Brien, a Democrat and a mine boss, who in turn passed a part of it among the Democratic miners who worked under him, two of whom were named Meehan and Mullin, pages 358 and 359. Their activity is well described by Thomas Rowlands, a member of the board of elections at this election in the third ward of Avoca. His testimony appears on pages 358 and 359. By the way, Rowlands is assistant foreman in the Delaware & Hudson mines and also was a judge of election. He had $10 of contestee's money in his pocket. who got a part of the contestee's money through the Hollister route, which you will recall was concealed, had a son who likewise was an official conducting this election in the third ward of Avoca, and this strong Democratic ward was carried by contestee. Many men, probably 35 or 40, were accompanied into the booths by men who helped mark their ballots or who at least witnessed the marking of their ballots, contrary to the letter and spirit of the election laws of the State of Pennsyl-

Much has been said with reference to Jonathan R. Davis. say that despite the fact that contestee asserts that Jonathan R. Davis is incapable of a dishonest act the record will show on pages 763, 764, and 765, as sworn to by William J. Trem-bath, that in 1906 a citizens' committee met and organized in the Hotel Sterling shortly after the election of that year for mittee reached in this case.

the purpose of investigating the election frauds and corruption committed at that time. Mr. Trembath said that there was a storm of indignation in Luzerne County over the alleged falsifi-cation of returns and the corrupt use of money in the campaign. The men who were active in this committee were apparently some of the most prominent and respected men of Wilkes-Barre, and the testimony shows that the campaign on behalf of the Republican ticket was conducted in that election by one Jonathan R. Davis, and among the accounts excepted to by that committee was the account of Jonathan R. Davis, as chairman of the Republican county committee which conducted that campaign, And the contestee in this case, Charles C. Bowman, subscribed $50 to the fund raised to defray the expenses of the citizens' committee, so that it is only fair to assume that he knew something of the character and reputation of the man whom he chose as his manager when he started out to run for the office of Representative in Congress. The contestee, according to his Representative in Congress. The contestee, according to his own testimony, knew of election frauds at Warrior Run in connection with his own nomination, and contestee benefited by these frauds, and his campaign for the nomination was conducted by this same Jonathan R. Davis. Contestee can not plead, as often is done where money is used corruptly in an election, that the money was expended by his manager without his knowledge, as the record is full of admissions by contestee and statements by his manager with reference to his knowledge of these illegal expenditures

There is no question but that contestee told Fuller Hendershot, an influential member of the Keystone Party, that he-Bowman-stood ready to expend $30,000 if necessary, and on page 166 of the record the cross-examination of the contestee should be read to fully appreciate the contestee's intentions, and the testimony of contestee, on page 167, with reference to a visit which he made to a man by the name of Morgan, an influential Democrat, and the conversation which contestee had and held with Mr. Morgan, as recited on pages 167 and 168, show beyond peradventure that it was his intention to use money in connection with Mr. Morgan's assistance for the campaign.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield? Mr. ANSBERRY. No—

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I do not ask the gentleman to yield, but I want to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague, has frequently asked the gentleman from Ohio to yield, but it is evidently owing to the fact that the gentleman from Ohio addressed him by name and in the second person.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio ought to refrain from that.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am quoting Fuller Hendershot. I did not refer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania except as the "contestee," except in quoting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed with his argument.

Mr. ANSBERRY. "Now, Brother Bowman," says Fuller Hendershot, "I would like to know your position with regard to the gang here in Luzerne County that has been corrupting the gang here in Luzerne County that has been corrupting the voters," and the contestee answered that he was going to fight; he was against them; and Fuller said, "We ought to fight like hell," or something of that kind. And he mentioned one Heffernan. Contestee is the man who was going to join hands and fight Heffernan, and is the man who six months after he first sat is this House as a Representative recommended for appointment as postmaster at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., this same Heffernan. Contestee's telephonic conversation with his manager, Davis, instructing Davis to pay $150 to Cosgrove, and the contestee's explanation of that transaction will aid any doubting Member to arrive at a correct conclusion as to how he should vote on this resolution. The contestee's attitude and his intentions, as is demonstrated by his cross-examination on pages 21 to 43, 162 to 172, 303 to 312, 228, and 233, can be gleaned from a reading of this testimony. In this connection the testimony of his bookkeeper on pages 43 to 60 and 265 and 273 should be read, and I regret that I have not time to read from this testimony to the House and to comment upon the same. It will suffice to say that the testimony heretofore referred to in connection with the testimony of Jonathan R. Davis, the manager of contestee's campaign, on pages 61 to 78, 83 to 97, 240, 251 to 264, and 394, can not be read by any fair-minded person without reaching the same conclusion that this com-

I am going to print in connection with this argument references to testimony in the record and the pages on which they can be found, and if anyone will take the time to glance through the record it will be found that every statement made by me with reference to this case on the occasions when I have been heard upon it in the House, as well as those contained in the able argument and masterful analysis of the facts made in behalf of the committee by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND], are true.

Much has been said relative to the manner in which the contestee procured his name to be printed on the ballot as the candidate of the Prohibition Party, and a reading of the testimony of Agib Ricketts, on page 774, and the exhibits printed just below his testimony, as well as the testimony of Frank August, page 776, and the testimony of Agib Ricketts, page 770, will give a correct estimate of one of the causes which contributed to contestee's election to a seat in this House.

Contestee asserts that the expenditure of large sums of money in the way himself and his manager expended it in the 1910 election has grown into a custom in Luzerne County, and perhaps thinks that this may excuse the violations of law on the part of himself and his manager, Davis. He should know that this is no defense. I think that it is high time that this sort of thing should be stopped in Luzerne County. The testimony of Jonathan R. Davis relative to special watchers, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, discloses the method by which perhaps the largest number of corrupt votes were procured for the contestee. On page 62 of the record, when asked with reference to the men whom he paid money, Davis himself said that there was so many of them that he does not recall them. He testified that he gave $30 to Bernard Goodstein, a man whom he apparently did not know; that Goodstein came with a letter of introduction from somebody that he, Davis, did not recall; and that after haggling with Goodstein he gave him $30, and he disguised this payment by saying it was for special watchers," although he admits that he did not specify to Goodstein the districts in which special watchers were to be employed.

Davis also testified, page 67, that he gave $100 to F. J. Mc-Canna, of Pittston; that he knew McCanna was a Democrat, and it leaked out that McCanna had received $150 for assisting the contestee in the primaries at which contestee was nominated; and that he did not know whether McCanna was a resident of Luzerne County, although he later on tried to soften the force of this admission.

On page 68 he admits that he gave $30 to George H. Butler, a lawyer, and that he afterwards gave him $10 more, and Davis said:

I gave it to him for the same purpose, the same purpose that I paid everybody else in the same line.

On page 60 Manager Davis said that in all these districts for which he said he paid money for special watchers there were regular watchers of the party, and the men whom he gave money to as "special watchers" were procured especially for Mr. Bowman.

On page 70 he says that he gave Cyrus Weiss $225 for the employment of special watchers, and that C. A. Marks, a lawyer of Plymouth, was paid $25 for special watchers. This man of Plymouth, was paid $25 for special watchers. This man Marks received $50 from John C. Lewis on behalf of the con-This transaction is described in the record on pages 191 and 192 by Lewis, who states that he conducts a saloon, and that Marks came into his place, and despite the fact that there were only the bartender, Marks, and himself present, that he took Marks into a back room and gave him the money secretly, and told him to do what he could for Bowman, and Lewis said that he could give no reason for doing it secretly, although I think the reason is apparent.

On page 71 John W. Crooks, a clerk for a coal-mining corporation, received $100 for special watchers in Hazleton, and D. E. Thomas received $42 for the employment of special watchers, but no place was specified. On page 72 J. D. Cooper received $200 for special watchers in Plymouth Borough; and on the same page it is shown that William Wallace, a mine superintendent, received $60 for the employment of special watchers, and that one of the reasons which made him give Wallace the $60 was that he was superintendent of mines; and on page 72 Davis testified further that he gave Michael Martin. $35 for the employment of special watchers, and that he did not know Martin at all, but that somebody brought Martin to him and vouched for him; but Davis could not recall who it was, and said that he would not be surprised at all if told that Martin was a Democrat.

On page 73 appears the admission of Davis that he gave George Jones $10 and that he did not know Mr. Jones. On page | vote for contestee. (Pp. 283, 284, 287, 288.)

75 appears the testimony of Davis, admitting that he gave $60 to John T. Williams for the employment of special watchers, and that he does not know him, but thinks that somebody whom he has forgotten vouched for him.

On page 76 it is shown that he gave John R. Williams, chief of police of Edwardsville, $75 for the same purpose, and on page 77 he testifies that he gave Thomas Kennedy, assistant chief of police of Edwardsville, $80 for the same purpose, and that he gave John Thompson, whom he did not know, $50, and admitted that he did not know whether his real name was Thompson or not; and he confessed having had a transaction of the same character with Michael Gallagher, whom he did not know. I could cite similar cases all through the record.

A few districts in which most flagrant violations of the law occurred, and in which the vote returned for Bowman is 1,234 and the vote for McLean 490:

In Foster Township, Northwest district, Drifton district, and Hazlebrook district; in Hazle Township, third district and twelfth district; Duryea Borough, second and fourth wards; Nanticoke Borough, fifth, ninth, and eleventh wards; Plymouth Township, sixth west district; Plymouth Borough, third ward; Edwardsville Borough, second ward; and Wilkes-Barre city, sixth ward, second district, the following instances of illegal acts, bribery, and corruption perpetrated by men in the employ of contestee occur:

Mine boss taking 35 to 40 men into the booths and marking their ballots. (Pp. 447 to 451.)

Clerk of the chief of mines of Pennsylvania marked a large number of ballots. (P. 452.)

One man employed by a mine boss marked a large number of ballots. (P. 453.)

A man took in booth at least 10 voters.

Another with a large number. (P. 453.)

Another went into booths with voters. (P. 453.)

Watchers went into booths to see that voters voted the way watchers desired. (P. 454.)

A general mine foreman voted a man and prevented Democratic overseer from performing his duties. (Pp. 463-465.) Permitting watchers to take men into booths over the protest of the Democratic overseer. (P. 439.)

Mine bosses intimidating Democratic watchers and voters.

(Pp. 455, 456, and 458.) Mine foreman marking seven, eight, or nine ballots. (Pp.

467 and 468.) Brother of judge of election marking ballots. (Pp. 461-463.)

Mine foreman marking ballots all day. (Pp. 404-408.)
Five mine bosses taking men into booths and obstructing view of ballot box against protest. (P. 496.)

Marking ballots by officials of Bureau of Mines. (P. 373.)

The entire registration of a precinct voted, although the voters' list of those who voted show a less number. (Pp. 301– 311 and 751.)

Bribing of men to vote for Bowman. (P. 435.)

No Democratic representation on election boards. (Pp. 440 and 374.)

Members of election boards paid money. (Pp. 476-478 and 479.)

Names of election officer who did not serve forged to returns and oath falsely taken. (Pp. 376-377.) Ballots destroyed. (P. 376.)

Election officers swear returns changed after leaving their hands in favor of Bowman. (Pp. 123 to 129.)
Raising vote of Bowman and changing McLean's. (P. 302.)

Raising vote of Bowman and changing McLean's. (P. 302.) Money paid mine boss "because he could deliver the goods."

Ballot box left unsealed and reversal of vote of Democratic candidate for Senator and Congress, showing a difference against McLean of 148. (P. 393.)

Illegal employment of special watchers for contestee, the number in single precincts running from 6 to 16.

Illegal use of money, in one instance $555, paid for use in a single township, in which there were but 405 voters. Ninety dollars in a single precinct. (P. 140.)

Money paid Polish Club to treat the boys. (Pp. 481, 482,

Paying Democrats $5 to $150. (Pp. 168, 169.)

One hundred and fifty dollars reported in expense account as paid to a man in Nanticoke for special watchers, while testimony discloses that this man was directed by Davis to take it to a saloon keeper in another part of the county, who, in turn, was directed to expend it in a little precinct with 93 voters. (Pp. 75, 191, 193.)

Contestee said, in response to question of Hendershot, the independent leader of the district:

If you or anybody else expects to go to Congress, or if anybody else expects to go to the legislature with a Heffernan tag on you, you will be fooled like hell, as far as I am concerned.

I am as good a fighter as you are. I will spend $30,000. I am opposed to this gang the same as you are, and it don't make no difference whether I am elected or not, I am in politics and I am willing to spend $5,000 a year to clean up the corruption in Luzerne. (P. 297.)

This conversation is not denied by contestee.

In conclusion I want to say that I congratulate the minority members of this committee on the fact that they chose members who were not familiar with the record in the case to criticize the majority report relative to the facts. No one having any knowledge of this record save the contestee has sought to defend the actions of the contestee and his manager for the very good reason that the contestee was compelled to and that no one else familiar with the facts would have the hardihood to do so. This resolution should prevail.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMER. During the debate upon these resolutions the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] went out of his way to make an attack upon me and upon my character as a Representative, which raises a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. What is the question?
Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

FARE]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Farr] violated the rules of the House, it was in order to call him to order. The debate on the floor of the House has not raised a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman lay down the proposition that nothing that can be said by one Member about another Member on the floor of the House can be made a question of personal privilege?

Mr. MANN. There might be cases where it might be, especially if done in the absence of gentlemen, but in debate an improper reference to a Member of the House is subject to a point of order-subject to have the words taken down and the House dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. There is no question in the world but that the rule provides for offensive language to be taken down.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] making a brief statement which does not relate to this case. It seems to me the debate has been closed upon this case, and it is not in order now for gentleman from Pennsylvania, on the plea of personal privilege

Mr. PALMER. I do not propose to discuss this case in any I propose to discuss-and very briefly, at that-what my colleague Mr. FARR had to say about me, the first of it in my absence from the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will settle the whole thing, as far as he can. It seems to the Chair it would be an outrageous decision to say that a man can stand here as a Member and say anything he happens to think of about another Member and the one who is assaulted shall not have personal privilege of replying. That is a general rule. If the gentleman [Mr. Palmer] will state what the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] said, then the Chair will rule whether it is a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I be indulged for a single observation? I do it in all kindness. I did not hear the remarks to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] refers. Debate having been closed and the House being about to vote, I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], in all kindness, would it not be better practice to refrain until after the vote is taken and then present the question of personal privilege?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, that would hardly be fair to the Member who is attacked upon the floor. He ought to be entitled to be heard by the same Members who were here listening to the attack, or nearly all, when he was attacked.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will make the further point of order that the House had ordered the previous question upon these resolutions, which requires the vote to be taken at once, and they can not be interfered with by a question of personal privilege. Now, I have no objection, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] thinks he has been unduly assaulted on the floor of the House, having a few moments by unanimous consent, if the other gentleman shall also have the same length of time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] ask unanimous consent for these gentlemen to proceed? Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I am rising to a question of personal privilege, and if the Chair will permit me to state it, I think the Chair will recognize that I am entitled to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The only question in deciding this point of order is whether, the previous question having been ordered on this contest, it brings the transaction to such a conclusion that the gentleman will have to wait until the House gets through voting. That is the point of order last made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].
Mr. PALMER. As I understand, a question of personal privilege is always in order.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. A question of personal privilege can not interfere with the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that if there is a question of personal privilege involved, the gentleman ought to be heard on it, notwithstanding the fact that the previous question has been ordered on the pending resolutions.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] was discussing the election-case resolution I was at the door of the cloakroom and, hearing my name mentioned, came down the aisle, only to hear a part of what the gentleman said about me. I asked him to yield to me, in order to make certain of his language, and he refused to do so. Since then I have secured the Reporter's notes of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, may I interrogate the gentleman? will ask the gentleman if he will yield a moment.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield to his colleague? Mr. PALMER. I shall proceed now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a Mr. FARR. question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. FARR said:

And I want to tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] that it does not come with good grace from him to talk about the coercive methods upon employees used by a corporation. As I understand, he is the local attorney of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, the greatest anthracite coal-producing company of my community, taking in a large part of Luzerne County and running its great and splendid lines out through the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] must not forget the efforts that that corporation, through its officials, made for him at his solicitation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in that statement the gentleman charges me with soliciting a great corporation to use coercive methods in my behalf as a candidate for the office of Representative in Congress. I am the local counsel of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. I represent it in my own county of Monroe, in Pennsylvania. I have been its counsel there since the day I was admitted to the bar. For 40 years my office-my partner before me-has been local counsel for that company. It is no secret in my community nor anywhere in Pennsylvania. But I want to say that, so far as this statement goes, I have never solicited that corporation or any other to coerce its employees, or influence its employees, or influence anybody else, either to vote for me or to vote for anybody else. It is a willful, deliberate, and malicious falsehood. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that charge were true, I ought not to be permitted to sit in this House. If the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., at my solicitation, coerced its employees to secure my election, as the gentleman plainly implies, I ought to be driven from this House. If the gentleman does not know the truth whereof he states, he ought to publicly apologize. he believes that it is true, then he ought to be man enough, for his own sake and for mine and for the sake of this House, to bring charges against me in order to have me driven from it. And I say to him that if he will memorialize the House, or start a contest, or in any other way propose to investigate this question which affects the honesty of my election, I shall not stand here and plead any 30-day rule in which the contest ought to be brought, or any other technical rule of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I shall be glad to meet any such charge on the part of the gentleman from Lackawanna County, or anybody else. If he has any evidence at all to sustain this outrageous, false, and malicious charge, he ought to present it here now, or publicly admit that he has said something which is not the fact. [Applause on the Democratic

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. FARR. Five or 10 minutes; not longer than 10.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] asked me to yield I did yield. I saw him in this assembly, and I did not know that he had gone to the smoking room. I was not taking any advantage of his absence. I wanted him to be here, and I would not have said a word about him if he were not here. In the first place, I want to say that I do not believe they coerce employees in Luzerne County, but I did say and do say that the officials of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co. helped you [Mr. Palmer] to be elected. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Did not the gentleman say that I have no right to speak of the coercive methods of corporations because the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co., through its officials, at my solicitation, did work for me?

Mr. FARR. I said it came with poor grace from the lips of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] to talk about alleged coercive methods of officials of the coal companies in an other district inasmuch as he, an attorney for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co., had the services of the officials along the line going through his district. That is what I said, Mr. Speaker, and that is what I stand for now. [Applause on the Republican side.] I made that statement to strike at the spirit of demagogism that was shown in the gentleman's remarks relative to this contest.

I would like to tell the House a few more things about the contest, if I had the privilege. I would like to tell you about the political conspiracy that started from a reform movement backed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] that went through the Democratic State convention and led up to the Baltimore convention and deprived our splendid Speaker of two delegates for the Democratic nomination for President. [Applause.]

I can earmark for you, gentlemen, every move in that conspiracy against this good man, Mr. Bowman. Talk about reform, progressiveness, and being willing to seat the contestant who, under oath, said he spent the money in saloons to further his campaign.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HARDY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not discussing the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas is overruled. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked unanimous consent to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer], and his speech is not in reply.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] yielded the floor?

Mr. FARR. I yielded to the other gentleman. I had finished what I had to say, and I stand for what I said originally.

The SPEAKER. The vote will first be taken on the resolu-tion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the case of George B. McLean against Charles C. Bownian, from the eleventh congressional district of Pennsylvania, be dismissed for want of jurisdiction because said alleged contestant gave no notice of contest within the time or in the manner prescribed by law, and because he has not asked or secured the consent of this House or of the committee for proceeding in any other manner than that prescribed by law and has not shown any equitable excuse for his failure to give the notice prescribed by section 105 of the Revised Statutes.

MANN. Mr. Mr. Speaker, upon the substitute resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 747.

House resolution 747.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to it may seem fit looking toward the preparation of a bill or bills for the revision of the present tariff law; and said committee is authorized to have such printing and binding done as it shall deem necessary, to require the attendance of the committee stenographers, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by said committee; and all expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law; and be it further

Resolved, That after March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on Ways and Means who are Members elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, are authorized, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to them may seem fit looking toward the preparation of a bill or bills for the revision of the present tariff law; and said committee is authorized to have such printing and binding done as it shall deem necessary, to require the attendance of the committee stenographers, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by said committee; and all the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present considera-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether it is the purpose or his intention—as I see it stated in the newspapers that he rather invites the filing of briefs before the committee—whether it is the intention to print these briefs from day to day, with the evidence before the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is, if it is the desire of the party who files the brief to have it printed, and where the brief is filed before the hearings close.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, is it the purpose of the gentleman to have the evidence taken before the committee and the arguments printed from day to day for the use of the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from New York that, so far as I am concerned, and I believe it is the intention of the committee, that as to the hearings we will follow the same procedure as was followed in the committee at the time the gentleman himself conducted hearings in the Sixtieth Congress

Mr. PAYNE. That included the printing of the briefs every

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this House can not, by a simple resolution, authorize expenditures out of the contingent fund after the expiration of this Congress. That is regulated by statute.

It would require a joint resolution to do that. I have looked into that in connection with another resolution which it was proposed to introduce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] is correct about that, and I will amend my resolution by making it read "Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let me make a suggestion to the gentleman. The first part of his resolution is strictly a House resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Providing for the payment of expenditures out of the contingent fund of the House. I would suggest to the gentleman to withdraw the latter part of his resolution and have the House agree to the first part, and then insert the latter part in one of the appropriation bills. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, in connection with the printing of the evidence, whether it would be practicable, as the hearings go along or are completed, to print the evidence and the briefs submitted according to schedule, so that each schedule would be by itself?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I think that would be a good thing to do, and it was done when the former hearings were held, so far as practicable. Of course, sometimes a gentleman will come in and file a brief or give testimony with relation to several different schedules. stance, he may be discussing the duty on some article where the raw material is in one schedule and the finished product in another, which very often happens. As a general rule that procedure would be followed.

Mr. MANN. What I had reference to was possibly the re printing of testimony. When witnesses are heard under the ordinary rules the testimony of that day is printed at once, When witnesses are heard under the and they are given leave to file a brief, and the brief may not be delivered for a week or 10 days. It is more convenient for Members when they go to examine it to have it all together if it is practicable to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that in the Sixtieth Congress the same thing occurred, and after the hearings were over for the permanent record they were assembled under the different schedules. An effort will be made to do that in this case as far as possible. An effort will

Mr. MANN. I understand. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the first part of the resolution be read as originally presented at the Clerk's desk. The second part I will ask the Committee on Appropriations to take care of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first part of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to it may seem fit looking toward the preparation of a bill or bills for the revision of the present tariff law; and said committee is authorized to have such printing and binding done as it shall deem necessary, to require the attendance of the committee stenographers, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by said committee; and all the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, which bill, with accompanying papers, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. (H. Rept. 1271.)

Mr. MANN reserved all points of order on the bill.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and report may be printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the bill and report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Reserving the right to object, let me ask the gentleman what is the purpose of printing an appropriation bill in the RECORD?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because there are a few sections of new law in it.

Mr. MANN. But every Member knows that it is available in the document room. I do not think many Members would read it in the Record in fine print. I can see no reason for commencing the practice of printing appropriation bills in the RECORD.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is a very short bill, but if the gentleman from Illinois objects to its being printed in the Record I shall not insist upon it. The report only contains two

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the report being printed in the RECORD, and the gentleman may have as many copies of the bill printed as he desires, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the report may be printed in the Record.

mous consent that the report be printed in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1271, Sixty-second Congress, third session.] POST OFFICE APPROPRIATON BILL.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATON BILL.

Mr. Moon of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 27148:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, submits the following:

The estimates covering this bill may be found on pages 557 to 563, both inclusive, of the Book of Estimates, and aggregate the sum of $281,791,508. The committee recommends $278.489,781, a decrease in amount of the department estimates of $3,301,727.

The increases in the estimates recommended by the department are due in part to the growth of the usual service and in part to the expenses incident to the parcel post to be installed under the provisions of existing law, and to the postal savings bank. The committee has not been able to get an estimate as to the revenues that will likely arise from the parcel post. The estimates made by the department for additional expenses on account of this service are quite large, but of necessity only speculative, as it is impossible to know at this time to what extent the service may be used. The committee has deemed it wise to reduce the estimates because of the fact of the uncertainty of their correctness, and because it is best to let the service develop in a measure before large appropriations are made to meet a service the extent of which is not yet known. Still, it has, in its opinion, been liberal enough in the appropriations.

The report of the Postmaster General shows a small surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. The committee, however, acting on the audited accounts, was of opinion that there was a deficiency of about $627,000 instead of a surplus of about $219,000 for that year. The Postmaster General presents an audited postal deficit of $1,785,522.10 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912. Accounts chargeable to this year and not yet audited may change this

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether we can agree on time for general debate; and, if so, what length of time is desired on that side?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable, Mr. Speaker, to state just what time is desired. I prefer, if it is agreeable, to let the general debate run this evening, and perhaps in the meantime we can agree on the time when it is taken up again.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman from South Dakota to agree that when the bill is taken up to-morrow we shall begin to read it under the five-minute rule?

minute rule?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We could not get through with the general debate to-night.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would be willing to agree to one hour on a side, and then we could close to-night.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think there will be any difficulty in agreeing to the time for general debate. We probably will not desire more than an hour on this side, but I prefer not to make any agreement this evening.

The motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas was then agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HULL in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] such time as he

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of my determination, made public in December, 1911, I shall on the 4th of next March retire from service in this House. This is, therefore, the last occasion upon which I shall participate officially in the passage of the Indian appropriation bill. Aside from my interest in the general Indian question, I have for many years had a special interest in this bill because of my great interest in the United States Industrial School at Carlisle, which is in my district. At the outset I desire to express my appreciation of the courtesy which I have always received at the hands of the Committee on Indian Affairs. During my service in this House it has had three different chairmen, and they have all been greatly concerned in the welfare of the Indians, devoting their time, labor, and ability to the cause and giving fair hearings and consideration to all concerned The present chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], has served upon the committee for many years and is thoroughly familiar with the questions with which it has to wrestle. He was for a long time the ranking minority member of the committee, until his party came into control in the present Congress, when he changed places with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], who had served so well and ably as chairman. When I entered Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs was presided over by our dear friend, the late James S. Sherman, who continued as chairman until the people of the United States selected him to preside as Vice President over the deliberations of the United States Senate. During my 16 years of service in the House, what a large number of Members have been transplanted from this end of the Capitol to the other! It is becoming more and more universally recognized that service in the House is the best possible training for effective and valuable service in the Senate.

The people of the country, or even of a Member's own district, are not always in position to make a correct estimate of the value of a Congressman's ability or worth. Sometimes the Member is overestimated in his own district or by the country, and ofttimes he is underestimated; but nowhere on earth is a man more fairly estimated than right here in the House by his fellow Members. They know the extent and importance of his labors and counsel in committee, where, after all, a Member's best work is done. They know the sincerity and effectiveness of his utterances upon the floor, and they are able to judge him from a thousand things of which the outside public has little or no knowledge. When a Member stands the test here, when he is popular with and respected and looked up to by his fellow Members, it may be taken for granted that he is well fitted for service in the Senate or anywhere else. And, by the way, judged by that test, there is no man better fitted than the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall]. [Applause.] His 20 years of service in this body have been years not only of intelligent and patriotic labor, but of substantial achievement. A gentleman of high ideals, he is never carried away by illusions. If he is interested in the movement of the stars, he nevertheless keeps his feet upon the ground and breathes the air of the people. Upon every important question he has convictions, the courage to express them, and the ability to express them well. When his convictions have been formed he is never moved to an opposite course by the knowledge that it would be more popular. An eloquent and forceful speaker, he always commands the attention of the House. While his addresses are of a high intellectual order, he never permits a thought to be so obscured by the ornament of phraseology as to be lost upon his hearers, but rather he drives it home by the felicity of his expression. Twenty years of faithful and patriotic service in this House have rounded him out into the perfect statesman, and it is a pleasure to know that the glorious traditions of Massachusetts in the United States Senate are likely to be continued in one who is at once so great a scholar and so great a statesman as Samuel W. McCall. [Applause.]

My object in rising was to say a few parting words upon the subject of the Carlisle Indian School, in which I take so great an interest. This bill carries an appropriation of $152,000 for that school. Its history is interesting. Away back in 1777 there were erected extensive cavalry barracks at Carlisle. The labor was largely that of Hessians, who had been captured by Washington at the Battle of Trenton. In 1846 these barracks had reached such proportions that they were capable of housing 2,000 men and caring for their horses. A cavalry school was maintained there until the Civil War, when the troops at that point were drawn into active service. About the close of the Civil War these barracks were used for the housing of Indian captives in charge of Capt. R. H. Pratt. In the late seventies or the early eighties there was conceived the idea of establishing and maintaining at that point a school for the industrial training of Indian boys and girls. The Government buildings were devoted to that purpose. The progress made in that Indian Industrial School at Carlisle is remarkable. It has become and now is the largest, most celebrated, most useful, and proportionately the least expensive of all the Indian schools. persons throughout the entire country most interested, and who have given the most studious thought and care to the welfare of the Indian, have watched with increasing pride and satisfaction the growth, progress, and increasingly useful career of this institution.

Separated from their tribal relations, the Indian pupils have taken a greater interest in acquiring useful knowledge, and have gained greater proficiency. The discipline of the institution is perfect, and the training there given them is of a plain, practical character, fitting them not only to be independent and to make their own living, but to be useful to the communities in which they may ultimately find employment and make their homes.

The location of the school is ideal. The Government owns several hundred acres of land in the beautiful, fertile, and farfamed Cumberland Valley. The buildings are on the edge and, indeed, within the corporate limits of the peaceful, orderly, and attractive borough of Carlisle, and in the heart of as fine an agricultural country as may be found in the United States. The farmers thereabouts are sober, industrious, and thrifty people, setting good examples for the young Indians, many of whom are employed by them during the summer months, earning good wages in every variety of farm work. Although in the early days of the country the Indian depredations and outrages in that vicinity were almost without number, it has come to pass that the inhabitants look with extreme kindness upon these Indian boys and girls and the sentiment toward them is of the very best.

The Government buildings are adequate for the care of 1,200 to 1,500 pupils, but the average number maintanied is about 1,000. As the total appropriation carried by this bill for that school is only $152,000, including the care of the buildings, the salary of the superintendent, repairs, and transportation, it will be seen that the average expense is $152 per pupil, which includes, of course, food and clothing.

I have often been asked about the health of these Indians. We hear so much about the tendency of their race to tuberculosis. It speaks well for the healthful climate of Carlisle that there is less of that disease in that school than in any other Indian school in the country—in fact, it is almost unknown. Great care is taken against overcrowding of pupils in the dormitories; and then the outing system which prevails at Carlisle is a wonderful tonic, and outdoor life is, of course, a wonderful preventive of that dread disease.

As I have said, the discipline there is perfect. They have an auditorium holding about 1,200. I wish that every Member of Congress might be present on one of their commencement occasions and see the important changes which have been wrought in those young Indians—a larger proportion of them full blooded than is found in most Indian schools. No one who witnesses one of their commencements is ever in favor of abolishing the Carlisle School. The capacity of the young Indians for learning is quite remarkable. They have a brass band of about 50 pieces, which need not be ashamed to play in the presence of the Marine Band or any other similar organization. When I heard them on a recent occasion I marveled and told the instructor that there must be a lot of "ringers" them; but he assured me upon his honor that there was not one in the band who had been in the school for more than two years. and not one who had ever blown a horn before he came to the school. The wonderful marching and drilling of the Carlisle Indian cadets would be creditable to the cadets of West Point or Annapolis.

It is something of a tribute, not only to the training and discipline of the school, but also to the health-giving qualities of the pure air and water of the Cumberland Valley, that so many famed athletes are developed there. This country has never known a better baseball pitcher than Bender, or a better catcher than Myers—both Carlisle Indian pupils. In these latter days it has come to pass that the standing of an educational institution is judged largely by the success of its football team. Measured by that test, Carlisle stands in the front rank, for its team has at one time or another defeated the teams of nearly, if not quite, all the great universities. The greatest football player of all is Thorpe—pretty much a whole team all by himself—who so recently brought honor and glory not only to Carlisle but to the whole country at Stockholm, where, winning both the decathlon and pentathlon, he was officially declared the greatest all-round athlete in the world, and probably the greatest the world has ever known. His Carlisle colleague, Tewanima, also took great honors in that international contest.

These young Indians are trained at Carlisle in almost every useful branch of industry. They art taught to make harness, to shoe horses, to build wagons, to lay brick, to cut stone, to make tables, stands, and chairs, to become tinners, carpenters, steam fitters, pipe fitters, and the like; they are taught to be farmers, to milk cows, to plow a straight furrow, to sow wheat, to mow, to reap, to husk corn, and to perform all the other industries known to farm life. The girls are taught to bake, to do laundry work, to do housework of all kinds, and to make their own dresses. They make splendid housekeepers. They are greatly in demand for domestic service. It seems to me that the education bestowed upon them is of the very best for them and best for the country, for it makes them self-sustaining, useful, and independent citizens. The most of the Carlisle pupils do not drift back to the reservations or to the tribes, but find occupation as farmers or in the mechanical trades. Thirty-four Carlisle Indians served in the Spanish-American War.

In the summer months they are permitted to hire themselves out to farmers and others. In that way they not only get healthful occupation, but they acquire practical and valuable experience in farming and they breathe in the healthful and pure air and drink the pure water of that far-famed valley. In this school they are taught frugality. One of the hardest things to teach an Indian is to save money. The Indian is always generous; there is no such thing as a stingy Indian. Here they are taught to be saving, and many of them have done wonderfully well in that regard. They are not permitted to use either liquor or tobacco. The institution is nonsectarian, but there are at Carlisle churches of all denominations, and the ministers are quite willing to take turns in preaching to these young people, so that their moral as well as their physical welfare is carefully looked after.

There has at times since I have been in Congress been great opposition to this school. One Commissioner of Indian Affairs was in favor of abolishing it entirely; another favored reducing it by one-half, and at one time the Senate Subcommittee on Indian Affairs unanimously agreed to a proposition to cut off the appropriation entirely after a stated period. Happily those views were not permitted to prevail, and at the present time there is a disposition to strengthen rather than to weaken or impair this useful institution. My successor, therefore, is not likely to have the troubles which have sometimes beset me in securing its requisite recognition in this appropriation bill. I trust that his experience and relations with the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as of the House generally, may always be as agreeable and as pleasant as mine have been and are, and that the time may be far distant when the Carlisle School shall suffer at the hands of any governmental agency.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South

Dakota use some of his time? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was hoping that the gentle-from Texas would consume some time. I understood he had one speech that would take about an hour. I was not intending to speak to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] 40 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak upon House bill 19213, a bill introduced by me on February the 1st, this year, the purpose of which bill is to reopen the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribe, and to permit certain Mississippi Choctaws to be enrolled who are, I believe, justly entitled to be put upon the rolls.

The reason why I speak now about this bill is because I expect at the proper time in the consideration of the pending Indian appropriation bill to offer it as an amendment. In presenting this bill at this time I will say it in no way reflects upon the subcommittee of the full Committee on Indian Affairs in this House to whom it was referred, because the subcommittee has held hearings upon the bill and given much attention to its consideration, and the delay in the report is due to no fault of the subcommittee, but I think the fault has been with the Indian Affairs Office in this city. For four or five months it was impossible to get the department to make its report on the bill, and it was only through persistent personal appeals to the department that they filed their opinion on the 2d of July following. I want to say, however, that I am informed that the subcommittee will make its report within the next week, and I have great hopes and reason to believe that it will be favorable.

Prior to 1830 there was a tribe of Indians that lived east of the Mississippi River, known as the Choctaw Tribe; they dwelt mostly in south and east Mississippi. As civilization progressed, the white people desired to move these Indians west, into lands that were afterwards known as the Indian Territory and now Oklahoma. It required almost every kind of argument to persuade this tribe to move out of Mississippi. They loved their native land, their hunting grounds, and revered their burying places. They were an agricultural people, and they wanted to remain in Mississippi, but the white people, as well as the Federal Government, desired to move them, and after every kind of appeal, as well as every kind of argument they finally persuaded the tribe to enter into the treaty of 1830, that permitted those Indians to move into Indian Territory who so desired, and those who wanted to remain in Mississippi and continue to reside there to do so. And I want to say in this connection that this treaty of 1830 would never have been consummated, and I dare say no Member of this House and no member of the Indian Affairs Committee will controvert the statement that the treaty would never have been entered into or agreed to by the tribe, had it not been for the insertion of the fourteenth article of that treaty. The fourteenth article was inserted exclusively for the benefit of the Indians who desired to remain in Mississippi. That article reads as follows:

sired to remain in Mississippi. That article reads as follows:

Each Choctaw head of a family, being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States, shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months of the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him, over 10 years of age, to join the location of the parent. If they reside upon such lands intending to become citizens of the States for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue. Said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of Choctaw citizens, but if they ever remove they shall not be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

annuity.

Emissaries of the Federal Government, as shown by the history of this tribe prior to 1830, had held frequent conferences with the chiefs of the tribe in order to get every member of the tribe to agree to go into this Indian Territory and leave Mississippi. These agents of the Government used money, whisky, and food to accomplish their purpose, but there was such a desire among certain members of this tribe to remain in Mississippi that the fourteenth article of the treaty was inserted as a compromise-allowing those who would to leave Mississippi, and those who desired to remain could stay in Mississippi. To do so they need only follow the provisions of the fourteenth article of the treaty.

And so I take it that no one will take issue with me that the fourteenth article was included in the treaty for the sole purpose of allowing those Choctaws who desired to continue to live in Mississippi and make it their home, to go to the agent of the Government within six months and signify their intention to do so, and to take up their particular allotment of land and continue to live thereon for five years, and by so doing that they lost none of their tribal relationship, and the only condition imposed in the fourteenth article was that should they ever remove out of Mississippi after they had availed themselves of the fourteenth article by signifying their intention to remain in Mississippi, they would then lose their interest in the Choctaw annuity. The Choctaw annuity was a very small the Choctaw annuity. The Choctaw annuity was a very small amount. So, I say, that whatever rights the Mississippi Choctaw of to-day is entitled to be gets by virtue of the fourteenth article of this treaty, and I lay it down as an incontrovertible fact that no act of Congress that has ever been passed since 1830 could abridge, change, or take away from the Mississippi Choctaw the rights guaranteed to him by the fourteenth article of that treaty.

The Indian tribe has never attempted to abridge or change in any way this particular treaty, but selfish lawyers representing the Choctaw Nation in the West have tried by persuasion, deception, and lobbying-I might say corruption, as revealed by the hearings had before the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House and of the Senate—to have legislation passed through the Congress of the United States that would take away from the Mississippi Choctaws the rights that are guaranteed to them under the fourteenth article of that treaty. other words, Mr. Chairman, every act of Congress that has been passed relative to the Mississippi Choctaw has been upon the assumption that they could not be enrolled unless they left Mississippi and went into Indian Territory, thus being forced to violate the very article they had demanded and ob-There is nothing in that provision that says that the Mississippi Choctaw shall ever have to leave Mississippi in order to continue to have his rights as a member of the tribe.

And every act of Congress that has been passed that committed them to the policy of having to remove out of Mississippi into Oklahoma was contrary to the provisions of the fourteenth article of the treaty. Now, after this treaty was made the United State. Government, in 1831, sent an agent of the United States by the name of Ward into Mississippi to allow these Mississippi Choctaws to signify their intention to remain under this article and to allow them to choose their allotment of land for residence and cultivation. The hearings reveal the fact that this man Ward, the agent of the Government, went into that Territory, and the former chairman of the committee [Mr. Burke] will remember the testimony relative to the acts of Ward. He got drunk, he was incompetent, he was careless, he would not enroll these people who were entitled to be enrolled, but used, on the other hand, every means in his power to prevent these Mississippi Choctaws from being placed on the rolls.

The United States Government, hearing of this agent's actions, sent a board of commissioners to investigate, and in part their report says:

From the great mass of proof offered to the board, there can be no doubt of the entire unfitness of the agent for the station. His conduct on many occasions was marked by a degree of hostility to the claims calculated to deter the claimants from making application to him. His manner to the Indians coming before him for registration was often arbitrary, tyrannical, and insulting, and evidently intended to drive them west of the Mississippi against their will and in violation of the letter and spirit of the treaty.

The agent of the Government, Col. Ward, unfortunately so managed this business that it is left almost entirely to oral testimony to prove the names of those who applied for registration within the six months and the signification of their intention to remain and become citizens of the States. That he kept a book, about foolscap size, containing two or three quires of paper, and which was almost filled with the names of persons registered, is proved, and it is also proved that this book was afterwards partially torn up and used as shaving paper, etc.

After making these investigations and finding that this agent

After making these investigations and finding that this agent, Ward, was so incompetent and careless, and had acted so badly with respect to the Mississippi Choctaws, Congress passed a law known as the act of 1842, that provided for giving the Mississippi Choctaws that would at that day move to Indian Territory and join their brother Choctaws there, scrip, which scrip entitled them to go into Indian Territory and take up an allotment of land there. Many of the Mississippi Choctaws under this act were induced to leave Mississippi and move to the Territories by the agents of the Government, and 4,144, believe it was, signified their intention of coming under this scrip act. Notwithstanding the fact that the white people, through acts of Congress and emissaries and agents of the Federal Government, were using and had used every inducement and persuasive method to take from these unfortunates their homes and land in Mississippi, guaranteed to them under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, 4,000 of them still remained and lived in Mississippi in 1847. Various acts of legislation were passed, but none having any bearing on the case under discussion until 1893, when the Congress of the United States passed an act looking to the dissolution of the tribe and the distribution of the funds. They sent commissioners into Oklahoma and Mississippi for the purpose of investigating that matter. Since 1893 only two acts that have any particular bearing on the Mississippi Choctaws have been passed by Congress, one, the act of 1898, known as the Curtis Act, and the other, the act of 1902, that might be styled the Mc-Murray Act. The act of 1898 gave to these Mississippi Choctaws the right they claimed under the treaty of 1830. latter part of that act reads as follows:

Said commission shall have authority to determine and identify the Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, September 27, 1830, and make report to the Secretary of the Interior.

In other words, by the Curtis Act of 1898 commissioners were sent into Oklahoma and into Mississippi to identify these Mississippi Choctaws for enrollment who came under article 14 of the treaty of 1830. The commissioners thought and every one familiar with Indian affairs was under the impression that that section meant identification for final enrollment. Acting under that, 4,192 Mississippi Choctaws were identified; but mark you, although these unfortunates traveled in many instances from Mississippi to Indian Territory and proved their right to be enrolled as members of the Choctaw Tribe, one of the many remarkable things in the history of their treatment and suffering is, that when the rolls were closed in March, 1907, the roll containing the names of these 4,192 unfortunates formed no part of the final rolls. In 1902 it appeared as though Congress was really going to do something for the Mississippi Choctaws, and so the McMurray Act was passed. I want to read it. It is the most adroit instrument, it is the most deceiving piece of legislation that was ever passed by any Congress. I look with complacency upon the smile of my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. Davenport]. This act of Congress, it is said, was conceived by one of the attorneys representing the Choctaw Nation. It is said that one McMurray, of whom you read in the papers sometime ago in connection with Senator Gore, fathered the act, this man, member of the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, who afterwards boasted and said:

As a matter of fact, I am willing to take the responsibility of almost all the Choctaw and Chickasaw people's doings during these years on the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish. There was hardly a bill affecting the general affairs that was passed we didn't O. K., and there never was a bill suggested by us that was not passed; so whatever there is in this work, good or bad, it rests upon us.

There is the statement in brazen language of Mr. McMurray. Not satisfied with dominating the tribe and obtaining legis-lation that would necessarily rob certain members of the tribe of their just rights, he must brag and display his talents before the world.

These expressions of his can be found in the testimony he gave in the Sixty-first Congress, third session (H. Rept. 2273, vol. 2).

He conceived the act of 1902. Let me read it to you. On a casual glance it would appear as if it were going to give these poor, distressed, needy people in Mississippi some relief, but it did not. This is the language of the act with reference to the Mississippi Choctaw:

Mississippi Choctaw:

Art. 41. All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495) as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said commission, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such commission within one year after the date of the said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such commission as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such commission as Mississippi Choctaws and said enrollment shall be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such application all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians, and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who receive a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1808, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said commission, but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood, or who is not the descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw who received a patent to land under said treaty, or who is otherwise barred from the rights of clitzenship in the Choctaw Nation. All of said Mississippi Choctaws so enr

That act of Congress said that no person should be enrolled "whose ancestor had not received a patent from the Federal Government," and, mark you, because of the acts of this man Ward, the agent of the Government in 1831, there were only 143 patents issued to the Mississippi Choctaws under Article XIV. Notwithstanding the fact that over 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to patents and only 143 actually received them, this act provides that in order to be enrolled their ancestors are required to have actually received a patent. Is that fair, just, or right? The commissioner in 1833 reported the cases of 1,372 Mississippi Choctaws who had actually signified their intention to remain in Mississippi under the fourteenth article and had complied with the provisions of that article; and the evidence in various hearings afterwards showed that 4,144 of these people received scrip, and the scrip was issued in 1842 only to those who had remained in Mississippi after 1830 and signified their intention of taking up these lands in Mississippi under that article of the treaty. McMurray Act of 1902 those who desired enrollment must prove that their ancestors actually received a patent. If they confine it to that, it could only benefit the descendants of 143 people, when it is undisputed that 7,000 of them lived in Mississippi in 1842. But that is not all. The act goes further and says that, notwithstanding the fact that the descendants of these people could prove that their ancestors actually received a patent, that they must not remain in Mississippi and acquire the rights guaranteed to them by Article XIV of the treaty of 1830, but they must move into Indian Territory. By that provision in the act they absolutely nullified every intention of the treaty of 1830. But the McMurray Act did not stop there. It created what was known as a citizenship court. I dislike It created what was known as a citizenship court. I dislike to mention the name of citizenship court in the presence of my good colleagues from Oklahoma. They have heard the name of it so often in their fair State; they have heard of its scandalous and blackened history. The citizenship court was conceived by this man McMurray, who afterwards boasted how he passed it through this body. That court was created to exclude from the rolls the more fortunate Mississippi Choctaws who had been placed there. In other words, to exclude from the rolls those who had happened by favoritism or some way to get upon the rolls; and the hearings before the various committees of this House show that over 4,000 of them were excluded by this citizenship court.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to a peculiar circumstance in connection with the act that he is now referring to-namely, that the sections of the act creating the citizenship court went into effect upon the approval of the act, while the balance of the act did not become law until it was voted upon and approved by the members of the tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Well, it afterwards became a law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will repeat. The citizenshipcourt provision went into effect as soon as the act was approved. In other words, the Indians had no opportunity of proving or disproving that portion of it, while the main part of it did not become a law until they had approved it.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understand. I am not surprised at that. Men like Mansfield, McMurray, and Cornish, who represented that tribe, could almost have made it do anything or pass any kind of an agreement through the tribe. am not surprised that they finally ratified these various articles that afterwards became the law. But the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], who was formerly chairman of this important committee, remembers full well, as well at the other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the hearings which revealed the black history of the citizenship court, and how it excluded so many poor unfortunates from those rolls who were entitled to be enrolled.

It was created to review the final judgments of the United States circuit court, which court had admitted many of these Mississippi Choctaws to the rolls, and this newly created citizenship court was anthorized by the act to set aside such judgments if it should find either-

That the chiefs of both tribes (the Choctaw and Chickasaw) had not been notified of the appeal from the commission to the United States court, or that the United States court had heard on the appeal any additional testimony other than that submitted to the commission.

Now, everyone knew that both chiefs of both tribes had not been notified (and there was no reason why they should be), and everyone knew that additional testimony had been heard in many cases on appeal so that the passage of this act in effect set aside and nullified all of these judgments, for the reversal was certain of the judgment of the United States Circuit Court.

One other remarkable feature contained in this McMurray Act of 1902. It gave rise and wonderful opportunity to Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish to sue out injunctions and prevent being done for the unfortunate Mississippi Choctaw what apparently the act gave the right to do.

Under its provisions he might make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within six months after identification, but he could not get any land upon which to settle until after he should be enrolled. How could he settle unless lands were given? The old method of identification by the tribe had been abandoned, and if the Mississippi Choctaw went into Choctaw-Chickasaw country he was liable to be ejected as an intruder because not on the tribal rolls, even if he went to Indian Territory for the mere purpose of identification. The "identification" was held by the Attorney General several years later not to be the identification by the commission, but the final approval by the Secretary of the Interior. I repeat the identification was held to be approved once by the Secretary of the Interior, and yet after the commission had "identified" a number of people and was preparing to enroll them, Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish secured an injunction against the commission enrolling them upon the ground that the "identification" had occurred more than six months prior to that time and that the claimants had not removed to and made settlement within the Indian country within the six months after This injunction was granted, and thus the said identification. claimants were shut off from settlement in the Territory and returned to Mississippi, although more than a year afterwards the Attorney General held that the "identification" contemplated was final "identification" by the Secretary of the Interior.

The persons affected by this injunction who were compelled to abandon their claims were never thereafter notified of a final identification by the Secretary of the Interior. They never thereafter had any opportunity to make settlement.

And so, Mr. Chairman, after requiring the Mississippi Choctaw, contrary to article 14 of the treaty of 1830, to remove to Indian Territory to take up lands there, you will see from this act it was impossible for him to do it. Under this act and the actions of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish it was a case of "Be damned if you do and be damned if you don't."

I shall not go further into that act. But I would remind this House, Mr. Chairman, that there is one circumstance that explains the activity, shrewdness, and apparent ability of this remarkable firm of attorneys who represented the Choctaw Tribe from 1899 until the last three or four years, and that is, that in addition to a very large annual salary, they were paid certain fees for every person they prevented from being en-rolled, or excluded from the rolls. It is a sad commentary, indeed, that the Indian department and the Congress of the United States should ever have allowed people's rights squandered on a commission basis or in such an unpardonable and

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the Congress of the United States has never dealt fairly or justly with the Mississippi Choctaws. Some one may say that the Mississippi Choctaws, by not moving into Oklahoma, lost their tribal relations. Surely no man who is posted on Indian affairs will controsurely no man who is posted on Indian arrairs will controvert the proposition that under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 they might not still continue to live in Mississippi and continue to be a part of the tribe. The article expressly states it: "Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of Choctaw citizens." They had as much right in the funds of the Choctaw Tribe as any man who lived in Oklahoma, and I would cite to those gentlemen who do not believe in that statement the fact that in the year 1881 the Congress of the United States passed a resolution giving to the Choctaw Nation in the West—that part of the Choctaw Tribe that lived in Indian Territory-a right to sue the United States Government for damages done to the Choctaw Tribe in Mississippi in violating article 14 of the treaty of 1830, etc.

And so the Choctaw Tribe in the West did enter suit against the United States for damages done to the Mississippi Choc--and, mark you, for damages done to the poor unfortunates for whom in part I plead at your hands to-day. Choctaw Tribe in Indian Territory sued for $8,000,000, mostly because of Ward's action and because of the action of the other agents of the Federal Government in not enrolling these people in Mississippi and for defrauding them out of their scrip and lands. And, do you know, after taking volumes of testimony and listening to exhaustive legal arguments, that the United States Supreme Court awarded a judgment to the Choctaw Tribe living in Indian Territory for approxi-mately $8,000,000? This judgment was paid to the Choctaw Nation in the West by the United States Government, and the amount of the judgment, less the costs of the suit, went into the funds of the Choctaw Tribe. It is now a part of the funds of the tribe. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not fair, nor just. nor right for the Choctaw Nation in Indian Territory to obtain a judgment and collect it from the Government amounting to $8,000,000 and put it into its treasury for damages done to the Mississippi Choctaws, and then deny to the Mississippi Choctaws the right to be enrolled and share in those funds.

Oh, it may be said that to reopen these rolls will create an unsettled state in Oklahoma and that it might affect the titles to lands, and so on. My bill does not do anything like that. It does not propose to disturb the title to any piece of land in Oklahoma. In this particular the bill provides that these people shall have the right to go and prove, through some one whom the Government shall send there, that their ancestors in Mississippi received a patent under the fourteenth article of the treaty, or were entitled to receive a patent, and then when they can prove that and are enrolled they shall share in the fund that is now in the hands of the tribe and to the extent that the Indians in the past have gotten by virtue of their allotment of lands. It does not ask for any lands. It only seeks recompense in money; that is all. So that it will create none of that unsettled state that is spoken of. It is a matter of justice that I plead for to this committee, to allow me to present this bill and let it be voted for at the proper time in the consideration of the pending bill, and I appeal to my colleagues from Oklahoma not to make a point of order against my amendment.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman's amendment propose to put on the roll any Indians other than those residing in Mississippi? That is, would the Mississippi Choctaws now in Oklahoma be put upon the roll by that amendment that the gentleman proposes to offer?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. My bill provides that for six months after its passage every person who can prove that his ancestor either received a patent under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, or who was entitled to receive a patent under that article, can be enrolled.

It matters not whether he lives in Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, or elsewhere. I want to say right here that I have received many letters from parties interested in this matter, not only from my district, but from other States, in reference to this bill and asking for its passage.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman guarantee under his bill that conditions of the land itself and the allotments that have been made would not be disturbed in Oklahoma?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I can not guarantee anything. All I can say is that my bill does not say that they shall get land, but they are to get a sum of money equal to double the appraised value of the allotment that the Choctaw Indians themselves now enrolled did receive, which would be $2,080.

Mr. CARTER. I understand, but under the gentleman's proposition there would be not less than a hundred thousand applicants for enrollment, and if they were enrolled in any considerable number, the result would be that every allotment in Oklahoma might have to be canceled and sold in order to make the appropriate division of funds among them.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would say in answer to that, that throughout all this time there has never been over 25,000 applications filed with the department. I do not care if there were 100,000, that would apply. I say that every man who has rights under article 14 of that treaty should be permitted to prove his rights, and if he does prove them, he is entitled to be enrolled, but I do not believe there would be over 4,000 or 5,000 who would actually get on the rolls.

Mr. CARTER. I am willing to discuss the merits of the case with the gentleman any time, but what I want to know now is how the gentleman is going to warrant that there would be no disturbance of land titles and canceling of patents in Oklahoma. If 20,000 applicants were enrolled, they could not be settled with by the undivided fund that the tribes now have on hand. Consequently they might have to go into the cancellation of allotments and the sale of the land already allotted and upon which patents have been issued.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that it is quite an easy matter to say that if 20,000 should be enrolled, it is just as easy to say 100,000; that it is merely conjecture, but I am willing, in order to get my bill passed, to have a clause inserted that it shall not disturb land titles, and that only that amount of funds now on hand and funds to be derived from sale of surface lands and coal lands and other property belonging to the tribe shall be divided.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman must be able to see the danger that he would get into along that line with his bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Upon what basis do I understand the geutleman would pay these people that might be enrolled under his bill? As I understand, he proposes to pay them from the Choctaw and Chickasaw fund regardless of where it comes from. On what basis?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Here is the provision of the bill; section 6 provides:

That there shall be paid to each person who enrolls under the provisions of this act such a sum of money out of the funds of the tribe as will equalize said person with the persons now upon the rolls for all distributions of money made to citizens and members of said joint tribe since 1893: Provided. That those enrolled under the provisions of this act shall not be entitled to nor receive any part of the Choctaw annuity existing under date of September 27, 1830, aforesaid: Provided further. That this act shall not apply to persons born since March 4. 1907 vided further. March 4, 1907.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he would first pay them from funds belonging to the tribes a sum of money equal to double the value of the allotments that were made to the Indians in Oklahoma who are now on the rolls.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Which was $1,020. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then in addition you would permit them to share in the funds the same as other members?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The same as other members.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to say, and I have given a good deal of thought to the subject, if this bill should become a law would it not result finally in a claim being made by these people upon the Federal Government to reimburse them for what they have lost by not being enrolled?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not think so at all.

As the gentleman knows, my bill does not ask at the hands of Congress any amount of money out of the Federal Treasury, only out of the funds of the tribes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think that if it was taken from the tribal founds, as the bill proposes, that the tribes would later on present a claim to the United States to be reimbursed for the amount?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I think if they did it would be an unjust claim and founded on no right.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think there is a question about it that ought to be considered.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Certainly.
Mr. MoGUIRE of Oklahoma. I want to say to the gentleman that I have taken the same position he has taken, that there are many people left off the roll who should have been put on. Is it not a fact that it has been estimated by one Senator, at some time in the past, that the coal mines of these people, undivided tribal property, was worth $4,000,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not recall, but I have seen an estimate varying from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Mr. CARTER. Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire], who always sympathizes with any attempt to loot the Treasury for Oklahoma, if he would be willing to give for these lands out of the Federal Treasury onetenth of the amount that he says the distinguished Senator has mentioned.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman by saying that I hope they are worth four billions of dollars, and my statement was simply that it had been estimated by one distinguished Senator that they were worth four billions of dollars. He and I, however, do not quite agree, although I have never made any estimate, and would not know how to proceed to make an estimate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What difference does it make what they are worth?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. An opinion was rendered by the department relative to my bill, and in part I want to read what the department says:

The report of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes for the year ending June 30, 1907, shows, on page 12, that 24,634 persons applied to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for identification as Mississippi Choctaws under the acts of June 28, 1898, and July 1, 1902; that of this number 2,534 were identified as Mississippi Choctaws, and that of the number so identified 1,072 persons failed to remove to the Indian Territory and submit proof of their removal and settlement within the time required by law.

I wish to refer, in this connection, to my letter of April 22, 1912, relating to the general subject of enrollment, wherein I pointed out under the heading of "Class III" that there were approximately 10 cases where families of Mississippl Chectaws were identified by the department within the last six months prior to March 4, 1907—some of whom were identified within the last few days prior to said date—and that they were consequently deprived of the usual period of time allowed other Mississippl Chectaws under the agreement of 1902 for removal to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country. These 10 families are in a class by themselves, notwithstanding formal adjudication of their rights, they were prevented by the abrupt closing of the enrollment work from taking advantage of the decisions which had been rendered in their favor.

As to the 10 families referred to above, it is unnecessary for me to discuss the matter of their enrollment herein, inasmuch as I have fully reported as to them in said report of April 22, 1912. With respect to the 1,670 persons who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws, but who failed to prove the facts of removal and settlement in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, it may be said that irrespective of their unfortunate condition of poverty and ignorance, that there is grave question whether there is any just ground, legal or equitable, for holding the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations responsible for their failure to comply with the law.

They are convinced that these rolls have excluded from them many worthy cases; and in that connection I think my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] has a bill introduced to put certain individuals on the rolls. Am I not right in that?

Mr. CARTER. No; I have not. I have a bill introduced for the readjudication of certain cases which did not seem to have sufficient adjudication when they were tried, and the gentleman will always find me ready and willing to adjudicate any real rights of bona fide Indians.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes. I think there are a great many in the same fix. They think the roll ought to be reopened, too, and the people entitled to be enrolled properly enrolled. The department speaks of 10 families that were properly identified but kept off the rolls.

The department by that opinion based its objection to my bill on the ground that these people, 1,070 persons, should not be enrolled, because they had not moved from Mississippi into Indian Territory. They overlooked the fact that the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 guaranteed to the Mississippi Choctaw the right to remain in Mississippi, to continue to cultivate his land, and live close to their burial places and accustomed hunting grounds. When the department says that these 1,070 people ought to be kept off the rolls because they had not moved into Indian Territory, I assert that they deny to them the rights guaranteed to them under article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that since the treaty of 1830 was made the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Cherokee trust fund held squarely that if the Indians desired to get the benefits of lands and moneys of the tribe they must remove within the tribe and share the burdens as well as the benefits.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman is exactly right, but in that treaty that the Cherokees based their right upon there was no insertion of a similar article like article 14, which said that any person who would go before an agent of the Government within six months and signify his intention to remain in Mississippi could do so, and it is because of that treaty upon which that case was based, which had no such article as the one I refer to, that the decision in the Cherokee case was rendered. I will ask the gentleman if that is not true?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No. The treaty made with the Cherokees had the same reservation. A number of them did remain and take allotments under practically the same language as the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Do I understand the gentleman to say that under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 that guaranteed to these Mississippi Choctaws the right to remain in Mississippi that they thereby lost their tribal relationship with the tribe by staying in Mississippi under that guarantee?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I say that the Supreme Court of the United States so held, that they abandoned the tribal autonomy, and that until they reassumed it they had no right to participate in land or tribal benefits.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I know the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. On what particular language in the fourteenth article does the gentleman base his contention that Indians may stay in Mississippi and still participate in tribal benefits?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will read it.

Each Choctaw head of a family, being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the State, shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months of the ratification of this treaty, etc.

If that is not a clear reservation, then language is not strong enough to make it plain to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. How about the closing part of that very article which says:

But if they have removed, shall not be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity. What removal is contemplated by that language?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. If they moved out of Mississippi, after signifying their intention of taking advantage of article 14 of the treaty, they then gave up their right to share in the annuity. The annuity was a certain fund which the Choctaw Nation derived from the sale of certain lands. It was very small

Mr. CARTER. But what removal was contemplated by that language-to what country!

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It meant they could not share in the Choctaw annuity if they moved into the Indian Territory; that they then lost their share in the Choctaw annuity, which was a very small amount.

Mr. CARTER. So that the very treaty on which the gentleman bases these rights had in contemplation the fact they must move to Indian Territory before they acquired any rights?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There is nothing that gives that construction at all; and I want to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that prior to the treaty of 1830—and I think the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. Russell], will bear me out, as well as the other members of that subcommittee [Mr. MILLER and Mr. SMITH of New York]—that in the state papers it shows that many conferences were held prior to 1830 between emissaries of the Federal Government and the Choctaw Nation in order to get the whole tribe to move west, and the tribe would never have entered into this treaty had it not been for the insertion of this article that gave them the right to remain there. I think the gentlemen will bear me out in that. All the evidence shows that, and all the history of the tribe reveals that fact. They never would have had the treaty made had it not been for the insertion of that article; and now, when under a solemn pact of a treaty these rights were given to these Indians, Congress passes acts after-wards which say, "You have got to go to the Indian Territory if you want to continue the tribal relations." Ah! Mr. Chairman, the Choctaw Indians in the West were glad indeed to claim their brothers living in Mississippi by virtue of the fourteenth article in 1881 and 1886, when they sought from the United States Government $8,000,000 to go into their treasury for damages done to the Mississippi Choctaws living in Mississippi. The question of tribal relationship was all right then, because they were getting something; but to-day, when these unfortunates demand their rights to share in these funds, they are told, "Get thee away; you are no part of our tribe."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Gentlemen, I wish I could go further into this matter. I know that these people have been grossly mistreated. They have been needlessly neglected at the hands of the Federal Congress. It is not necessary for me to state to you that the Mississippi Choctaw is a part of that great tribe of Indians that never raised a tomahawk against a white man. Always and on all occasions they were at peace with the white people. It is the tribe of Indians that sent 700 of their brave warriors to fight with the whites when the Natchez, that barbarous and warlike tribe along the Mississippi, rose up against the whites; the tribe that sent 30 of its braves to fight under "Mad" Anthony Wayne at Stony Point; that sent thousands of its brave warriors to battle under Jackson at New Orleans; that joined the whites against the Creeks and Seminoles-a tribe that at all times have been the friends of the white people; a tribe that produced that great Indian chief and warrior of whom it is said had neither father nor mother, but that on one occasion the lightning flashed and a bolt struck a tall pine, and from its splintered trunk sprang Pushmataha. And to-day, in speaking of these people of which the Mississippi Choctaw forms a part, no words of mine could better portray the good and true character of these people than the words uttered nearly a hundred years ago by this great and distinguished Indian chief when on his last visit to this Capital City he used these words in speaking to the President of the United States in behalf of his people:

Father—I have been here some time. I have not talked; have been sick. You shall hear me talk to-day. I belong to another district. You have no doubt heard of me; I am Pushmataha.

Father—When in my own country, I often looked towards this Council House, and wanted to come here. I am in trouble. I will tell my distresses. I feel like a small child, not half as high as its father, who comes up to look in his father's face, hanging in the bend of his arm, to tell him his troubles. So, Father, I hang in the bend of your arm and look in your face, and now hear me speak.

Father—When I was in my own country, I heard there were men appointed to talk to us. I would not speak there; I chose to come here and speak in this beloved House. I can boast, and say, and tell the truth that none of my fathers or grandfathers, nor any Choctaw ever drew bows against the United States.

They have always been friendly. We have held the hands of the United States so long that our nails are long, like birds' claws, and there is no danger of their slipping out. My nation has always listened to the applications of the white people. They have given of their lands until it is very small. I came here when a young man to see my father—Jefferson. He told me if ever we got in trouble we must run and tell him. I am come.

And, Mr. Chairman, shortly after he made this appeal in behalf of his people, the Mississippi Choctaws, he was taken sick. He died in this city. His last request was, "When I am gone let the big guns be fired over me." They were fired over him, and in yonder Congressional Cemetery he lies. Upon his tombstone is written these simple words:

Pushmataha, a Choctaw chief, lies here. He was a warrior of great distinction. He was wise in counsel, eloquent in an extraordinary degree, and on all occasions and under all circumstances the white man's friend.

And to-day, even though Pushmataha has long since gone to the happy hunting ground, his spirit still lives and animates the breasts of the scattered remnant of his race in the land of his nativity, and, methinks, if he were present to-day he would appeal to his white father in yonder White House, to his brethren in Oklahoma, to his white friends in this Chamber, and say, "Give to the Mississippi Choctaws the rights guaranteed to them under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830." [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman on the other side wish an hour at this time?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that we have had a rather strenuous day, and it is now 5 o'clock. There is no one here on this side, and I hope the gentleman will move to rise.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is evident there is no quorum present, but I would like very much to close the general debate if possible, so that we can take up the bill tomorrow under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think there will be no extended general debate. I desire a little time myself in general debate, and I know the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE | does. I think there are some others on both sides, possibly, who will desire time. And the gentleman must understand that there was no general debate, or practically none, on the legislative bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can we agree upon some time? I would like very much to do so. When the House meets in the morning we could agree upon an hour on a side, or something of that kind.

Mr. MANN. We may agree; but I think we will want more than an hour on this side.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to be entirely fair to the gentleman in charge of the bill, and to state that what I have to say will be upon the bill, and I think there will be gentlemen on that side of the House who will probably want some time. I hope to be able to call attention to a few things that I think certain people will wish to reply to. And I doubt if it would be wise for an agreement to be made, inasmuch as 45 minutes have been consumed on that side of the House, which was debate, but which did not refer directly to

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman be willing to continue in session half an hour, so that this last speech could be replied to if there is any desire to do it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not object to that if they want to use some time on that side, but I do not care to go on this evening.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] whether or not he desires to reply to any remarks that have been made here this evening?

Mr. CARTER. I may want 20 or 30 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire that the gentleman would reply at the present time. I would like to have you go ahead to-night.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman wish to reply to-night?

Mr. CARTER. I would like to do it to-morrow. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ANNA FINK.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the following privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 737 (H. Rept. 1273)

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Anna Fink, widow of James Fink, deceased, late messenger in the House of Representatives, an amount equal to six months of his salary as such messenger, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to pay the funeral expenses of said James Fink.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Fink was a messenger to the Doorkeeper. He died during the summer, and this is the usual allowance that is made for the widow of an employee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution

The resolution was agreed to.

FOLDING OF SPEECHES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also offer another privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 723 (H. Rept. 1272).

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend the sum of $2,000 for folding speeches, at the rate of not exceeding $1 per thousand, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr Speaker, may I ask what is the occasion

Mr. LLOYD. We need this money for the folding of speeches that may be delivered hereafter. The fund is exhausted for that particular purpose.

Mr. MANN. All of the appropriation for that purpose was used?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a memorial, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for just one minute while I explain its scope.

There was held at Philadelphia last week a very large gathering of prominent educators from different sections of the country to consider the question of industrial education. It was held under the auspices of the National Society for the Promo-tion of Industrial Education. Their gathering lasted for two or three days, and I understand the principal feature of the meeting of the national society was the discussion of Federal aid for industrial education. They adopted resolutions by unanimous consent and have sent them to me for introduction into the Senate as a memorial.

In view of the great prominence of the organization and the fact that the resolutions are very brief, I ask that they be read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

(Resolutions passed by the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education at its annual banquet in the city of Philadelphia on the evening of December 5, 1912.)

Industrial Education at its annual banquet in the city of Philadelphia on the evening of December 5, 1912.)

The National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, in annual convention at Philadelphia, facing the great need of widespread vocational education for this country, recognizing that immediate steps must be taken in each of the States to begin this work in an effective way, and believing that Federal aid and encouragement are necessary in order to induce the States to take up the work in such a way that our national prosperity and the welfare of our workers may be continued and assured, do hereby resolve and affirm:

That this need is so pressing and the exigencies of the industrial situation are so great as to demand the passage of Senate bill No. 3, known as the Page bill, by the present Congress.

This measure is fully comprehensive. It provides for the three great elements in the development of the country—the agricultural worker, who is to make the soil yield more abundantly: the industrial worker, who is to make the soil yield more abundantly: the industrial worker, who is the marter intelligence and skill is to reduce waste and increase productive efficiency; and the home maker, who is the supreme conserver of American civilization.

The Page bill supplements the Morrill Act, which has done so much for the profession of engineering and for the higher training in agriculture by encouraging through national grants the vocational training of those who toil in the home and in the trades and industries as well as on the farm.

The Page bill extends the liberality of the Government, which has been displayed so wisely in the training of the mature farmer, to the preparation of men and women, boys and girls, to meet the varied needs of productive employments in towns and cities as well as in the rural districts.

Therefore we petition the honorable Senate of the United States to give immediate and favorable consideration to said Senate bill No. 3.

Therefore we petition the honorable Senate of the United States to give immediate and favorable consideration to said Senate bill No. 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported, the resolutions will lie on the table.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR RAYNER.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 305, submitted by Mr. Smith of Maryland on the 3d instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator Isidor RAYNER from the State of Maryland, vouchers for the same to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

AMELIA WISSMAN.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 399, submitted by Mr. Cullom on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Amelia Wissman, mother of Franklin W. Wissman, late a skilled laborer in the Senate library, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

MARY P. PIERCE.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 397, submitted by Mr. Smith of Michigan on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary P. Pierce, widow of Edwin S. Pierce, late a skilled laborer in the Senate document room, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

MAMIE ELSIE.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 398, submitted by himself on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mamie Elsie, widow of Alfred Elsie, late a laborer of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. ROOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 408), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States acknowledges with grateful appreciation the sympathy of the Senate of Brazil in the loss suffered by the American Government and people in the lamented death of Vice President Sherman; and it begs the Senate of Brazil to accept the assurance of its most respectful consideration and friendship.

The Secretary is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the first secretary of the Senate of Brazil.

CAUSES OF THE RISE IN PRICES (S. DOC. NO. 980).

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed as a Senate document a short article by J. A. Hobson, taken from the Contemporary Review, on the causes of the rise in prices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

LAND AT HELENA, ARK.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3436) "granting to Phillips County, Ark., certain lots in the city of Helena for a site for a county courthouse," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

REED SMOOT, KNUTE NELSON, MARK A. SMITH, Managers on the part of the Senate. Jos. T. ROBINSON, JAMES M. GRAHAM, ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask to take up House concurrent resolution No. 66, which came over yesterday, relative to the Christmas holiday recess

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, morning business is closed. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration House concurrent resolution No. 66, coming over from the other House, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution; and there being no objection, it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, 1912, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock m. on Thursday, January 2, 1913.

HISTORY OF SENATE DESKS. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey and Mr. CRAWFORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg the attention of the Senate for a moment. I find on my desk an amendment submitted by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

Lodge], which reads as follows: The Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to compile a history of the desks in the Senate Chamber, and the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to meet the cost of appropriate engraved plates for each desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would ask the Senator from New Jersey if he rises to any resolution or does he desire that a resolution be laid before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. That is a proposed amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is a proposed amendment.

I desire simply to speak to the amendment, if it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what matter does the Senator desire to address himself? The Senate has not taken up any bill

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. LODGE. This is not a resolution; this is an amendment to the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask the privilege, then, to speak to the amendment that is proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks the privilege of addressing the Senate upon the matter which he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears which he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in speaking to the amendment that I have read, I beg to say that I have reied to picture in my mind the profound interest future generations. will take in reading the marvelous history of this great country, the bloody contest that was waged for liberty, and the sufferings and privations of our fathers. They will read of the splendid bravery of Mad Anthony Wayne; they will be able to fairly hear the clarion voice of Capt. Lawrence crying "Don't give up the ship"; they will also read with breathless interest of the bravery of Mollie Pitcher at the Battle of Monmouth; they will also read of the construction of this most beautiful Capitol and the recitals of history that the corner stone was laid by the Father of his Country, the immortal George Wash-With what thrilling emotions they will read of our internecine strife, and they also will read with great satisfaction of the reconciliation and union forever of all the sections of our beloved country.

But, Mr. President, as great as are the subjects I have above cited, how weak and paltry they will seem in comparison to the thrill that will come to the future reader of history, when he comes to the chapter, "History of the desks and cuspidors of the Senate of the United States." [Laughter.] Oh, that we might have but a tracing to-day of the desks of the ancient Greeks and Romans! What stories they would tell of that age and time! How derelict were their historians!

If we could only know whether the mighty Demosthenes stood or sat while delivering those superb orations, whether his desk was made of olive wood, cedar, or stone, how valuable it would be! Oh, that a Lodge might have lived in that day!

[Laughter.]
But the "History of the desks in the Senate of the United States!" That chapter will tell of heel prints that will reflect the artistic genius of the bootmaker from the North, the South, the East, and the West of our great country. [Laughter.] Then, too, I am informed by the carpenter of the Capitol of a fact that I feel is quite generally unknown, a fact which will show the advance of our civilization; for in the early days of our country, I am told, the artistic genius of the occupant was made apparent through jack-knife designs carved upon his desk. This is now all changed. Their surface to-day reflects the cabinetmakers' art, the polish, the luster of the cultivated period in which we live. Truly, it is great to contemplate.

But seriously, Mr. President, with bread and butter so high in price to the toiler and the breadwinner, I must vote "No" on the amendment proposed by the distinguished and cultivated Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I introduced the amendment which has awakened the delightful humor of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], I think I ought to say a word in explanation.

The proposition of the amendment was to do what some Senators have done of their own accord. The desk directly in front of me has its history. The design is to put a little plate on the different desks giving a list of those who had occupied them. Many of these desks were in use in the old Senate Chamber, which is now occupied by the Supreme Court of the United It has seemed desirable to many Senators-in fact the idea did not originate with me, but with our late colleague, Senator Heyburn, of Idaho-that it would be a very interesting thing to have a plate on each desk showing who its occupants had been. That was the harmless purpose of this amendment.

It may not be of the slightest interest to future generations to know that a certain desk was occupied by me or by the Senator from New Jersey, but I think it will be of some interest to future generations if a memorial is kept of the desks that were occupied by men like Webster, Clay, and Calhoun. It is only to preserve those historical memorials, which are always worth preserving if we have a reverence for the history of our country, that this suggestion of a little plate for each desk was brought to me, and I took great pleasure in introducing the amendment upon which the Committee on Appropriations will take action at the proper time.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call up the concurrent resolution reported on yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] from the Committee on the Library, and to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) was read, con-

The concurrent resolution (8. Con. Res. 52) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln Memorial, determined upon and recommended to Congress December 4, 1912, by the commission created by the act entitled "An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln," approved February 9, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, approved.

Mr. CULLOM subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the report submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] in connection with the Lincoln Memorial be printed in the RECORD. It is very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report, submitted by Mr. Root on the 12th instant, is as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to which was referred the message of the President of December 5, 1912, transmitting a report of the Lincoln Memorial Commission, have considered and return herewith the message and report, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

the message and report, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln Memorial determined upon and recommended to Congress December 4, 1912, by the commission created by the act entitled 'An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, 'approved February 9, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, approved."

The act of February 9, 1911, provided for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington in memory of Abraham Lincoln, and created a commission to determine upon a location and design, subject to the approval of Congress.

The commission now reports that it has determined upon a location on the public land of the United States on the banks of the Potomac; and upon a design, photographs of which are transmitted.

The object of the proposed resolution is to accept this decision.

The present members of the commission are: President TAFT, Senator CLLLOM of Illinois, Senator Weymore of Rhode Island, Senator Martin of Virginia, Speaker CLARK, Representative CANNON of Illinois, Representative McCall of Massachusetts.

It appears that the commission held 16 meetings and fully considered numerous suggested or possible locations and various designs, and that, as directed by the statutes, it called for and received advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, which, after exhaustive study, agrees with the conclusion now reached.

The report says:

"The commission after a careful examination and discussion of the Commission of Fine Aris, which, after exhaustive study, agrees with the conclusion now reached.

The report says:

"The report says:

"The commission after a careful examination and discussion of the design presented by Mr. Bacon has adopted it unanimously and recommends that Congress approve the construction of the memorial upon the selected site in Potomac Park in acordance with the plans and designs of Mr. Bacon."

All the members of the commission join in the report, Acceptance of this decision will bring performance of the long delayed and neglected duty to creek a monument to Abraham Lincoln in this city.

and neglected duty to erect a monument to Abraham Lincoln in this city.

The failure to bring to success any of the repeated attempts to secure such a monument is not altogether creditable.

On the 29th of March, 1869, Congress incorporated a "Lincoln Monument Association," of which the Treasurer of the United States was treasurer. Some money was raised, plans and designs were procured, but the enterprise languished, the chief actors passed away, and an insignificant sum remains in the Treasury of the United States.

On the 28th of June, 1902, Congress created a commission to secure plans and designs for such a monument, but that commission never agreed and never reported.

In the meantime and before the present act was passed many bills for a monument were from time to time introduced in Congress. Some of them died in committee and some were reported and never acted upon.

At last we have a definite conclusion, joined in after great consideration by eminent representatives of both Houses of Congress, by the Executive, and by the trained and experienced advisers whom they were directed by law to consult.

It has long been the policy of our Government to set up in the Capital City suitable memorials to the great men whom the Nation holds in honor.

A memorial to Grant is nearly completed. We already have statues

A memorial to Grant is nearly completed. We already have statues of Sherman, Sheridan, Logan, Thomas, McPherson, McClellan, Hancock, Rawlins, Du Pont, and Farragut of the Civil War period.

Appropriations have passed the Senate for Jefferson and Hamilton memorials. Washington, Marshall, La Fayette, Nathanael Greene, Rochambeau. Von Steuben, Kosciuszko, Pulaski, Paul Jones, Jackson, Scott, and Webster of earlier periods are commemorated.

For Lincoln alone our gratitude and devotion have seemed too weak to overcome small differences of opinion and taste. There must come an end some time to discussion and a yielding of individual preference to the general judgment if there is ever to be action. It is not tolerable that the remaining survivors of the generation that knew Lincoln should pass away and leave no memorial of their reverence and love for him in the city which was the scene of his service and sacrifice.

To reject the conclusions of this commission apparently would prevent the erection of any Lincoln monument whatever.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 19115.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, when the Senate discontinued the consideration of this bill yesterday the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to incorporate into the bill an item in favor of the estate of Charles Backman to refund certain taxes paid upon distilled spirits was before the Senate, and I had not concluded my remarks in relation to it. I desire to add to what was said yesterday that I have examined two or three cases cited in the brief which was supplied to the Senator from New York by the attorney as justification for the adoption of this amendment, and they have absolutely no bearing upon the question whatever. case is cited from Supreme Court of the United States Reports 153, on page 457, and is a case which involves nothing more nor less than the right to recover interest where the principal allowed was not at all in dispute. One other case cited from the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania has absolutely nothing to do with the state of facts presented here. It was a case that involved the recovery of interest where the allowance of the principal was not at all in dispute.

As I said yesterday, after the new law was passed the offi-cers of the Government continued for a period to allow a rebate or reduction in taxes upon an estimate made as to the amount of liquors which might have leaked or evaporated while in warehouse. The question of their right to do that was submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, and in an opinion rendered by him he held that under that new law they should collect the entire tax without this reduction. It was after an order of the Treasury Department, based upon this decision of the Attorney General, had gone into effect that tender was made and this claim arose.

The Ridgway case and the group of claims for which appropriation was made in 1886 was after the Court of Claims had decided against Ridgway instead of deciding in his favor. That was in 1886, and no bill was introduced for the relief of this claimant until 1892, nearly a quarter of a century after the claim arose, if it arose at all.

Appended to the papers handed me is a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Curtis, to the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, dated August 10, 1912. That was after the report on this bill had been made. This letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in some respects is a rather remarkable communication. It was not called for by the Committee on Claims; it was not written because of any inquiry or doubt that existed in the minds of the members of that committee, but the attorney for this claimant goes to the clerk of the Committee on Claims and suggests to him to write a letter to the Treasury Department asking for certain infor-In response to that letter comes this letter, which undertakes to say that the question has been passed upon repeatedly, similar claims allowed, favorable reports made, and I have no personal knowledge upon the subject, but I doubt if the head of the great Treasury Department, with knowledge, wrote this letter. My own suspicion is that the letter which the attorney requested the clerk of the Committee on Claims to write, drew it out, and that some clerk in the Treasury Department probably wrote it and put it on the desk of the Assistant Secretary and secured his signature to it, because apparently no examination was made there of the real facts in this case; that there was a decision by the Attorney General of the United States that the law of 1868 prevented the rebate of these taxes; that a decision had been rendered by the Court of Claims against Ridgway instead of for him; that no bill for the relief of this claimant had been offered in Congress until practically a quarter of century after the cause of action arose; that the House neglected to put it in the bill and the Senate committee rejected it. I submit that under the statement of fact in the record the claim should be rejected.

I call for a vote on the amendment, and ask that the committee be sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA in the chair). The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I do not so understand it. Is it not the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to incorporate in this bill the item in favor of the estate of Backman for the sum of $5,000? The Senator from Massachusetts gave way, saying his amendment would have to lie over until to-day because the amendment which I proposed to it would have to be printed. On that account he asked to have it go over, and in the meantime the Senator from New York, with the knowledge of the Senator from Massachusetts, presented his amendment. I will ask the Senator from New York if that is not his recollection.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is a correct statement of what transpired yesterday.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from New York says it is correct statement.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I may be permitted to say an additional word in reference to this amendment.

Previous to April 14, 1869, a statute was passed preventing the internal-revenue officers from making any allowance for leakage when spirits were taken out of bond. Under the statute of 1868 that rule was to become operative on the 14th of March, 1869.

This claim went before the Court of Claims and was tried, and the court made certain findings, which must now be accepted as the fact. Among these facts it is stated that some few weeks previous to the 14th of April, 1869, the owner of the spirits applied to withdraw them from bond, but owing to the internal-revenue officers not having the necessary revenue stamps there was a delay of a few weeks, which took the actual delivery of the liquors from bond over the date in question, namely, the 14th of April.

As I say, after the 14th of April, 1869, no allowance was to be made for leakage. The entire amount paid by Backman, the owner of the liquor, was about $44,000. Subsequently it was disclosed that if he had been allowed for the leakage he should have had about $5,000 returned to him.

Now, undoubtedly the law of 1868 prevented any allowance for leakage after the 14th of April, 1869, and the only equities, indeed the equity that is presented in this claim, is that the delay which brought the delivery of the liquor in question over the 14th of April, 1869, was caused by the internal-revenue officers being unable to furnish the revenue stamps when they were asked for about two weeks before the 14th of April, 1869.

Now, reference has been made to authorities, and perhaps they may be well disregarded, because this entire controversy is found in the single circumstance which I now present to the Senate—that the delay which brought the delivery of this liquor beyond the 14th of April, 1869, was caused by the internal-revenue officers' inability to furnish the necessary revenue stamps, aggregating $45,000, when the owner of the liquor presented himself before the revenue officers and asked for the

It is true that no effort was made to secure the refund of this five thousand and odd dollars for many years; perhaps 20 or 25 years; and then from time to time afterwards bills were introduced similar to this proposed amendment. I remember myself 20, surely 18, years ago the committee in the House approved the same, and I am informed that in the last Congess the Committee on Claims approved this claim. That is offered as explanation why there was no appearance before the committee during this Congress. I assume the statement I make is accurate-it was conveyed to me by representatives of the claimant-that at the last Congress the Committee on Claims approved this bill.

But without regard to what has been done in the past, the naked and single question is, considering the fact that the claimant would not have been charged this $5,000 if the internal-revenue officers had had the stamps available when the owner of the liquor presented himself, is it fair or just, view of those circumstances, that this claimant should have his claim judged by the new rule which became operative on the 14th of April, 1860? That is the sole question with respect to the merits of this claim.

Now, the claimants think it a great injustice that they should be subjected to a rule which was not in force when the owner of the liquor made a demand for the necessary revenue stamps and had the money, $44,000 or $45,000, ready for that purpose. I therefore ask that the bill as reported by the Committee on Claims be amended by the insertion of this provision giving to the executor of the estate in question the sum of $5,335.71.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, replying to the Senator from New York, I frankly admit that his statement is correct as to these parties making application to the internal-revenue office for the release of these spirits before April 14, 1860, and that they were not delivered at that time because of the fact that the revenue officers did not have the revenue stamps. I admit that frankly, because, as I recollect, there is a finding from the Court of Claims to that effect. But—and I think it is entirely unintentional, of course-the Senator from New York is in error in another statement which he made, and that was that the law of 1868 did not go into effect until April 14, 1860. The law of 1868 went into effect upon its approval and was the law at the time the internal-revenue officers did not release his liquor because he did not have the revenue stamps

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. There is no dispute between the Senator from South Dakota and myself with respect to the last statement. Of course the statute of 1868 went into effect immediately upon its enactment, but the procedure of the department under that statute was changed on the 14th of April, 1869; and under the statute and previous to the 14th of April, 1869, internal-revenue officers understood that they had the right to make an allowance for leakage or evaporation when liquors were taken from bond. I believe we are in accord on that proposition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are in absolute agreement with the statement that has been made by the Senator.

Mr. O'GORMAN. May I be permitted to make an additional statement at this time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.
Mr. O'GORMAN. I assume, in view of the conceded fact, that Congress would not hesitate a moment to allow the relief requested under the facts in the case if there had been a prompt and diligent and early effort to secure the necessary legislation. It is a conceded fact, I believe—the Senator from South Dakota has stated it, and I believe it is accurate—that no attempt was made to secure remedial legislation regarding this claim until 23 or 25 years afterwards. I may say in passing that I have no sympathy with stale claims, and yet there may be a case now and then when a suitable or satisfactory excuse may be offered with respect to the delay.

That brings me to the suggestion that the only reason which would justify this body refusing the desired relief is that the parties slept on their rights during this long period. Of course if you think that is a sufficient reason to withhold the relief you will support the attitude of the chairman of the Claims Committee. If you do not think it a sufficient reason, then, on the merits, eliminating the suggestion as to delay, I can conceive of no good reason why the claimant should not get what he asks for when it is conceded—as it has just been conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Claims—that the circumstance which brought the delivery of this liquor up to the 14th of April, 1869, was the inability of the revenue officers to furnish the necessary revenue stamps when the demand was made upon them two or three weeks before.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, upon the merits of the case I can not agree with the Senator from New York, and I desire to say that he has been eminently fair and just in his attitude toward the proper consideration of claims of this character.

But a simple statement shows this: A law had been passed in July, 1868, which made it absolutely obligatory on the part of this claimant to pay the whole $45,000 taxes instead of $40,000 taxes; and that law went into effect in July, 1868. The Treasury Department misconstrued that law or failed up until April, 1869, to enforce it at the time it became the law binding upon internal-revenue officers.

Then the question is whether the Government did not have a right to come back upon these men who had escaped paying what they ought to have paid and compel them to pay the balance. It does not make the transaction lawful because the Treasury Department absolutely failed to enforce a law which law at the time and which required the payment of the $45,000 taxes.

Now, when this man went over to get his spirits out of the warehouse, he might have settled, because the officers of the Preasury Department were not enforcing the law, for $5,000 less than he actually did; but how does the fact that, because of the mere circumstances that he could not get his revenue stamps at that time and had to come back on the 14th of Aprilthe Attorney General in the meantime having given his opinion that these men were liable for all these taxes without any reduction and the Treasury Department having in the meantime promulgated this order that after April 14, 1869, they must pay the whole amount—give him any right to ask that this money be taken out of the Treasury of the United States and paid to him when it was just as unlawful to allow for leakage before April 14, 1869, as it was after April 14, 1869? Because of the mere incident that he might have obtained it wrongfully before the 14th of April, if the officers had had the revenue stamps by which to aid him to get it wrongfully does not relieve him, because he would have been violating absolutely the law which went into effect in July, 1868, previous. Now, it seems to me that is absolutely logical.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do; certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Is it not the fact that allowance was made for leakage and evaporation in every barrel of liquor taken from bond between the date of the enactment of the 1868 statute and the 14th day of April, 1869?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That I do not know, but to a certain Mr. CRAWFORD. That I do not know, but to a certain extent it was done. However, the Attorney General, when the statute was referred to him, decided that it was done unlawfully and against the statute.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And from that time on there was a change in the procedure observed by the internal-revenue officers?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; that is true; and when this man—

Mr. O'GORMAN. Is it not a fact, may I be permitted to ask the Senator from South Dakota-

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly. Mr. O'GORMAN. Is it not a fact that if two weeks before the 14th of April, 1869, the internal-revenue officers had had the revenue stamps on hand, the tax imposed upon this claimant would have been $5,000 less than he actually paid?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not lawfully; but he would have succeeded under the practice that had been followed, in violation of this statute, in getting $5,000 that did not belong to him and which belonged to the Government, and to which procedure the Attorney General put a stop by his construction of this statute and which the department enforced on and after April 14 by its order.

Now, there can not be any escape from that. These men were getting a reduction in violation of the statute before that time, a reduction to which they were not entitled; and because the officers were violating this statute and giving these reductions in clear violation of the statute before that time, and this man did not happen to have the good luck to get what did not belong to him before that time, because the officers did not have the revenue stamps, does it make it just for him to get that exemption, when the statute did not give it to him because he did not have the good fortune to find the internal-revenue officers in possession of the revenue stamps, so that they could violate the statute before April 14, 1869?

There is no escape from that, Mr. President, and I ask the Senate to reject the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 268, after line 13, insert:

To Dean Sage, executor of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, the sum of $5,335.71.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I demand the yeas and nays. First, I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask the Chair to put the vote again with reference to the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New York

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be read.

The Secretary. On page 268, after line 13, in the New York items, insert:

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the question be put again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-LANDS] desired to present an amendment to the bill, and if he is ready to be heard now I should like very much to have it taken up.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Nevada is not in his

Mr. CRAWFORD. He is in the Chamber.

I have a very trifling amendment which Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senate will agree to without objection, if the Senator will permit me to offer it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will take the liberty of calling the Senator's attention to the subhead on page 259:

Claims of officers of the United States Army for additional pay, commonly known as "longevity claims," so as to include the period of cadet service in the United States Military Academy at West Point.

I would move to amend that by adding "and enlisted service in the Regular Army." There are two claims—

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment on page 259, line 11, to strike out the period and insert the words "and enlisted Service in the Regular Army."

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no objection to that amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 259, in the subheading, after the words "West Point," in line 11, insert "and enlisted service in the Regular Army."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. While we are under that head, in behalf of the committee I offer an amendment. It is a longevity claim that came to the committee afterwards and is exactly like the others. I ask that it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On page 266, after line 5, insert the words "North Carolina" and the following:

To Charles J. Allen, of Buncombe County, $2,353.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. If there are no other amendments, Mr. Presidents, I ask that we return to the amendment which I offered yesterday covering the French spoliation claims, which was temporarily laid aside. It has been read. The Senator from South Dakota has offered an amendment to it, which I ask to have read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In this connection I wish to say that I am a little disappointed in the manner in which my proposed amendment was printed. It does not show where the changes were made, so that one can not tell from an examination of the amendment where it made reductions and what they were, and where it would strike out names what they were. I will ask to have my amendment to the amendment reprinted in that way, because it will be quite necessary, whatever disposition is made now of this matter, to have the record so that it will be easily understood.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad the Senator is going to do that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the request of the Senator from South Dakota will be complied with and the amendment will be reprinted as suggested.

It will be reprinted as suggested by the Senator from South Dakota so as to show the precise changes made by his amendment in the one I offered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As introduced a line was drawn through the part stricken out and it had the amounts written out instead of giving them in figures. As presented here it is quite different in its appearance from what I supposed it would be.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to suggest one correction which I think ought to be made at the beginning. It says "strike out all after line 21, page 2." It strikes out merely the descriptive lines on page 2 of the amendment; it strikes out lines 20 and 21, which read:

On the vessel schooner Hetty, William Manson, master, namely.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then lines 20 and 21 should not be

Mr. LODGE. They should not be stricken out. That is merely descriptive.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The amendment should begin with line 20.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. Mr. CRAWFORD. That was an inadvertence. rect. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to it.
Mr. LODGE. If we have printed in that way my amendment with the changes shown as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, then we shall know exactly what we are dealing with. In that case, Mr. President, I shall ask that the amendment go over until to-morrow when we can have a new print.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, we have now, with the exception of the French spollation claims, the amendment the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] proposed, and one which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] has submitted. With those exceptions we have disposed of all the amendments which have been presented. I understand there are a few other amendments, but I do not understand that they involve large amounts.

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose the Senator refers to the amendments I have been talking to him about. I have one or two very simple matters that I should like to submit to the Senator before I even offer them on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well, Mr. President. I called attention to that simply to get the situation before the Senate as to the bill. It seems to me that we have reached a point where we might agree upon a time to vote upon it. I am anxious that the bill shall be disposed of by the Senate before the holiday recess. If an agreement could be made as to some day when we might vote upon it before the holiday recess, I should like very much to have that done.

Mr. LODGE. I am ready to agree, as far as I am concerned, being interested in the French spoliation claims amendment. I do not desire to enter into a protracted debate on the French spoliation claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I know. The Senator has made that statement to me.

Mr. LODGE. The matter has been discussed here many times, and I think the Senate understands the amendment perfectly. Of course, if the amendment is to be attacked elaborately, it will be necessary for me to make some suitable reply and bring forward the facts; but I should be very glad if we could make an arrangement by which we could escape a protracted debate on that amendment, which might lead to a great deal of debate, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not any disposition to thrash all that over again. I will ask unanimous consent that we agree to vote upon the bill and all amendments at the close of the morning business next Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that an agreement be reached to vote upon the pending measure and all amendments on next Thursday at the close of the routine morning business. there objection?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask for information as to the French spoliation claims. Is that the particular feature upon which the bill is asked to go over with the amendment pending?

Mr. LODGE. That amendment is now pending, and it is going over simply to have a print made of the amendment to it offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So that all amendments pertaining to it will come up to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose we shall dispose of the amendment before Thursday.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hope that we shall dispose of all amendments in the meantime; that we will get them out of the way as fast as we can and not have them all dumped on us at that time. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] has an amendment. I hope we may be able to take that up yet this morning. I ask unanimous consent that we vote upon the pending amendment, all amendments offered, and on the bill, without debate, at the close of the routine morning business next Thursday. I do not know what day of the month it is.

Mr. LODGE. The 19th.
Mr. CRAWFORD. The 19th.
Mr. PENROSE. I would suggest to the Senator whether it would not be safer to fix the time at 1 o'clock. The morning business might be prolonged.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the debate shall close at 1 o'clock and then the bill and all amendments be voted upon.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well, I will put it that way—that all debate shall close and we shall vote on the bill and all amendments at 1 o'clock on Thursday, the 19th.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall object to that. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do I understand that all amendments agreed upon to this bill by the Senate will go into conference, and whatever amendments are put into it will have to go to conference for final settlement? After all the amendments are added by the Senate it will go to conference?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is objection, so that I abandon the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to have the Senator from Alabama present his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am not prepared to go on with my amendment this morning. I will take it up to-morrow immediately after the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the Senator ready to go on with his amendment proposing to incorporate the French spoliation

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly ready to go on, but the Senator from South Dakota has offered a series of amendments to that amendment, and I should like to see these. I imagine that I shall accept them without further debate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no disposition to take up the time of the Senate in presenting those amendments if it can be avoided. The Senator from Alabama is not ready with his amendment now, I understand.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am not ready now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the Senator from Nevada in the Chamber:

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from South Dakota expects to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] even if the amendments which he has offered to the amendment are

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, no; I simply offer the amendments to the amendment to be acted on by the Senate. Of course, my personal attitude toward the French spoliation claims, except that I object to allowing certain insurance premiums and freight earnings as they are involved, is one of favor, but I am standing with the Committee on Claims. That committee, of which I am a part, considered this whole question and decided that it was inadvisable, on account of the sharp differences there, to incorporate the French spoliation claims in this bill; and, of course, I shall be loyal to the attitude taken by the majority of the committee. That, however, is neither here nor there. I am anxious to have some action taken by the Senate for or against the French spoliation claims amendment, so that we can dispose of it. The Senate will have to determine, of course, in its own way how long we shall discuss it, but I am anxious to get it up, with the idea of having action taken one way or the

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course, if the ground is to be taken that we are not to be allowed to vote on the bill if the French spoliation claims are added, we can reach no agreement to vote on the bill.

The pending amendment is that relating to the French spoliation claims, and I ask for the reading of the amendments offered to that amendment by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What was the Senator's request?

Mr. LODGE. I want to have the Senator's amendment to my amendment read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, just a moment, please.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator is going to take that ground—Mr. CRAWFORD. Would it be possible to arrive at an agreement as to when we shall vote on the French spoliation claims amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Not without an agreement to vote on the bill. Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I wanted to find out what was the disposition of the Senator in regard to that.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after line 21. page 2, of said amendment and all of pages 3 to 82, both inclusive, and all of page 83 down to line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. LODGE. The hour of 1.30 having arrived, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 53 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeach-

The Secretary read the Journal of Thursday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an error in the record of yesterday's proceedings on page 505. It is quite obvious, I think, but I would like to have it corrected. It is a remark made by me.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. On what page?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On page 505, about one-third of the way down. It reads:

I do not object to that unless it is proposed in some way to connect Judge Archbald with it or to show that he had knowledge of it.

Of course the "not" should not be there. It should read "I do object."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, according to the understanding yesterday a legal proposition which was pre-sented yesterday to the Chair was to be argued this morning, but I have conferred with my associate managers and also with counsel for the respondent, and we desire to depart from that arrangement for a brief time in order that we may examine at this time Commissioner Meyer, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who has some public business that requires him to leave the city, I believe, to-day or to-morrow. I there-fore at this time call Commissioner B. H. Meyer as the next

TESTIMONY OF B. H. MEYER.

B. H. Meyer, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) You are one of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, are you?-A. I am; yes, sir.

Q. Was there a case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, of which you are a member, known as the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad in March and April, 1911?-A. There was.

Q. Will you please state, as briefly as you can, what that matter was?—A. The complaint of the Marian Coal Co. alleged unreasonable rates on the carriage of anthracite coal from a point on the Lackawanna near Scranton, known as Taylor, I believe, to tidewater; and the prayer was for a reduction of the existing rate to a figure given in the complaint. I believe it was 95 cents for the larger sizes and lower figures for the smaller sizes.

Q. Up to March and April, 1911, how far had this proceeding progressed before the commission of which you are a member? A. The greater part of the testimony had been submitted; some statistical exhibits were still to be introduced, and supplementary hearings had, if necessary.

Q. Please state to the Senate if Mr. W. P. Boland called upon you while that matter was before your commission; and if so, where and when .- A. Mr. Boland had appeared as a witness during the course of the hearings, but he called upon me in my office on the morning of January 5, 1912. My confidential clerk, Mr. Cockrell, advised me on that morning that Mr. Boland was in the outer office and desired to see me. I requested Mr. Cockrell to take care of Mr. Boland, if possible, because I soon had to go to a hearing. Mr. Cockrell returned in a few moments and advised me that Mr. Boland had a matter which, according to his view, he could state only to the commissioner.

Q. I wish you would state the whole matter in narrative form. We examined you before the House Judiciary Committee and you know we called for a statement from you in regard to it. Now, I wish you would state what happened between you and Boland, and the whole transaction and what you did after Boland had told you what he desired to tell you.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I would like to know what is supposed to be the relevancy of the conversations that took place between Mr. W. P. Boland and the commissioner here. There is one object that I can see, and if that is the object, of course, we make no objection. On the cross-examination of W. P. Boland, for the purpose of establishing his bias and his hostility against Judge Archbald, I inquired of him whether he had not made certain statements which he had If it is proposed to contradict him about that, I have no objection. If it is for any other purpose, I object to it as being wholly irrelevant here.

Mr. Boland was here. There was a great deal that took place, as I understand, between W. P. Boland and the commissioner and Mr. Cockrell and the Attorney General, and so far as any such thing is proposed to be introduced to contradict or enlighten what has been brought out here by W. P. Boland, we do not object, but for any other purpose we do object.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I do not apprehend there will be any serious objection, or any objection at all, to this testimony when I state the purpose.

The counsel for the respondent, in the latter part of his remarks, states one of the reasons why we think this testimony is admissible; and that is for the purpose of showing all that W. P. Boland had to do with the inception of this matter of the inquiry into the conduct of Judge Archbald.

We want to introduce it for a further purpose, Mr. President. As you will recall, several times during the trial the counsel for the respondent has been heard to charge a conspiracy against Mr. W. P. Boland in the matter of inaugurating these proceedings against Judge Archbald. We want to tell all that Mr. Boland did in that matter. We want to show that, while Mr. Boland may have called to the attention of the commissioner contains allowed an incomplete on the part of Judge Archbald, the certain alleged misconduct on the part of Judge Archbald, the inauguration of this proceeding was actually not had by Mr. Boland. We desire to offer it to rebut the repeated statement of the counsel for the respondent that Boland had inaugurated a conspiracy against the judge, and we want to show how the transaction originated and all about it.

This is the witness to whom Boland made his first complaint. and we want to show, then, the history of it and how it got to the President and how it got to the Attorney General, and how, as the record shows, it finally came to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. We want to show, in other words, that everything that has been done in this case was done in a proper way, and we think it is due not only to Boland, but is due to the Senate, to know all about it, in view of the oftrepeated charges made by respondent's counsel that this is a conspiracy to ruin Judge Archbald.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly the manager has not understood me to charge that there was any conspiracy on the part of Mr. Meyer, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I do not say you have made such a charge, but you charged Mr. Boland with having originated a conspiracy to do it, and we want to show what the facts are and then let the Senate judge whether it was improper and whether or not it is conspiracy, or whether it is a proper proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that possibly it might avoid opening the doors to a too wide inquiry if the manager would limit the testimony of the witness, for the present at least, to what the Interstate Commerce Commission, or members of it, did for the purpose of instituting this proceeding.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is all I was going to elicit from this witness

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And not testimony as to the conversation between the witness and Boland.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Yes, sir. This is a very intelligent witness, as the Chair knows, and he having been examined before, I take it he will confine himself strictly to what he as a member of the commission did and what he and his associates

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the manager for the present omit the question as to what was said to him by Mr. Boland; confining it to simply the steps the commissioners saw proper to take upon the information they re-

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I then ask him where he got the information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He can state the information was received from such a person without going into it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Very well. Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) You received from W. P. Boland at one time some information that he alleged against Judge Archbald, did you?-A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. January 5, 1912. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Now, the Chair holds that I may not ask the witness what Boland told him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be better to have him state what action was taken in consequence of the information received.

Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) Then, Mr. Meyer, in your own way, please state in narrative form what you did and what the commissioners did, giving the time, place, and circumstances fully and in as much detail as you can, and at the same time as briefly as possible.—A. Having seen certain photographs which appeared to me to suggest something and to tell something extremely serious, I communicated that feeling to Judge Clements, who was chairman of the commission at that time. At my request Judge Clements met Mr. Boland in my office on the following morning. Both of us together looked at these photographs and again listened to Mr. Boland's explanation. Both of us had to attend sessions of the commission, and I again requested Mr. Cockreil to make note of what Mr. Boland was telling, and in due time he handed me a memorandum embracing those conversations. I thought about possible methods of procedure in this matter, and after some two or three weeks

I told Commissioner Clements that, in my judgment, we should take the entire commission into our confidence, especially as the time for the final hearing was approaching and it was necessary, as the presiding commissioner in that case, to reach a decision.

At the regular monthly conference on February 5, 1912, I circulated among my colleagues a memorandum prepared by Mr. I took it personally to the conference in a envelope and distributed it among them; gave them time to read it, and after they had read it I made a few remarks referring to the photographs which they, of course, could not see, since Mr. Boland was unwilling to leave them there; and I repeated my feeling that the photographs were the serious thing in this situation.

None of us could know to what extent the statements orally made might be found to be erroneous. After some conversation in conference my colleagues advised me to take up this matter directly with the President. As soon as possible after that conference I made an appointment at the White House, and, after some preliminaries, handed to the President this memorandum prepared by Mr. Cookrell. The President mile to take up this matter directly with the president of the president matter. dum prepared by Mr. Cockrell. The President, while he was looking it over, asked a few questions, and after he finished reading it asked some more questions, and then in my presence and within my hearing dictated a letter to the Attorney General, directing him to look into the matter and asking him to ascertain what foundation there was for these charges and, if found sufficient, to bring them to the attention of the Judiciary Committee.

In the same letter the President requested the Attorney General to get into touch with me and not to proceed until after he had conferred with me. The President also, in my presence and within my hearing, addressed a letter to me.

On the afternoon of February 13, which is the date on which I took the matter to the President, I had a conference with the Attorney General and related to him much of what I had related to my colleagues in conference. I advised the Attorney General that the final hearing in the Marian case was to be held on February 20, and that in view of the seriousness of this thing I thought it desirable that nothing should be brought out by Mr. Boland on that hearing, as Mr. Boland had suggested he would like to do.

Thereupon I put myself in touch with Mr. Boland's attorney, and without stating what I had in mind, I let him know that I did not desire on that hearing to bring out any of these collateral matters, and that I desired to have the hearing confined strictly to the issues relating to the rate in question. The hearing was held February 20 and was concluded about noon of that day.

I had made an appointment with the Attorney General for Mr. Boland and, if possible, his attorney. On the afternoon of February 20, in accordance with my understanding with the Attorney General, the two Bolands and Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Cockrell proceeded to the Attorney General's office and there I understand certain statements were repeated and a minute made of same.

Some time after that the Attorney General asked me to look over these minutes and to let him know what were my impressions of the statements. This I did, and the Attorney General advised me that Mr. Brown, an investigator in his department, had assumed charge of the case. That in a general way ended my connection with the case.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Now, Mr. President, I think that perhaps the Senate will want to know what were the photographs that Mr. Boland showed him, which seem to have attracted the attention of Commissioner Meyer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that that is a proper matter of investigation now. The sole purpose of the testimony, as the Chair understood, was to show that this proceeding was instituted through the governmental departments and not by a private citizen.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Very well. I do not think myself it is very material, Mr. President, but the Chair understands—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The opinion of the witness could not be given. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. No; I do not wish it, but I merely wished to show, and I think I have shown, Mr. President—at least I shall so argue it at the proper time-that Mr. Boland did

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that to be the object of this testimony exclusively.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Very well. The respondent, then, may examine the witness

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Commissioner, if I understand your testimony, all the information you had which led you to go to the President with that memorandum came from William P. Boland .- A. Yes, sir. Not orally.

Q. A large part of it was oral, was it not?—A. The matter which was given to me was not oral at all. It rested entirely on photographs, and I believed that the photographs, unless forged, told a very serious story.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then I think it is essential that the witness shall identify the photographs, or the managers will perhaps admit them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is for the counsel for the respondent to identify them. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was going to save time merely.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We can agree. These photographs have been put in evidence. I did not think it was proper for me to say before, but I can now say that they have been put in evidence. I will let the witness examine them after he leaves the chair, and with the consent of counsel we will make reference to them as a part of the witness's testimony.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not see that that is necessary. We know that those are the photographs. I do not see that it is worth while taking up time about it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. But he did not have photographs made of all the letters. He had photographs, as I understand it, of letters to Capt. May and to Mr. Conn, and other letters from Judge Archbald.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is no photograph of a letter to Capt. May.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Whatever they were-I may be inaccurate-they are here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is what we had hoped to have done without objection in the beginning. I am glad to say this is a fair, a very fair witness. [To the witness, handing papers:] You will pick out, if you can, from those photographs and say to the Senate which, if any, of those were exhibited to you by Mr. Boland at the time you have referred to. Look at this one [indicating].

The WITNESS, If I might have reference to Mr. Cockrell's memorandum, I could identify each one that was shown to me at that time.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Will you give me Mr. Cockrell's memorandum?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You can read that from the record. We do not care.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I think this is the memorandum that you referred to. Examine that and see [handing paper to witness l.

The Witness (examining). I believe that this was among the photographs which I saw. I would not be positive that they are all the photographs that I saw.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Give the exhibit number, please.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Let us take this paper, which is Exhibit 17, before the House committee.

The Secretary. It never has been marked here.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. This paper, the original of which was Exhibit No. 17 in the proceedings before the House Committee on the Judiciary, is a photograph of the letter from Capt. W. A. May, general manager, dated August 30, 1911, addressed to Mr. E. J. Williams, 625 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa. The original of this letter has been read in evidence, and by agreement with the respondent's counsel, Mr. President, I am authorized to say that the original of this letter having been already printed in the record, we can therefore dispense with the reading of the photographic cory of that letter, but it ought to be identified so that it can be referred to in the argument.

The next is known as Exhibit 19. It was marked, I think, in the House Judiciary Committee proceedings. It is a photographic copy of the agreement in Judge Archbald's handwriting and signed by John M. Robertson and E. J. Williams and witnessed by R. W. Archbald.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And dated? Mr. Manager CLAYTON. And dated the 4th day of September, A. D. 1911, and acknowledged before George W. Benedict, notary public, on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1911, the original of which photographic copy, it is agreed, has already been introduced in evidence and is printed in the record.

The next is marked "Exhibit 20" in the Judiciary Committee proceedings of the House of Representatives, I think. rate that appears there. It is a photographic copy of the document called an assignment, made the 5th day of September, A. D. 1911, by Edward J. Williams to William P. Boland and a silent party. It is signed by E. J. Williams and witnessed by W. L. Pryor, the original of which, as the counsel for the respondent agree, has been introduced in evidence and is printed in the record.

The other is marked "Exhibit 21" in the proceedings before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. It is a letter dated September 20, 1911, addressed to "My Dear Mr. Conn," and is signed by R. W. Archbald. It is agreed by the respondent's counsel that the original of this letter has already been introduced here in evidence, and that this is a photographic copy of that letter which has been printed in the record.

(The papers were handed to the witness.)
Q. (By Mr Manager CLAYTON.) You say that you identify those photographs as being among the photographs that Mr. Boland showed you at the time that you have referred to?-A.

Q. And upon which your action was based?—A. Yes, sir. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Can you say whether there were any others?-A. I can not.

Q. Have you the memorandum or a copy of the memorandum which you took to the President?—A. No, sir. I believe this is a copy a copy.

Q. Printed in the record?—A. Marked "Exhibit 28," I think.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. In the proceedings before the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; this is it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. It has not been introduced here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I propose to have this read in evidence

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We have no objection.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) This is a copy of the memorandum which you took to the President?—A. (Examining.) I believe it is.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is printed in the record here.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I have no objection. On what page is it printed?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On page 666 of the proceedings before the House Judiciary Committee. I ask that the memorandum be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the memorandum.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit N.]

To the best of my recollection the story related by Mr. Boland is as follows:

To the best of my recollection the story related by Mr. Boland is as follows:

Some years ago the Marian Coal Co. (owned by the Boland brothers) had in its employ, as general manager, a man named Peal. The company found that Mr. Peal was unfit to continue in its employ and terminated his services. Some time thereafter, a year or two, as I recall Mr. Boland's statement, Peal filed suit in the Federal court for breach of contract. The attorneys for the coal company filed a demurrer which, if sustained, would mean the termination of the suit.

Before action on the demurrer was had, Mr. Boland was approached by E. J. Williams, representing "A," the judge before whom the case was pending. Williams said that "A" wanted Boland to discount "A's" note for $500. Boland wanted to know why he was asked to discount the note. Williams said that Boland had a suit pending in court, and if he would discount the note he would be saved all of the costs of the suit. Boland did not discount the note, and he understands that it was discounted by a bank at Scranton, the president of which he describes as a politician. The demurrer was not sustained, and the suit is still pending in the Federal court, the costs to Boland to date being about $3.300. (Boland has in his possession an affidavit by Williams, stating the facts as to the note and what Boland would gain by discounting it.)

Boland was aroused at this action prompted by "A" and determined.

about $3.300. (Boland has in his possession an affidavit by Williams, stating the facts as to the note and what Boland would gain by discounting it.)

Boland was aroused at this action prompted by "A," and determined to trap him in some transaction which would prove his unfitness to serve on the bench. He thereupon told Williams that he knew of a culm bank belonging to the Erie road, through direct ownership by the Hillside Coal Co.; that he thought "A" might secure and make a good profit by selling it to some other company. Williams took the matter up with "A," who thought well of it. "A" went to New York and saw Mr. Brownell, vice president of the Erie road, who telephoned Mr. May, superintendent of the Hillside Co., to give Williams an option on the culm bank. "A" returned to Scranton and made out in his own handwriting and signed as witness an option giving. Williams would see him, bearing a letter of introduction from "A." with reference to the sale of the culm bank for the sum of $3,500. "A" called up Mr. Conn, vice president of the Laurel line. "A" said he was interested in the culm bank and hoped they could arrange a deal. Conn agreed to buy the culm bank for a sum which, after deducting necessary expenses and the original cost of the bank—$3,500—will net about $35,000. This deal will be closed within the next few days, the necessary papers now being prepared.

Under the arrangement Williams made with "A" at the time "A" secured the option on the culm bank the net profits will be divided equally between Boland, who had discovered the culm bank, Williams, who acted as a go-between, and "A," who used his influence as Federal judge to secure the option.

Boland has in his possession a photograph of the option written and witnessed by "A," a photograph of "A's" letter introducing Williams to Conn, and another culm bank, which Boland says will be secured by "A" very soon, for the purpose of making another sum of money through the use of his influence with the railroads.

Boland expects to secure very shortly and we came back to New York prepared to make good such assurance. Very soon thereafter we were informed from a reliable source that because of the loss of the property of the Marian Coal Co., as the result of litigation with other parties than the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, and because he was fairly well satisfied with the relief already obtained in the proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, Mr. Boland did not care to proceed further therein and had dropped the cases. Under these circumstances we felt that the occasion had passed which prompted you to make the request for the information and that you would not desire us to go to the very considerable expense of preparing data, which, so far as appeared, would never be used. For this reason we suspended our preparations to gather the information requested.

Boland says the litigation referred to by Seager is the sult filed by Peal and that Seager has inside advance information of the decision of the court, which has not yet been handed down.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, in view of the introduction of that in writing, I would like for these photographic copies of letters and documents which have been introduced in evidence this morning to be printed at this point in the Record. do not desire to have them read.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is no objection.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, and it will be so done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 80.]

(Pennsylvania Coal Co. Hillside Coal & Iron Co. New York, Susque-hanna & Western Coal Co. Northwestern Mining & Exchange Co. Blossburg Coal Co. Office of the general manager, Scranton, Pa.) AUGUST 30, 1911.

Mr. E. J. WILLIAMS, 626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.

Dear Sir: As stated to you to-day verbally, I shall recommend the sale of whatever interest the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. has in what is known as the Katydid culm dump, made by Messrs. Robertson & Law in the operation of the Katydid breaker, for $4,500.

In order that it may not be lost sight of, I will mention that any coal above the size of pea coal will be subject to a royalty to the owners of lot 46, upon the surface of which the bank is located.

It is also understood that the bank will not be conveyed to anyone else without the consent of the H. C. & I. Co., and that if the offer is accepted articles of agreement will be drawn to cover the transaction.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. Max. General Manager.

W. A. MAY, General Manager.

[U. S. S. Exhibit 81.]

This agreement made and concluded this 4th day of September, A. D. 1911, by and between John M. Robertson, of Moosic, Pa., of the one part, and Edward J. Williams, of Scranton, Pa., of the other part, witnesseth:

Whereas the said party of the first part is the owner of that certain culm dump in the vicinity of Moosic made in the operation by the firm of Robertson & Law of the so-called Katydid mine or colliery. And whereas the said party of the second part is desirous of purchasing the same:

whereas the said party of the second part is desirous of partials whereas the same:

Now this agreement witnesseth that for and in consideration of $1 to him in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said party of the first part hereby grants and conveys unto the said party of the second part, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns the right or option to pyrchase his interest in and to the said culm dump for the price or sum of $3,500, which said option is to be exercised within 60 days from this date, the terms to be cash within 5 days after the exercise of said option. It is understood that this option is intended to cover and include all the interest of the said party of the first part and of the said late firm of Robertson & Law.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals this day and year aforesaid.

My commission expires March 10, 1913.

[U. S. S. Exhibit 82.]

Assignment, made this 5th day of September, A. D. 1911, by Edward J. Williams, of the borough of Dunmore, County of Lackawanna and State of Pennsylvania, party of the first part, to William P. Boland and a silent party, both of the city of Scranton, county and State above mentioned, parties of the second part. For services rendered or to be rendered in the future by William P. Boland and silent party, whose name for the present is only known to Edward J. Williams, W. P. Boland, John M. Robertson, and Capt. W. A. May, superintendent of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., it is agreed by said Edward J. Williams, who is the owner of two options covering a culm bank known as the "Katydid." situate in the vicinity of Moosic, Pa., that he hereby assigns two-thirds of any profits arising from the sale of the above-mentioned property over and above the amounts to be paid John M. Robertson and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., $3,500 and $4,500, respectively, to be divided equally between William P. Boland and silent party mentioned above, their heirs, successors, or assigns, and this shall be their voucher for same.

(R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., September 20, 1911.

Scranton, Pa., September 20, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Conn: This will introduce Mr. Edward Williams, who is interested with me in the culm dump about which I spoke to you the other day. We have options on it both from the Hillside Coal Co. and from Mr. Robertson, representing Robertson & Law, these options covering the whole interest in the dump. This dump was produced in the operation of the Katydid colliery by Robertson & Law, and extends to the whole of the dump so produced. I have not seen it myself, but, as I understand it, this dump consists of two dumps a little separate from each other, but all making up one general culm or refuse pile made at that colliery. Mr. Williams will explain further with regard to it, if there is anything which you want to know.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archeald.

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, Mr. Commissioner, I find in this memorandum it is stated:

The attorneys for the coal company filed a demurrer which, if sustained, would mean the termination of the suit. Before action on the demurrer was had Mr. Boland was approached by E. J. Williams, representing "A," the judge before whom the case was pending.

Now, did Mr. Boland make that statement to you?-A. That is my confidential clerk's recollection of what Mr. Boland said.

Q. Had you not had a talk with him?-A. Mr. Boland made various statements to me. I do not say now he did or did not say that.

Q. Did you take to the President a memorandum saying that Judge Archbald had overruled a demurrer because the party who filed the demurrer had refused to discount his note, without knowing anything about whether it was true or not?—A. I would take to the President any statement prepared under such circumstances by my confidential clerk; yes, sir.

Q. You would?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Then you do not know of your own knowledge whether Mr. Boland had made this statement or not?—A. I would not
- be positive. Mr. Boland made a great many statements.
 Q. You stated a little while ago that you relied only on the photographs. Was any photograph submitted to you that tended to support that statement and show that the note was presented to the judge before his action on the demurrer?-A. I intended to say I relied chiefly on the photographs, and in response to your question I say I did not rely only upon oral statements.

Q. After setting forth about his overruling the demurrer after the note had been presented and discount refused, you say that "Boland was aroused at this action, prompted by 'A'"——
A. I beg your pardon; I did not say that. The memorandum said that.

Q. You took to the President a memorandum which contained that statement?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did not know anything about it except what Mr.

Cockrell told you?-A. I have no personal knowledge of that; no, sir.

Q. It also says this-and I should like to know whether you had any information except Mr. Cockrell's report to you as to it-

"A."-

Of course "A" means Judge Archbald.

"A." went to New York and saw Mr. Brownell, vice president of the Erie Road, who telephoned Mr. May, superintendent of the Hillside Co., to give Williams an option on the culm bank.

Did you know anything in advance of that statement except what Mr. Cockrell had put in this memorandum?-A. I can not know telephone messages between Scranton and New York;

Q. You took that to the President without knowing anything about it?-A. Yes, sir,

Q. Except Mr. Cockrell said that Mr. Boland said that?-A. I know Mr. Cockrell is a reliable man.

Q. I do not think you have answered my question.-A. Will you kindly repeat it?

Q. The question is whether you took that statement to the President without knowing anything about it except that Mr. Cockrell told you Mr. Boland said that?—A. I presume Mr. Boland told me a good many things. He had a story and I did not hear all Mr. Boland's story. I did not take time to listen to it. It took him a good while and it took more time than I had. A commissioner is a busy man.

Q. Was Mr. Boland in an excited condition about it?—A. I

- do not think he was.

 Q. Did he tell you he came down there for the purpose of having proceedings instituted against Judge Archbald?-A. No. sir.
- Q. Did he tell you he came down there for the purpose of giving this information in reference to the suit which he had pending before the commission?—A. I think he said he would like to introduce that as a part of his testimony.

Q. And he made this statement to Mr. Cockrell and to you, and Mr. Cockrell reduced the statement to writing?-A. As told twice by Mr. Boland.

Q. And the purpose, as you understood at the time, was to influence the action of the commission in reference to the suit which was pending before it?-A. I had no such understanding. Mr. Boland never said a word about it, except he expressed the wish to put that in as a part of his testimony.

Q. Was the counsel of the railroad company notified of these proceedings?—A. Of which proceedings?

Q. Of what was going on between you and Mr. Cockrell on the one hand and Mr. Boland on the other, when he was telling you that he wanted it to go into evidence?-A. Thousands, representing petitioners, as well as railway companies, come to the office of the commission in the course of a year.
Q. The question is not answered.—A. I did not know Mr.

Boland was coming. I did not know what he wanted. How could I notify anybody, if I desired to do it? There was no occasion to notify anybody, as I saw it.

Q. You listened to him?—A. I listened to him as to any other man who will come to my office, and every man has a right to come there.

Q. After that statement about Mr. Brownell telephoning to Mr. May to give this option, it says:

"A." returned to Scranton and made out in his own handwriting and signed as witness an option giving Williams the right to purchase the culm bank for the sum of $3,500.

You understood that to mean that Judge Archbald wrote out the option which Mr. May was to give?—A. I believe I saw some such document as that.

Q. That is what you understood that memorandum to mean when you took it to the President, that the judge went to Brownell and Brownell telephoned to May to give the option, and the judge wrote out the option and had it signed. Was not that the idea you meant to convey to the President?—A. I meant to convey to the President nothing but what that memorandum contained and what I thought it meant.

Q. This language I will read again:

"A." returned to Scranton and made out in his own handwriting and signed as witness an option giving Williams the right to purchase the culm bank for the sum of $3,500.

Did you think, and did you wish the president to think, that Judge Archbald had written the option which Capt. May was to give on dictation by telephone from Brownell?-A. I paid no special attention to any one special statement, relying primarily on what was in the photographs.

Q. There was nothing in the photographs about the $500 note?-A. I can not say. I would have to examine the photograph.

Q. Was there anything about the demurrer?-A. I suppose not.

Q Or anything about Mr. Brownell's telephoning to Capt. May?—A. I do not believe that is capable of photographic reproduction.

Q. Now, it says, next:

Under the arrangement Williams made with "A." at the time "A." secured the option on the culm bank the net profits will be divided equally between Boland, who discovered the culm bank, Williams, who acted as a go-between, and "A.," who used his influence as Federal judge to secure the option.

Did Boland say he was entitled to one-third of the proceeds of this transaction?-A. He must have said it, or otherwise Mr. Cockrell would not have written it.

Q. Do you remember whether, when talking to you, he said that?-A. I think he probably did.

Q. Mr. Meyer, I understand that you arranged the meeting with the Attorney General, when Mr. W. P. Boland was to be taken there?—A. Yes, sir; I did.
Q. The suit of the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware.

Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was set down for a final hearing on the 20th of February?—A. The 12th.

Q. No; the 20th. You arranged with the Attorney General that after the hearing was over you would take Mr. Boland up to the Attorney General's office?—A. No; I did not arrange to take Mr. Boland to the Attorney General's office, but I arranged for a conference between the Attorney General and Mr. Boland and his attorney. Of this neither Mr. Boland nor his attorney, Mr. H. C. Reynolds, had any knowledge before the meeting.

Q. You had Mr. Cockrell go and attend the meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At your request?-A. I wanted Mr. Cockrell to show them where the Attorney General was to be found, and he was to be

Q. In reference to the last part of this examination, which says:

Boland says the litigation referred to by Seager is the suit filed by Peale, and that Seager has inside advance information of the decision of the court, which has not yet been handed down.

You knew Judge Witmer then had charge of the case and would make the decision, if any were made?-A. I did not know any such thing; no, sir.

Q. You knew that Judge Archbald was then judge of the Commerce Court, did you not?-A. I did.

Q. And there must be some other judge who would be sitting in the middle district of Pennsylvania?—A. I paid no attention to the character of that litigation.

Q. As a matter of fact now, Mr. Meyer, did not Mr. Boland tell you that Judge Witmer was giving information about what he was going to do in the Peale case?-A. He may have said it; I would not be positive; I doubt it.

Q. Did you not omit from the memorandum which you took to the President any reference to Boland's charges against Judge Witmer?-A. I had nothing whatever to do with the preparation of that memorandum and neither included nor omitted anything.

Q. Did you not direct Mr. Cockrell to make the memorandum?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the purpose of taking it to the President?-A. Not for the purpose of taking it to the President.

Q. You did take it to the President?-A. Yes, sir. Q. And you read it?—A. The President read it.

Q. You read it before you took it to the President?-A. Most assuredly, I read it before that, and Judge Clements before that. Q. You took a memorandum with those charges that a judge was giving advance information to one of the parties to the suit, without knowing who the judge was?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not a fact that you omitted a reference to the other judge because he was not a judge of the Commerce Court?-

A. There was no such purpose as that.

Q. With an important charge against Judge Witmer, the man who was going to give this decision, and it was charged was giving advance information, what reason was there for taking to the President only that part of the story which related to Judge Archbald?—A. Mr. Cockrell listened to Mr. Boland the morning we had the conference. He listened when Mr. Boland told the story to Judge Clements; it was listened to by myself in part and continued with Mr. Cockrell; and based on those two recitations Mr. Cockrell prepared a memorandum as to what he had said, to the best of his recollection. That is all I can say about that memorandum.

Q. Then, if Judge Witmer was intentionally omitted from the memorandum, it was Mr. Cockrell who did it, and not the commissioner?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. This witness may be discharged.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will retire.

TESTIMONY OF CHRISTOPHER G. BOLAND-CONTINUED.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we are now ready to further consider the question of the admissibility of the evidence in the testimony of C. G. Boland, and I ask that Judge Sterling be heard on the part of the managers.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, it will be remembered that the evidence which we seek is a statement made by George M. Watson to Christopher G. Boland. George M. Watson was the attorney employed by the Bolands and the Marian Coal Co. to settle the suit which that coal company had before the Interstate Commerce Commission and to sell the stock of the Marian Coal Co.

We believe that the testimony is competent on at least two grounds. First, they are statements made by one who was a party with the respondent, Judge Archbald, to do a wrongful thing, and it relates to matters that were done or proposed in furtherance of the doing of the wrongful thing.

A conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to do a wrongful thing, and anything that either party to such an agreement does or says in furtherance of the agreement is competent against the other party to the agreement. parties to this agreement were Judge Archbald and George M. Watson, and the unlawful thing which they proposed to do was to use the influence of Judge Archbald as a judge of a Federal court to compel or to induce, if you prefer, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. to buy this stock and to settle this suit.

We understand, and it is purely an elemental principle of law, that we must prove the conspiracy before we can prove acts and words on the part of one of the coconspirators against the other coconspirators; and the only question that is left is whether we have proven in this case this agreement by Arch-bald and Watson that Judge Archbald should use his influence as a judge in order to prevail upon this railroad company to engage in this settlement and in the purchase of this stock.

Now, what is the proof? In the first place, immediately after the Bolands employed Watson to represent them in the settle-ment and in the sale of this stock Watson visits Judge Arch-bald's office, and some one, Judge Archbald or some other person, while they are there together, telephones Christy G. Boland to come to Judge Archbald's office, and he goes there.

It is stated there in the presence of those three what was to be done, and Christopher G. Boland says that Judge Archbald said that he would help-that was the language of Mr. Boland, that he would help-get this settlement out of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and help to sell them the stock of the Marian Coal Co.

We believe that when we have gone that far we have proven that Judge Archbald is a party to the agreement to do the wrongful thing of using his influence as a judge, it being remembered that at that time the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. had two lawsuits pending in the court over which Judge Archbald presided; we believe when we have gone that far and proven the express agreement of Judge Archbald to help in that matter we have proven a conspiracy.

But that is not all the evidence in the case. If Judge Archbald had never used that language in the presence of Christopher Boland, we have proven here that immediately after that conference between those three men Judge Archbald meets Loomis, one of the high officials of this railroad company, and suggests this matter of a purchase of the stock and of the set-tlement of the Marian Coal Co.'s suit in the Commerce Court; then, a few days after that, he telephones to Mr. Phillips, another high official, superintendent of the coal properties of this railroad company, to come to his house, and he talks to him about the proposition of a settlement and a sale; then, when he was in New York he goes to the offices of this railroad company, urging that they settle this suit and purchase this stock; then he writes at least three letters to Mr. Loomis, urging all the time, using all his influence, to carry out this agreement which had been entered into between him and Watson. Even after it was supposed that the matter had fallen through, he still writes to Loomis and tells him that he understands that the settlement has failed; that he regrets it very much, and that if he thought he could do any good he would offer his personal services to carry out that end. He then suggests a personal conference between Truesdale, the president of the company. and Mr. Loomis and Mr. Phillips and Mr. Watson, and says a personal conference very often results in good. He did not only agree, and we have not only proven that he did agree, to help to do this wrongful thing, but we have proven that he carried out the agreement and did all in his power to carry it out.

So in that phase of the case we submit, Mr. President, that we have not only proven a conspiracy, but we have proven that Judge Archbald did his part of the undertaking. For that reason any statement made by his coconspirators in furtherance of this agreement is competent against Judge Archbald in this

I shall not weary the Senate with precedents, but I do want to call attention to one precedent which Mr. Manager Floyd referred to the other day, and which I think is exactly in point in this case. In the impeachment proceedings against President Johnson, one of the charges in the articles was that Andrew did unlawfully conspire with one Lorenzo Thomas with intent unlawfully to seize, take, and possess the property of the United States in the Department of War, in the custody and charge of Edwin M. Stanton.

It was plain there that President Johnson had called Gen. Thomas to his office; had made certain statements to Gen. Thomas; that Gen. Thomas had consented to do what the President had suggested, and that that constituted a conspiracy between President Johnson and Gen. Thomas. Then Gen. Thomas went out and stated to a third person some of the things that President Johnson had said to him. That third person was called as a witness in the trial of the case before the Senate, and the Senate held that he could testify as to what Gen. Thomas told him he had heard President Johnson say. That is exactly the same kind of case as this.

Here is George M. Watson. We charge that he and Archbald made this agreement. Then Watson goes out and tells Christy G. Boland about what they had done and about what they were doing in furtherance of this proposition to get this settlement. It was right along the line of doing the very unlawful thing that we charge in this count, that it was the use of the judge's official power in order to induce litigants in his court to come to their terms. It will not be disputed by these gentlemen, I am sure, that it is a wrongful thing for a judge to use his influence to induce litigants in his court to do anything, whether it be for a consideration to himself or to a friend.

Just one further thing on that point. During the discussion

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the manager permit the Chair to make an inquiry? The precedent cited by him is where the article of impeachment charged a conspiracy, is it not?

Mr. Manager STERLING. Yes, sir; it charged a conspiracy in the article

During the discussion the other day it was suggested, I think, or perhaps was in the mind of the Chair, at least, that the evidence was not sufficient to prove that Judge Archbald was to receive any consideration for his part in carrying out this agree-It is true that in the article to which this evidence relates it is charged that for a consideration Judge Archbald entered into this agreement and agreed to use his influence to get this settlement.

We submit that the words "for a consideration" are not essential to the offense. Those words constitute no necessary element in the offense which we charge. It makes no difference, so far as the completion of the offense is concerned, whether or not Judge Archbald was to participate in the fees or in any moneys derived from this settlement. He knew that Watson was to get $5,000; and if, in order to assist a friend in earning a fee, he would undertake to use his power as a judge to get litigants in his court to come to an agreement or to a settlement, he is guilty of the offense; he is guilty of the gravamen of the charge that is contained in this count. We submit that, although it is a very compelling inference—and we say that it is an unavoidable inference-from all the testimony in this case that Judge Archbald was to share in this money, it is immaterial in this question, because anything he did in the way of using his official power in aiding Watson to earn a fee was a wrongful act. If the Chair will read it again, it will be found that that is the charge in the count, and that the words "for a consideration" are not necessary or essential to the completion of the charge.

Just a word on the other proposition. We believe it is res gestæ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager did not understand the Chair as ruling on that ground that the evidence related in any manner to the question ultimately to be decided by the Senate as to whether or not the respondent had been guilty of improper conduct?

Mr. Manager STERLING. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not rule on anything of that kind. The Chair ruled on the question as to the admissibility of this evidence, based, as it is, upon the allegation that Judge Archbald was Mr. Watson's partner.

Mr. Manager STERLING. The court understands that our position has been that it is competent on the ground that I have just stated. I think Mr. Manager Floyd made that statement the other day. The reason I discussed this proposition with reference to whether or not Judge Archbald was to share in the fee or any part of the money derived from the settlement was because I inferred from what the President said the other day, if I understood him properly, that it had not been sufficiently shown that Judge Archbald was to share in the proceeds of the settlement. I may have been mistaken about that, but in any

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will repeat his ruling, if the manager so desires. The ruling of the Chair was that there had not been sufficient evidence produced to justify the conclusion that Judge Archbald was the partner of Mr. Watson to such an extent as to permit the sayings of Mr. Watson to be introduced in evidence against him as a partner.

The Chair did not go beyond that.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will say, then, in regard to that, that we trust that now, since the evidence is in-and I believe I have stated it correctly—the Chair will find that we have offered sufficient evidence to prove that there was a conspiracy; that Judge Archbald was a party to it; and the statements that we propose to prove are the statements of one of the coconspirators showing what was done or what was proposed to be done in furtherance of that agreement.

It certainly can not be disputed under this evidence that Watson and Archbald were partners-partners, it is true, to do an unlawful thing, which constitutes the conspiracy They said they would help each other in it; and they did help each other in the proposition. So we submit that they were partners in that respect.

Now, just another word on the question as to whether or not this evidence is res gestæ. It will be understood that Christy Boland is the man who employed George M. Watson for the Marian Coal Co., and this conversation which we are seeking to get from Christy Boland is a conversation containing statements by Watson to Boland with reference to what he had done and what he had proposed to the officers of this railroad company toward carrying out his duty to his clients, and at the same time toward carrying out the agreement which he made with Archbald to use the judge's official influence in order to arrive at a settlement.

It seems to me, Watson being the attorney of Mr. Boland. that what Watson said to Boland about what was being done with reference to the contract of hiring, with reference to the employment, and with reference to what he was doing toward performing his duty in conjunction with Judge Archbald, becomes a part of the res gestæ in this case, and that we are entitled to show now, as a part of the res gestæ, what Watson said to Boland along that line.

I think that is all I have to say, Mr. President, in the matter. It seems to me that it is very clear under the law of conspiracy, and very clear that the Senate in the case to which I have referred, where the question involved was very similar to the one now being argued, held that it was competent under the law of conspiracy; and we submit that we are entitled to have Mr. Boland testify to that conversation.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the learned manager has only referred to one of the legal principles which are applicable to this case, though he has very fairly referred to that one. He has said to you that there must be, in the first instance, proof of an unlawful conspiracy before there can be admitted the testimony by outside parties of the admissions or declarations or statements of one of the coconspirators as against the other. The difficulty under which the learned manager labors in that statement is that he seems to assume that upon proof of a combination therefore there is proof of a conspiracy. But a conspiracy and a combination are two very distinct and different There is embodied in every conspiracy a combination, but there is not embodied in every combination a conspiracy. A conspiracy is a combination to do an unlawful thing, and the very gravamen of the charge in the Johnson impeachment case was that Gen. Thomas, knowing of President Johnson's intention to oust Stanton from his office in violation of the tenure of office act, joined with Johnson in accomplishing that purpose; and that therefore the statements which were made by Thomas were admissible as against Johnson in the impeach-Nobody would question that ruling if the ment proceedings. matter were parallel here at all, but there is not the slightest parallel. Let us see.

The manager says that there is an unlawful thing here. What constitutes the unlawful thing? That is the primary question which you and the Senate have to meet. If Judge Archbald or you or I or anybody else agreed to assist a friend, is that unlawful? Can there be anything said to be unlawful in relation to that? If such a thing as that is unlawful, sir, then the whole basis of our Christianity is unlawful, because we are commanded to assist our fellow men whenever and wherever we can. There must be back of it something more than mere assistance, and there is where the learned manager fails in his argument. He has produced here nothing whatsoeyer showing anything further than assistance pure and simple; assistance He has produced here nothing whatsoever showing which Mr. Boland, his witness, himself says was an assistance as a friend to him, Boland, and as a friend to Watson, who was Boland's counsel.

When the managers have proven something beyond that friendly assistance, they may get to the second step in this case. but their failure to show anything beyond that leaves the case outside the rule to which the manager has adverted, namely, that there must be proof of a conspiracy in the first instance before declarations can be admitted at all.

There is a second step, if he passes that one, sir. If it were admitted or proven here that there was a conspiracy, admissions or declarations of one conspirator could not be adduced as against the other unless they were made in furtherance of the conspiracy. The manager stated that himself but has misunderstood its application.

Let us see, sir, whether or not the question which you are considering is or can reasonably be held to be an inquiry in relation to something done in furtherance of a conspiracy. Remember, sir, as I shall read to you in a moment from the authorities, the test is not merely that the conspiracy is a thing in existence and has not entirely culminated. That is only one essential. There must not only be that, but that which is done must also be done in furtherance of the conspiracy. Now, let me read the question before I read the authorities. This is the question:

Q. (By Mr. Manager Floyd.) Now, Mr. Boland, I will ask you to state whether or not during the course of these negotiations you had any conversations with Mr. Watson relative to Judge Archbald's interest or participation in this settlement and particularly as to whether he was to share in the fee or receive any money or other pecuniary consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement.

Now, as Mr. Boland has said that he had not himself any talk with Judge Archbald in regard to it, the limit to which that question can possibly go would be that Mr. Watson had said to Mr. Boland that at some time in the past there had been an agreement entered into between Watson and Archbald that Archbald was to share in the fee to be received or to obtain some "consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement," if I may use the language of the question. That is a statement which necessarily relates to a past occurrence; and a statement of a past occurrence can not be a statement in furtherance of a conspiracy and can not be admissible, even if there were evidence of a conspiracy, which there is not.

I read, first—the books are here, but for convenience I read from the brief which I have prepared—from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Logan against the United States, One hundred and forty-fourth United States, pages 263 to 309. The exact quotation is on page 309.

Doubtless in all cases of conspiracy the action of one conspirator in the prosecution of the enterprise is considered the act of all and is evidence against all. But only those acts and declarations are admissible under this rule which are done and made while the conspiracy is pending and in furtherance of its object.

Not "or in furtherance of its object," but "and in furtherance of its object." There must coexist two things, a pending conspiracy and a statement or declaration or act in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy while it is pending.

In Brown v. The United States (150 U. S., 98), after quoting the clause which I have just read from the Logan case, and stating the facts, which I will not weary you or the Senate with, the Supreme Court proceeds:

If a conspiracy was sought to be established affecting the plaintiff in error, it would have to be by testimony introduced in the regular way so as to give the accused the opportunity to cross-examine the witness or witnesses. It could not be established by acts or statements of others directly admitting such a conspiracy, or by any statement of theirs from which it might be inferred.

In Greenleaf on Evidence—reading from the paragraph which Mr. Manager Floyd quoted the other day when this question was raised-I read this:

Declarations of conspirators: The same principles apply to the acts and declarations of one of a company of conspirators in regard to the common design as affecting his fellows. Here a foundation must first be laid by proof sufficient in the opinion of the judge to establish prima facie the fact of conspiracy between the parties, or proper to be laid before the jury as tending to establish such fact. The connection of the individuals in the unlawful enterprise being thus shown—

That is by original proof-every act and declaration of each member of the Confederacy, in pursuance of the original concerted plan and with reference to the common object, is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all, and is therefore original evidence against each of them. (Greenleaf on Evidence, 14th Ed., Vol. I, pp. 149, 150.)

But you will perceive, sir, it is only the things done in furtherance of the conspiracy. First, you must show the conspiracy, then you may admit the declarations made in furtherance of it, but not declarations which are made or statements of things which have preceded the time of the statement.

Now, I read from Taylor on Evidence, because in that and one other authority it is more clearly put than in any I have yet been able to find. In section 593 he says:

Care, however, must be taken to distinguish between declarations, which are either acts in themselves purporting to advance the object of the criminal enterprise, or which accompany and explain such acts, and those statements, whether written or oral, which, although made during the continuance of the plot, are, in fact, a mere narrative of the measures that have already been taken. These last statements are, as before explained, inadmissible. The distinction here referred to may be well illustrated by the case of Hardy, who was prosecuted for high treason. There a letter written by a coconspirator to a private friend, unconnected with the plot, which gave an account of the proceedings of a society to which the writer and the defendant were proved to have belonged and which inclosed several seditions songs stated to have been composed by the writer and sung by him at a meeting of the society, was rejected on the ground that it was not a transaction in support of a conspiracy, but merely a relation of the part which the writer had taken in the plot, and, as such, only admissible against himself.

In the case of State v. Gilmore—and I am reading from 35, Lawyers' Reports, Annotated—at page 1088 this is said:

Lawyers' Reports, Annotated—at page 1088 this is said:

To render such evidence admissible two conditions are absolutely consential: (1) That the acts or declarations sought to be shown were done or made pending the conspiracy, and (2) they were in promotion of its object or design. * * *

The theory of the State seems to have been that the alleged conspiracy might be shown by declarations of the deceased alone. No authority so holding has been cited, and none can be found. Certainly nothing said in State v. Crawford warrants such a conclusion. There a letter written by the victim of abortion to her paramour, after the latter was shown to have entered into a conspiracy with the defendant therein, was held to be admissible in evidence as tending to establish her connection with the conspiracy; that is, that she was either joining in the enterprise of the other two or entering into an unlawful arrangement with the one addressed. But no one will pretend that this letter alone implicated the defendant therein. Nor is there any ground for saying that the declarations of deceased alone tended to connect this defendant with any conspiracy. As to him, these were in the nature of hearsay, until there was prima facle proof of some unlawful arrangement or agreement between them, in which event they were a part of the res gestæ.

Now, sir, I do not think it worth while to undertake to Now, sir, I do not think it worth while to undertake to answer Mr. Manager Sterling's argument that there is some particular weight to be given to the fact that Mr. Watson was out to me the wrong decision.

attorney for Boland. I care not who he was attorney for. The question which here is raised is, whether or not they were partners or conspirators in an unlawful act, which two were the judge and Watson.

In closing the argument, sir, I only want to bring home to you an illustration which seems to me will fit exactly everything that appears in this case.

Let us suppose that an indictment is found against a Member of Congress, charging him with misdemeanor in office, in that he has undertaken, for a consideration, to obtain the appointment of some other party to a public position, and upon the trial this proof is adduced: It is shown that the defendant, the Member of Congress, together with the applicant for the office, went to other Members of Congress and to friends of the President, and to the President himself, and urged upon the President that he should appoint this particular man to office, and in that state of the case there was a proffer of proof by a third party, that the applicant had said to him that the consideration for which the Member of Congress was using his influence in the way stated was that he, the Member of Congress, should receive a portion of the salary that the applicant would get if he were appointed to the office.

Now, does anyone suppose for a moment that that evidence would be admitted? And yet that, I submit, is an exactly parallel case to the one that is here. You have two people in each case acting together for a common purpose-to wit, in the one case to obtain an appointment to office; in the other, to settle some pending controversy. You have in the one case a proposition to prove by a third party the statement of one of the persons as to the consideration for which it is said the defendant in the particular case was acting, just exactly as the question which is here read.

The fault in each case—the fault in the offer of proof in the supposed case, and the fault in the offer of proof in this case, entirely outside of the question to which I have adverted somewhat at length, on the subject of the fact that it was something said in the past—the fault in each case rests on the assumption that the endeavor to help a man is a wrong, whether the helping of a man is by a Member of Congress who in the future may obtain favors from the President or from the applicant, or from a judge on the bench who may obtain in the future favors from somebody else, makes no difference whatsoever. There must be shown first that there was existing that which was wrongful; not the mere intention to help, but that that intention to help was wrongful in and of itself because of something connected with it, before there can be admitted the declarations of one party against the other.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I simply wish to call attention to the precedent cited by Mr. Manager Sterling and which Mr. Simpson had no opportunity to look at. Mr. Manager Sterling did not give us the page or state what the question was, but while Mr. Simpson was speaking I asked Mr. Sterling for it, and he referred to Third Hinds' Precedents, at the top of page 561, where the ruling was made on which he relies, and that is:

At the end of the debate the Chief Justice said:

"The Chief Justice is of opinion that no sufficient foundation has been laid for the introduction of this testimony. He will submit the question to the Senate with great pleasure, if any Senator desires it. The question is ruled to be inadmissible."

Mr. Jacob M. Howard, of Michigan, a Senator, asked that the question be taken by the Senate; and being put, "Shall the question proposed by Mr. Butler be put to the witness?" the yeas were 28 and the nays 22. So the question was put.

Hinds simply gives the outlines of these things, and it is impossible from what he says of it to know just what the question was. But in the official report of the Johnson trial, in which there is a full statement of everything that took place-by the official reporters, F. and J. Rives and George A. Bailey—published just after the trial, I find the exact language.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the counsel?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly.
Mr. Manager STERLING. You will find, if you read Hinds, that the question called for statements which President Johnson had made to Thomas and which Thomas had made to this witness-statements about things which had already occurredand it answers everything that the gentleman said on that side of the case.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would sooner take the Supreme Court of the United States on the question.

Mr. Manager STERLING. The Supreme Court of the United States has not determined differently, either.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Either, Mr. President, Mr. Manager
STERLING is in error about what was decided or he has pointed

I am going to call attention to what was the question that was decided in the language that I have read. I presume the Members of the Senate remember at least the outlines of the case against President Johnson, so far as it relates to what was involved in this question. The President had undertaken to remove Mr. Stanton from the office of Secretary of War and to appoint Lorenzo Thomas, the Adjutant General of the Army, as his successor, in violation of what was called the tenure-ofoffice act, which made it a criminal offense for the President to do that; and the President being impeached, charged with having entered into a conspiracy with Gen. Lorenzo Thomas to violate the tenure-of-office act, Gen. Thomas is on the stand and is being questioned, and this is the question:

Shortly before this conversation about which you have testified, and after the President restored Maj. Gen. Thomas to the office of Adjutant General, if you know the fact that he was so restored, were you present in the War Department and did you hear Thomas make any statements to the officers and clerks, or either of them, belonging to the War Office as to the rules and orders of Mr. Stanton?

Mr. Manager STERLING. After reading that, does the counsel for the respondent insist that Gen. Thomas was the witness to whom the quesiton was put? It was a third party.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; Mr. Burleigh, a delegate, was Yes: I made a mistake about that. the witness. as to the declarations of Gen. Thomas. Gen. Thomas was a witness, and these questions were raised on his examination, But this question was whether the witness was present and heard Gen. Thomas make these statements. What statement? Statements as to what President Johnson had said? Nothing of the kind.

Shortly before this conversation about which you have testified, and after the President restored Maj. Gen. Thomas to the office of Adjutant General, if you know the fact that he was so restored, were you present in the War Department and did you hear Thomas make any statements to the officers and clerks, or either of them, belonging to the War Office as to the rules and orders of Mr. Stanton or of the officer which he—Thomas—would revoke, relax, or rescind in favor of such officers and employees when he had control of the affairs therein? If so, state when, as near as you can, it was such conversation occurred, and state all he said as nearly as you can.

The question asked the witness there was whether he heard Gen. Thomas say what he was going to do when he got in control of the War Department and not a word as to what President Johnson had said.

In the report I have here, which I was about to read, there is given what Hinds in his work does not give. It gives not only the question and the discussion and the ruling and the overruling of the Chief Justice by the Senate but the testimony given in reply to the question, and here it is:

The general remarked to me that he had made an arrangement to have all the heads or officers in charge of the different departments of the office come in with their clerks that morning, and he wanted to address them. He stated that the rules which had been adopted for the government of the clerks by his predecessor were of a very arbitrary character, and he proposed to relax them.

And so on about that conversation, about what he was going to do when he got hold of the War Department. Not one word about what President Johnson had said to him. As a matter of fact, in that trial the turning point of the rules of evidence in that case was the great question of whether the President should be allowed to prove the conversation he had had with members of his Cabinet before he undertook to remove Mr. Stanton, and after one of the most able and lengthy discussions ever heard in a court on a question of evidence it was ruled out, and the Senate held the evidence could not be introduced.

So the only precedent that is brought here in support of the contention of Mr. Manager Sterling is one which has not anything to do with the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has ruled on this question, and the managers have asked that it be again considered. The present occupant of the Chair is but the mouthpiece of the Senate, and the matter having again been brought to the attention of the Senate for consideration, it being deemed on each side a vital one, the Chair thinks under the circumstances it should be submitted to the Senate. Having once ruled on it, the Chair does not think it would be proper under the circumstances to rule on it again.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to state, for the day, that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is detained from the Chamber on business of the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the call of the roll 55

Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question which was propounded by the managers and which was objected to on the part of the respondent. The Secretary will read the question.

The Chair will state, before the question is read, that this question was propounded by the managers and objected to by counsel in behalf of the respondent; and the question before the Senate is, Shall the testimony be admitted in evidence? The Secretary will now read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager Floyd). Now, Mr. Boland, I will ask you to state whether or not during the course of these negotiations you had any conversations with Mr. Watson relative to Judge Archald's interest or participation in this settlement, and particularly as to whether he was to share in the fee or receive any money or other pecuniary consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, as your names are called, those who favor the admissibility of the evidence will respond "yea," those who are opposed to its admissibility will, as their names are called, respond "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). will ask if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. CULBERSON. As I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not understand that pairs can be announced.

Mr. CULBERSON. If it is generally understood that pairs are not to prevail in a matter of this kind, I will let my vote

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point, Mr. President, I will state that I have a general pair, but I did not suppose it applied in this case and so I voted.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I state, in explanation of the absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARD-NER] that he is necessarily absent from the Chamber on public business

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question there are 29 votes in the affirmative and 25 votes in the negative. So the Senate has ordered that the question be propounded.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, shall I proceed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager will propound the question passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We ask that Mr. C. G. Boland be recalled.

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) "Now, Mr. Boland, I will ask you to state whether or not during the course of these negotiations you had any conversation with Mr. Watson relative to Judge Archbald's interest or participation in this settlement, and particularly as to whether he was to share in the fee or receive any money or other pecuniary consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement?" now answer that question.—A. Yes, sir. You may

Q. State what those conversations were.—A. The conversa-tion I recall occurred in pursuance of information my brother conveyed to me that explained an increase in price which Mr. Watson proposed over what he was authorized to sell the two-thirds interest of the Marian Coal Co. for.

Q. Do not state what your brother said, but just what Mr. Watson said to you.—A. He asked me to go and see Mr. Watson with him, which I did. Mr. Watson confirmed to me, in his presence, what he had told him regarding the distribution of the increased amount which he proposed to add to the price we had authorized him to ask when he was employed by myself to make the sale of the stock of the company held by the majority interest; that is, two-thirds of the stock in the Marian

Q. Will you not answer the question as to what Mr. Watson said touching the matters referred to in the original questionwhat Mr. Watson said to you?-A. Mr. Watson said it was necessary to make this addition in order to

Q. You mean additional increase?—A. Additional increase. Q. In the price. How much was it?-A. I am not positive now.

Q. About how much?—A. As to what they figured out, it was fixed in my mind as between $40,000 and $50,000 additional.

Q. Now, go ahead and state what he said about that.—A. He said that as the judge was assisting him in the matter he felt that he ought to be compensated, and that he proposed to com-pensate him by one-fourth of the amount he was to receive in excess of $95,000, which was the price it was to recover a covered by the price it was to net us.

Q. Was anything further said in that conversation about it?—Not that I now remember.

Mr. Manager FLOYD (to counsel for the respondent). You can take the witness.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) When was this conversation?—A. It was some time in September, I believe, 1911.

Q. At any rate, it was some six months before the time you testified before Mr. Wrisley Brown, which was March 18, 1912?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me read a portion of your testimony before Mr.

Wrisley Brown.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. What page do you read from?

Mr. SIMPSON. I am reading from page 247 of Volume I.
Mr. Brown. Did Watson give you any intimation of what was to become of this large excess over the $100,000?
C. G. BOLAND. No.
Mr. Browx. You did not concern yourself about it?
C. G. BOLAND. No.

Q. Do you remember that testimony?-A. I do. It was when Mr. Brown first called upon me, and had a stenographer make notes of what I said to him. May I explain further?

Q. I do not care whether you explain or no.—A. In order to avoid any discussion of that matter, which I felt was unfair to Judge Archbald, as I did not want to use any information given me by Mr. Watson to reflect upon the character of the judge, I answered as the record indicates.

Q. Were you sworn before Mr. Brown?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did not you yourself prepare that statement for Mr. Brown?—A. No, sir.

Q. Let me read your testimony before the Judiciary Committee, on page 1034, gentlemen:

Mr. Worthington. Did you make a statement to Mr. Wrisley Brown?
Mr. BOLAND, I did.
Mr. Worthington. That was written out and signed?
Mr. BOLAND. He asked me to have it reduced to writing, and I did, at his request.

A. Yes, sir; but the statement which I made and signed, I found only last night in reading the testimony, did not appear in the testimony. It was the stenographer's notes, sworn to by the stenographer, I believe, Mr. Brown used instead of the statement which I signed.

Q. And the stenographer was your niece, your own stenographer in your own office?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she swore on April 6, 1912, that that is what you said? -A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was anything like that ever said in Judge Archbald's presence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or was it ever called to his attention by you or by anybody else, as far as you know?-A. No, sir.

Q. Was it ever said on any other than the one occasion?-A.

Not that I remember. You mean, of course, by Mr. Watson? Q. Yes; by Mr. Watson.—A. I do not recall having had any other conversation with Mr. Watson in regard to it.

Q. Let me read from your testimony before the Judiciary Committee, on page 1017, gentlemen;

Mr. Worthisgton. I understood you to say on Friday, Mr. Boland, and I ask you whether it is a fact, as to Judge Archbald having any pecuniary interest in this proposed settlement, all you know is that Watson said he thought he was entitled to some compensation?

Mr. Boland. That is all.

Is that true?—A. That is my testimony, undoubtedly. Q. Is it true? That was my question.—A. Yes; to the best of my recollection that was true.

Q. That was true, and you were sworn before the Judiciary Committee and testified to that May 20, 1912, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; if it be recorded there.

Q. I read again, gentlemen, from page 1018:

Mr. Boland. No; the statement of Mr. Watson was that the judge would be very influential in bringing this sale about, and that he intended to have him compensated for it. I think that was substantially the language he used.

Mr. Worthington. That was all he said, then, that bore upon the question of of Judge Archald receiving anything out of this?

Mr. Boland. Substantially all.

Is that true?—A. That is my recollection.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, the only purpose for which these questions could be asked would be to contradict the which these questions could be asked would be to contradict the witness. That is exactly what I understood him to say. It is not a contradiction of his testimony, but a confirmation of it. Mr. SIMPSON. Very well; if you find confirmation you can argue accordingly. I propose to argue that it is not. Mr. Manager FLOYD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The counsel has the right to proceed outputs the right to proceed the property of the process.

to cross-examine the witness Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) I am reading again from page 995:

Mr. Littleton. Did you ever talk to Judge Archbald, in the presence of Watson, or to Judge Archbald alone, or in the presence of any other person, about this transaction, when he intimated, or it was intimated in his presence, that he was to receive a financial consideration for the loan of his influence?

Mr. BOLAND. No, sir.

Is that true?-A. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to counsel that it is proper to interrogate the witness, and then if he does not answer in accordance with his previous testimony to read his former answer to him.

Mr. SIMPSON. I only read it because I thought it would expedite the matter. I would just as leave take it the other way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair merely suggested that the proper manner is to ask the question of the witness and then if he does not answer it according to his previous testimony to read the answer previously given.

Mr. SIMPSON. I was not going to read what he testified to in the question I was about to ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the counsel's pardon. He misunderstood him.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Did Mr. Watson ever say to you that Judge Archbald demanded any consideration for his services in attempting to bring about this settlement?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever testify heretofore that anybody was ever present at any conversation on this subject between you and Mr. Watson, save only you and Mr. Watson?—A. When the conversation occurred my brother was present. I went at his invitation to Mr. Watson.

Q. You are not answering my question. Did you ever testify, in all the elaborate examination which was made of you, that anyone else was ever present at any such conversation except you and Mr. Watson?—A. I do not remember having so testi-I may have. fied.

Q. Have you given the whole of the conversation that took place on that day?-A. I could not say.

Q. Have you given even the substance of it?-A. As near as I can remember; yes.

Q. Did you not testify before that there were other people mentioned who were to get a portion of that consideration? A. I said that in so far as it referred to Judge Archbald, that

Q. Oh, I did not ask you that. I ask you whether you had given the substance of the conversation which occurred that day. I will ask it of you again. Did you?—A. There were other names mentioned that day.

Q. What other names were mentioned of persons who were to get a part of that consideration?

The WITNESS. Am I obliged to answer that, Mr. President? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not able to reply unless the witness objects and gives the ground of his

The WITNESS. I objected before the Judiciary Committee to answering this question that was put to me there, and to giving those names, and I should seriously object unless I am obliged to give that information.

Mr. SIMPSON. I insist upon the question. The witness can not give a part of the conversation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will have to give the testimony unless he can give good grounds upon which he claims the right to be excused.

The Witness. I have heard from the other gentlemen mentioned who were alleged to participate in this amount, and my own belief is now that the statement made regarding them was not true. Therefore I do not think it is fair that their names

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) That is all the more reason why it should be given, and I insist upon your saying what other names were mentioned as people who were to share in this excess over the $100,000?—A. The names mentioned by Mr. excess over the $100,000?—A. The names mentioned by Mr. Watson were Mr. R. A. Phillips and another gentleman in New York whose name he said he did not want to mention, but I learned he had mentioned to my brother, Mr. E. E. Loomis

Q. Did you not testify before the Judiciary Committee that it was Loomis who was mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not testify before the Judiciary Committee that at this particular conversation, which you said was the only conversation between you and Watson, the three names that were mentioned besides Watson himself who were to share in the excess were Loomis, Phillips, and Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, sir.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Now, Mr. Boland, you say that you made a statement to Mr. Wrisley Brown about this matter in which you answered "no" to some of these questions that you have answered in the affirmative to-day?-A. Yes, sir; when Mr. Brown called

Q. What is your explanation of that?—A. Mr. Brown came into my office, as I remember, and wanted to know what I knew about this matter of the attempted sale of the stock of the Marian Coal Co. to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

Q. Did he have a stenographer with him?-A. He had a stenographer with him. I did not want to go into the matter with him at all, because I felt reluctant to testify in the matter.

Mr. SIMPSON. I object to the thoughts unexpressed of this witness. Mr. Manager Floyd has not asked for it, but the witness undertakes to explain it.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I asked him to explain, and that, I think, involves what he is stating.

Mr. SIMPSON. He has a right to say what he did, but not to give the reason unexpressed to anybody.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We insist on the right of the witness to answer the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks he can state what motive impelled him to do what he did.

The Witness. In relation to these two questions which I find in the record answered "no" by me?

Q. (Mr. Manager FLOYD.) That is what I am asking you about.—A. My reason for answering Mr. Brown in that way was because I did not want to enter into a discussion of that matter with him, and I felt if I answered "yes," as I could have done, it would lead to a discussion which would probably make it necessary for me to reveal to him the information I obtained from Mr. Watson, which I did not want to use as a reflection upon the character of Judge Archbald.

Q. Now, tell us how that statement that you did give Mr. Brown was prepared, whether it was made from the stenographer's notes or whether you prepared it yourself?-A. It was made wholly, I believe, from the stenographer's notes.

Q. Did you include in that statement all that was put down in the stenographer's notes or did you cut out a part?-A. The statement as contained in the record contains all of the stenographer's notes, together with an additional paragraph explaining a mistake of the stenographer when I testified before the Attorney General as to the circumstances under which I refused to discount the $500 note. I find from reading the notes

Q. Just keep on this other transaction now. Have you any further explanations to make as to why you answered in the negative questions that you now answer in the affirmative?—A. No. I afterwards told Mr. Brown that I would make a statement and sign it. I only wanted to state to him those things which I knew of my own knowledge and which I could prove, and I made up such a statement; but the stenographer's notes of my first conversation with him were used by Mr. Brown and not the statement which I had signed.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not you were asked by Mr. Brown to swear to the stenographer's notes and whether or not you refused to swear to it?-A. I did.

Q. You refused to swear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You refused to swear to the stenographer's notes?—A. He asked me, and I did not think it was necessary to swear to them.

Q. And you did not?-A. No.

Q. They were not made, then, under oath?-A. No, sir.

Q. State whether or not you refused to give Mr. Brown any statement at all at first.—A. I was rather inclined not to give him any statement if I could have avoided it.

Q. Well, why?-A. Because I was reluctant to enter into the matter at all.

Q. Why were you reluctant to enter into the matter?-A. Well, as to that particular question, I was reluctant to enter into it because I would have to give him information obtained from Mr. Watson, which I did not feel ought to be used in the connection in which he was seeking information, because it was only the statement of Mr. Watson as against the judge and these other gentlemen, and I was not sure whether or not it was true.

Q. Then, if I understand you, the reason you answered those questions in that way was to protect Judge Archbald and these two other gentlemen from the statements made to you by Watson. Is that it?-A. Practically; that is true.

Q. Why were you reluctant to give Mr. Brown any statement at all about the matter?—A. I do not think I was reluctant to give him any statement. I had previously made a statement before the Attorney General here in Washington.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We are willing that this witness shall be discharged.

Mr. SIMPSON. This witness is under subpæna by the respondent, I will state, that there may be no misunderstanding about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well; he is only discharged from the present subpæna and not from the other.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber just as the yeas and nays were being taken on the submission of this testimony to the Senate. I refrained from voting because I did not think I was sufficiently advised to pass an opinion upon the question. Since hearing the facts, I should like to be recorded upon the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not now reopen the vote, but the Senator can make a statement.

Mr. PAYNTER. May I be permitted to state, then, that I would have voted "nay," and I would now vote "nay" on the question.

CHARLES W. GUNSTER.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, it is admitted, I believe, that Charles W. Gunster was cashier of the Merchants & Mechanics Bank of Scranton in November and December, 1909, that E. J. Williams presented for discount the $500 note testified to yesterday by John Henry Jones, and that the bank refused to discount it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understood that the testimony which that witness gave before the Judiciary Committee might be read. What the manager states does not fix the date of the

Mr. Manager STERLING. It was during that time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is there any objection to reading the testimony?

Mr. Manager STERLING. It would take that much time. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is very short. Mr. Manager STERLING. We can call the witness in less time.

The managers asked if counsel would admit the material facts.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understood the managers to state that the deposition before the Judiciary Committee might be

Mr. Manager STERLING. I did not make any such request. We can call the witness in less time. Will the counsel admit the statement?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should like to have the exact date .

given by the witness. Mr. Manager STERLING. It can not be given by the witness, but it was in the month of November or December, 1909.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is admitted then?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; we admit it.

TESTIMONY OF ROLLIN B. CARR.

Rollin B. Carr appeared, and having been duly sworn was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) State your name .-- A. Rollin B. Carr.

Q. Where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. Cashier of the Providence Bank.

Q. In Scranton?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Who is the president of that bank?—A. C. H. Von Storch. Q. As cashier of that bank did you discount a note of $500 made by John Henry Jones to Robert W. Archbald and indorsed by Mr. Archbald and E. J. Williams?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the note with you?—A. No, sir; not the original note.

Q. When was that?-A. If I may refer to my discount ledger. [Examining.] It was December 13, 1909. Q. Who presented that note?—A. I am under the impression that Mr. Jones did.

Q. John Henry Jones?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you had any communication from the president, Mr. Von Storch, about the note before you discounted it?-A. Yes,

Q. In what way?-A. Over the telephone.

What did the president say to you?-A. He said that there would be a note of John Henry Jones, indorsed by Judge Archbald, for $500 presented to the bank and to cash it for him.

Q. Has that note been paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has it been renewed from that time to this?-A. Yes, sir; with a slight reduction on it.

Q. How many renewals have been made?—A. You would have to trace it in periods of about four months from 1909 to the present time.

Q. How often was it renewed?-A. Three months, I think, on the average

Q. Renewed in the same form?-A. Yes, sir; up to two months ago.

Q. Have you the present renewal?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. With you?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. Just give it to the Secretary.

(The paper was handed to the Secretary.)

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will offer it and ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the

The Secretary. It reads as follows: [U. S. S. Exhibit 84.]

(Renewal. $455.)

SCRANTON, PA., December 6, 1912.

One month after date I promise to pay to the order of R. W. Archbald at the West Side Bank, Scranton, Pa., $455. without defalcation or stay of execution, for value received. J. HENRY JONES.

A little note in the left-hand lower corner:

January 6.

On the back is the indorsement, "R. W. Archbald," and a number, "11840," with the machine.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) That is for one month?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not all 30-day notes?-A. No; only the last three months. I think the last three months it was for a month.

Q. Who has paid the interest on that note?-A. I imagine Mr. Jones.

Q. And who made the partial payment?-A. Mr. Jones.

Q. Is Mr. Von Storch in other business than president of the bank?-A. He is an attorney at law.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.
Mr. SIMPSON. We have no questions to ask.
Mr. Manager STERLING. I should like to ask the counsel if we may have the privilege of putting a copy of this note in the record, and the bank can take it back.

Mr. SIMPSON. Of course, just let the clerk make a copy of it, and that will be the end of it. There is no use of keeping an original paper of that kind.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Just one more question. Is E. J. Williams on that note as an indorser, Mr. Secretary

The SECRETARY. There is but one indorser on the back of the ote—"R. W. Archbald."
Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) When did E. J. Williams to indorse the note?-A. I think it was about four cease months ago.

Q. Up to that time he had indorsed its renewal?-A. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Carr, will you kindly read the entries in your discount ledger, so that we may just get the facts in regard to it as now appearing in the bank's record?—
A. Yes, sir. The note was dated December 3, 1909; the maker was John Henry Jones; and the indorsers were R. W. Archbald and E. J. Williams; it was payable at the Merchants and Mechanics Bank at Scranton; it was for four months; and it was discounted on December 13 for $500.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In 1909?

The Witness. In 1909; yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all we want with the witness, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire. Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, there is one more witness, Mr. Von Storch, on articles 8 and 9. He will be here presently. In the meantime I want to call Mr. Lenahan, who is to testify on another article—article No. 7.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN T. LENAHAN.

John T. Lenahan, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Lenahan, where is your home?—A. Wilkes-Barre, Luzerne County, Pa.

Q. How far is that from Scranton?—A. About 20 miles. Q. At the present time you are a Member of Congress?—A. Not now; I was a Member of the Sixtieth Congress.

Q. You are a lawyer?-A. I profess to be.

Q. Do you know Mr. Rissinger?-A. Very well.

Q. W. W. Rissinger?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where is his home—A. His home is in Scranton.

Q. You were his attorney in 1908 with reference to some litigation against the insurance companies?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. State briefly what the character of that litigation was .- A. Well, I had several suits for him, but the one bearing upon this question was a case against several insurance companies arising out of a fire on the property belonging to the Plymouth Coal Co., I think the name of it was. The Rissinger Bros. were the stockholders and the sole stockholders in the company. Suits were brought in the local courts of Luzerne County against the insurance companies. Those that could be moved into the United States court, of which I think there were two or three, were moved by the insurance companies into the United States district court at Scranton.

Q. I will ask you was there a separate suit against each insurance company?-A. Yes, sir; on each policy.

Q. When were those that were removable removed to the Federal court?—A. I do not know when they were removed, but they were tried, I think, in October or November, 1908. Q. Who was the presiding judge of the district court?-A.

Judge Archbald.

Q. Did you try the cases?—A. There was one case called. The plaintiff established his case as to this one suit, and a motion was made for a nonsuit, which was overruled. The defendant then called one or two witnesses in the case, and after a cross-examination of one or two witnesses the counsel for the insurance companies suggested to me that we arrive at some terms of settlement. After a good deal of fencing on one side and the other we did arrive at terms of settlement. That counsel represented all the insurance companies. There was a verdict taken under certain stipulations. As I recall it now, if the whole money on all the policies was paid within 15 days, then the amount of money as fixed in that stipulation was to be accepted by us.

Q. What was the amount?-A. I can not recall the amount.

Q. Was it $23,000?—A. The whole thing was something over $20,000; it was somewhere between $20,000 and $25,000. As I *20,000; it was somewhere between $20,000 and $25,000. As 1 recall the stipulation, if it was not paid in 15 days then the whole face of the policies was to be paid.

Q. What was the amount of that?—A. $23,000, if that was the amount; somewhere between $20,000 and $25,000. Not only the amount of the policy involved in that particular trial was to be paid, but also all the other policies, as I recall it.

Q. Was W. W. Rissinger plaintiff in all of those cases?—A. He represented the Plymouth Coal Co.—I think that was the name of it—which was a corporation in which W. W. Rissinger and his brother owned almost all the stock, if not all the stock,

Q. After this case was tried did Rissinger see you with reference to a note signed by Judge Archbald?—A. Mr. Rissinger came to my office in Wilkes-Barre; I can not give dates, but I know it was some time previous to the meeting of the short session of Congress in December.

Q. Let me ask you, was it within the 15 days in which the insurance companies had to pay the judgment?—A. Talking from memory, I believe it was.

Q. Just state what he said to you.-A. He came into my office and asked me if I could get a note of $2,500 discounted for him in a Wilkes-Barre bank. I said to him, "What do you want this money for?" "Why," he said, "I want to raise it in order to pay something on a gold speculation that I have in Honduras."
I looked at him, and I said, "No; if I took this note over to my bank"—the bank in which I am a director and vice president— "and told them what you wanted this money for, they would laugh me out of the room, and think that I was as big an idiot as you are and as are many other idiots that we have in this as you are and as are many other intois that we have in this county and in Lackawanna and the coal regions who put their money in Colorado gold mines and Utah gold mines, and have no return for it," I said, "except simply pure salt." "Sometimes it makes them dryer for more," I said.

Q. Did you look at the note?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who was on the note so far as you learned from Mr.

Plastinger? A. Mr. Bissinger's mother-in-law and Judge Arch-

Rissinger?-A. Mr. Rissinger's mother-in-law and Judge Archbald.

Q. How were they on the note—as makers or as indorsers?—A. I do not know. I did not ask that at all. I do not know whether as makers or indorsers.

Q. What did he say, if anything, about Judge Archbald's connection with the gold scheme in Honduras?—A. I asked him who was in the matter with him, and he said his mother-in-law and Judge Archbald.

Q. Did you discount the note?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you recommend the discounting of it to your bank?-A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you if, after that, you had a talk with Mr. Reynolds, the attorney for the Marian Coal Co. in the suit which has been testified about here?—A. I think I had; yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. I object to any conversation occurring between Mr. Lenahan and Mr. Reynolds in the absence of Judge Archbald, unless it was brought to Judge Archbald's attention. There is no evidence of any partnership or conspiracy between any of these gentlemen and Judge Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Was Judge Archbald present when you and Reynolds talked?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Did you ever tell Judge Archbald the substance?—A.

Mr. Manager STERLING (to Mr. Simpson). Take the witness.

Cross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Lenahan, am I correct in stating that the judgment which was agreed upon between you and your colleague on the one side and Mr. Shattuck, representing the insurance companies on the other side, was entered at once?-A. Well, I suppose it was. I was the trial lawyer, and Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Welles were concerned in the case with me. They were associated with me in it. They drew up all the formal papers. They live in Scranton, and after the verbal arrangement had been entered into I took the next train and went home.
- Q. But the whole matter was concluded to go into the form of a judgment, and the only thing that was left open was the delay in payment at the request of the insurance companies' counsel?-A. Yes, sir; that was my understanding.

Q. Now, was there any difficulty about that case?-A. Well, there was difficulty in getting it tried.

Q. You mean the delay in getting it tried?—A. Yes. in Congress here, and I could not go up to see to it until the time I did go there.

Q. Was there any substantial merit in the defense?-A. I did not think there was; otherwise, I would not have brought suit against the insurance companies.

Q. Did the counsel on the other side admit to you that there was no substantial merit in the defense?-A. After we got to cross-examining his chief witness, he turned around to me and said, "I guess the bottom has fallen out of our case." I think that is the language he used. Then the negotiation for a settlement was opened.

Q. Your cross-examination of the witnesses produced by the insurance companies, so far as it went, was, I believe, quite severe, was it not?—A. It was understood by me to be very severe.

Q. And it was so severe that Judge Archbald-

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to taking the time of the Senate now with immaterial things. It is not crossexamination.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that all that related to that trial, about which Mr. Sterling inquired, is cross-examination. We ask as to a different part of what occurred. You asked him to state but one part of it and left the other out, and we want to have it all.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We asked him to state the character of the litigation.

Mr. SIMPSON. And what occurred at that trial also.
Mr. Manager STERLING. No; I did not.
Mr. SIMPSON. Excuse me, you did; but collequy is not in order. I beg the Chair's pardon.
Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the testimony because it is not cross-examination.

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) At any rate, Mr. Lenahan, the presentation of the note to you was some time after the agreement for the entry of the judgment?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. And in accordance with what occurred at that trial?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. Will you please tell us whether or not at that trial there was any partiality shown by the judge toward Mr. Rissinger or his counsel?—A. I do not think so. He called me down.
Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the witness). Do not go into the details of it at all. The only reason, I understand, why you declined to discount the note was because of the purpose for which Mr. Rissinger stated to you that the money was to be used, and beyond that you did not care to go any further into it?-A. No,

Q. Was Judge Archbald's name mentioned at all to you when that note was being presented?—A. I asked him who was interested. My recollection is, I said, "Who is interested with you in this gold mine in Honduras," and he told me that his mother-in-law—whose name I can not recall—and Judge Archbald were interested. I said, "Are they on the note?"—that is my recollection—and he said, "Yes." I assume they were on as indorsers and not as makers of the note.

Q. Was what has been said about the only mention made to you of Judge Archbald's name? Was that the only thing that was said?—A. Yes; that was all.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) He said that Judge Archbald was on this note, did he not?-A. Oh, yes. My recollection is that his mother-in-law and Judge Archbald were not only interested in this Honduras gold mine, but also that they were on the note. I assume they were on as indorsers.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Rissinger why he did not get it cashed at Scranton?—A. Well, now, it is just possible I did, but I can not

Q. Do you remember what Mr. Rissinger said on that subject?—A. No; I do not; but I think it highly probable that I did ask him why he should come to Wilkes-Barre, a strange town to him, and not get his note discounted in his own town.

Mr. Manager STERLING. There is one other subject I want to ask this witness about. [To the witness:] Do you remember the time that a contribution was taken up among the members of the bar at Scranton and in the county for Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About when was that?—A. It was when he went to Europe, I think, in 1910.

Q. Were you solicited to contribute to that fund?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?-A. My recollection is that I received a letter from the clerk of the district court, named Searle, and in response to it I sent him a check. When I testified before the Judiciary Committee I did not know that my attention was to be called to it, and I said it was either $10 or $25 that I sent. I now know that it was $25 that I sent.

Q. You did contribute that $25?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it that wrote you the letter asking you to contribute?—A. My recollection is that it was Mr. Searle, the clerk of the district court.

Q. What was the date of that?—A. Well, I can not tell. It was a short time before Judge Archbald sailed for Europe; I can not give the date.

Q. Was it while he was district judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or since he has been on the Commerce Court?—A. I think he was district judge then. Q. And Searle was the clerk of the court?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were a member of the bar practicing in his court?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON). Mr. Lenahan, there is one thing on the other branch I forgot to ask you. Could you tell us what year it was that the old Plymouth Coal Co. suit against the insurance company was brought?—A. Yes, sir; I fix that by the fact that it was a month or two before the convening of the short session of Congress. It was either in October or November, 1908.

Q. In this other matter, I understand that you got a letter from Mr. Searle, and you cheerfully complied by sending that check to Mr. Searle?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. To be given with other money to Judge Archbald?—A. I know I contributed the money. It is my recollection that it was to Mr. Searle that I sent the money, and it is my recollection, too, that the solicitation came from Mr. Searle.

Q. Did you have any communication at all with Judge Archbald in regard to it?-A. Judge Archbald wrote me a letter from Florence, Italy.

Q. Acknowledging its receipt?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. But I am speaking now prior to the time when the money was presented to him?-A. Oh, no.

Q. So far as you knew or know now, Judge Archbald had no knowledge of what was going to be done until the money was, in fact, handed to him?—A. I know nothing about Judge Archbald's knowledge of it, except a letter that he wrote me from Florence-it was dated from Florence-thanking me for my contribution.

Q. That was Florence, Italy, you mean?-A. Yes; Florence, Italy.

Q. After he had sailed?—A. I said "Italy," did I not? Q. You said "Florence." There are several Florences, but I assumed you meant Florence, Italy.—A. I meant Florence, Italy. I know it was not Florence, Ireland.

Q. I do not know that there is one there. Is there one there?-A. No.

Mr. SIMPSON. I was not aware that there was. I believe that is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other questions?

Redirect examination: Mr. Manager STERLING. Just to refresh the witness's recollection I desire to ask him another question. Did you not say this before the Judiciary Committee-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Give the page, please

Mr. Manager STERLING. Page 1517, near the top:

Mr. Lenahan. I asked Rissinger—of course, this was in Scranton, where he was from—I said. "Why don't you get that discounted in Scranton?" He said, "We have tried to, but I can not, and I thought on account of my relationship with you, you could get the money for me here."

A. Yes, sir. Q. You did say that?—A. Yes, sir. Now, since you call my attention to it, I think that was the answer I made him.

Q. The relationship between you and him at the time was that of attorney and client?-A. Yes; I had been his attorney for some time in several other matters.

Q. And you were his attorney in these cases that had been disposed of?-A. Yes, sir; and in other matters.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) I think you testified also, did you not, Mr. Lenahan, that Judge Archbald was not worldly-wise, and that was the reason he acted as he did in some of these matters?-A. That was my judgment about it.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. Thank you. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, this witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF FREDERICK WARNKE.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. I ask that Frederick Warnke be called. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be called. Frederick Warnke, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Your name is Frederick Warnke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Lackawanna County, Pa.

Q. What is your occupation?-A. Coal business.

Q. How long have you been in the coal business?-A. Twelve years.

Q. And you are still in that business?-A. To some extent; yes, sir.

Q. What branch of the coal business have you been engaged in?-A. Mining and-

Q. How were you engaged in the years 1910 and 1911?-A. Washing culm banks. Q. Were you ever the owner of a mining operation at Lorberry, in Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of that operation?—A. The character at the time of our operation was washing the culm banks. Q. Did it have any other feature aside from the culm-bank operations?-A. Yes, sir. The lease called for mining operations,

Q. Did you own that mine in fee or by lease?-A. By lease. Q. Who was your lessor?-A. The Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Do the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. sustain any relation to the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co.?-A. I presume they do.

Q. Has it the same officers?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was president of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?—A. George F. Baer.

Q. Is he also the president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co.?-A. Yes, sir; I think he is.

Q. Who was the general manager of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?-A. W. J. Richards.

Q. Where does Mr. Richards live?-A. I think his home is, or was, in Wilkes-Barre; I think he probably now lives in Pottsville.

Q. How far from the city of Scranton?-A. Pottsville? Yes, sir.-A. In the neighborhood of about 80 miles.

Q. Was he living there in the year 1911?—A. Well, his offices were at Pottsville and he is there the biggest part of his I can not say whether his residence is there or Wilkestime Barre for sure.

Q. In the course of your operation of this mine at Lorberry did you get into any difficulties with your lessor, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?—A. Yes, sir. Q. What were those difficulties?—A. When we got ready to open up the mining operation we inquired of the engineers for the mining maps to proceed to open up the inside operations. This operation had been opened up before, but had been closed for a great many years. They refused to give us the maps, stating that the lease had been forfeited two years previously under certain sections of the lease.

Q. Had you received any notice of forfeiture?-A. No. sir. Q. Had you been in continued possession of the property?-A. I am still in possession of the property; that is, to a certain extent; yes, sir.

Q. Were you surprised at the information that your lease was under forfeit?—A. I was surprised; yes, sir; at the time I heard it. A two-thirds interest was purchased from a person. by the name of Baird Snyder, who at that time was assistant superintendent of the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. He told my attorneys at the time that the Reading would acknowledge the assignment of the lease within a few days, and, being anxious to go ahead with it, I took his word for it; but the assignment to me was never forthcoming; I never got the assignment from the Reading to me of the two-thirds interest; but only two weeks before that the Reading consented to an assignment from the widow of a man named Simon Loch, who had been a representative in the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania which passed what was known as the Loch road bill.

Q. You say "two weeks before"; do you mean two weeks before you received notice of forfeiture?-A. No; before this party, Baird Snyder, sold me the two-thirds interest they consented to an assignment of that interest. At the time I found out that they said that this lease had been forfeited, they wrote me a letter and stated that it had been forfeited two years before I even took possession of the ground, so that under these conditions they consented to an assignment from widow Loch to Baird Snyder two years after the lease had been forfeited; and in that condition-

Q. How long had you been working this property when they gave you this notice?—A. Oh, I suppose probably two years, or around that neighborhood.

Q. After you received that notice upon your application for the mine maps, what did you do, Mr. Warnke?—A. I do not just remember what I did. I think I went to see Mr. Richards about it, but I always had an awful hard time to get any interview with him.

Q. What did he say to you at that interview, if you can remember?-A. I think he told me that he could not do anything in regard to the matter; that the lease had been forfeited long ago; and he would not let us go ahead.

Q. What did you do then?-A. I tried to swap him the lease or give him the rights, providing he would lease me a certain culm bank, which was in the neighborhood

Q. What was the name of that culm bank?-A. Lincoln. Q. Who owned it?-A. The Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Did Mr. Richards agree to that proposition?-A. No, sir. Q. And, then, what did you do with it?-A. I think I went to see Mr. Baer at Philadelphia. Q. Mr. George F. Baer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What interview had you with him?-A. I went over the whole matter with him, and I think he told me that I would have to take the matter up with Mr. Richards; that that was in his territory, and it was up to him to decide; yet at the time he thought-

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we can hardly hear the witness. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will speak louder, so as to be heard not simply by the manager who is conducting the examination but by the whole Chamber.

The WITNESS. I will try to do so. Mr. Baer agreed with me that if what I had said was right Mr. Richards should do something in the matter to straighten it out; but in the meantime he said,

"I will have to talk to Mr. Richards," or "You go to see him." So when I went to see him again I got the same answernothing doing.

Q. You went to see him. Did you go back to see Mr. Baer again?—A. No; I believe I sent an attorney then to him.

Q. Did he have an interview with Mr. Baer on this subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With what result?-A. Not any.

Q. Did you have any difficulty in getting an interview with Mr. Richards?—A. Always did have, more or less. I could not seem to get an answer to any of my letters or even get an interview.

Q. Did you ever fail when you went to his office to get an interview at all?—A. Yes, sir; one week I waited three days to get an interview of five minutes.

Q. After your failure to get a personal interview, and after having seen President Baer, did you write to Mr. Richards on the subject?-A. I do not remember any more, really, whether I did or not.

Q. You say you do not remember whether you did or not?-A. No: I do not believe I did; I do not believe I wrote him any

Q. If you did, did you receive any reply?-A. I believe the last letter in reply I got was when he told me that the lease had been forfeited two years previous to my taking possession of the property.

Q. Do you recall that after that time you wrote him another letter to which he did not reply?-A. I do not really know.

may have written him one, but I do not recall one.

Q. You do not remember whether you so recollected when you were before the committee of the House? [A pause.] It is immaterial; I will not press you further about that,-A. I can not recollect.

Q. After you had sent your attorneys to Mr. Baer and they had failed to get any result, did you see any other person on the subject?—A. Yes, probably; but I guess a year afterwards.

Q. Who was that other person?—A. Judge Archbald.

Q. How long have you known Judge Archbald?—A. Oh, as far back as I can remember.

Q. Did you have a personal interview with him about it?-

Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, did you request him to do?—A. I asked him if he ever got to Wilkes-Barre, or, in the first place, I asked him if he knew Mr. W. J. Richards. He said he did, and I asked him if he ran across him or in his way, or if he happened to get to Pottsville, to intercede with W. J. Richards to reopen negotiations with me to try to settle my difficulties.

Q. Did he undertake to do it?—A. He told me that he would be in Pottsville in a few weeks, and if he had time he would call on him.

Q. Did he call on him for you?-A. Yes, he did.

Q. With what result?—A. Oh, I think it was at least six weeks after I had the interview with him that I called him up by phone, and he told me that Mr. Richards had told him that his answer to me was final.

Q. Do you know about what time he had his interview with Mr. Richards?—A. I think it was in December, a year ago this

Q. A year ago this December-1911?-A. Yes; I think along

Q. And how long after that time was it that you called him up and received this information from him?-A. Oh, it was four weeks after he had seen him, probably.

Q. Did you at any time thereafter give to Judge Archbald a promissory note for $500?-A. No; not I myself.

Q. Did you execute a note to be given to him?-A. The Premier Coal Co. did; yes, sir.

Q. Who is the Premier Coal Co.?—A. Composed of myself, a party by the name of Kizer, and Swingle and Slager.

- Q. A corporation or a partnership?—A. A corporation. Q. Did you indorse the note of the Premier Coal Co.?—A. Yes. Q. And was it delivered to Judge Archbald?-A. That I do not know.
- Q. Of your own knowledge?-A. Of my own knowledge; no,
- Q. Do you or do you not know of your own knowledge that he discounted it and received $500 for it?—A. I believe the note was never renewed. It was a four months' note, and I never reindorsed it, so I think when it became payable it was paid. Mr. Swingle was treasurer of the company—yes, treasurer. I guess the note was met. Whether Judge Archbald got it discounted or who did, I do not know. I did not ask and do not know to-day.
- When the note was paid, it was paid not to Judge Archbald but to some assignee of his; is that correct?-A. I do not know.

Q. The note was made payable to him in person, was it?-A. The note was made payable to ourselves, I think.
Q. And indorsed over to him?—A. Payable to ourselves.

Q. What is the business of the Premier Coal Co.?-A. Washing a culm bank.

Q. Where?-A. Oh, in Lackawanna County, near the Pittston, Luzerne County, line, on the old Pennsylvania gravity railroad.

Q. How long has it been in that business?-A. Since last spring.

Q. Did it lease or buy a bank for that purpose at that time?-A. It bought a bank under the condition virtually of a lease; the purchase money was $7,500; $2,000 down and the balance to be paid at 20 cents a ton until the other $5,500 was paid. So I could not say whether you would consider that as a lease or a mere equity.

Q. From whom did you get that?-A. The Lacoe & Shiffer

Coal Co.

londer.

Q. Did you negotiate that for the Premier Coal Co.?-A. Yes,

Q. Tell us briefly how you came to be interested in that operty.—A. I went into the office of what is known as the property .-Central Pennsylvania Brewing Co., of the city of Scranton. I have a friend who is president of that company. He told me that there had been a party in a day or so before who offered him the sale of a culm bank, and he wanted me to go down and make a test of it and report on it as an expert. I did. That is how I came to get mixed up with it.

Q. Proceed now with what transpired after that time in regard to your acquisition of the bank.—A. I reported on the bank and told him, if I remember correctly, that it was a very good purchase, and that he had better purchase it at once, as it was a very good bargain and the coal was A1 quality, and the quicker he would purchase it the better he would be off. because I thought it was a very good purchase for him to

Q. Well, did he purchase?—Λ. He took the matter up with the directors and they declined. It kind of hung fire along for about a month, and I asked him one day what he was going to do about it. Excuse, me; in the meantime I brought some of this coal up, two loads of it, and they tested it in their boilers. But that was just as it came from the bank. But I asked the president of the Pennsylvania Brewing Co., at the expiration of about four weeks, whether he intended purchasing this property or not. He told me the rest of them did not seem to care much about it, and he was not going to bother. So I said I would try to open up negotiations and purchase it myself, which I did.

I went to John Henry Jones, who first took this property to the Pennsylvania Brewing Co. I saw him about it. I asked him for information, and he told me I could get more from Judge Archbald.

Q. You could get more?—A. Could get better information from Judge Archbald in regard to the property.

Q. Did you go to Judge Archbald about it?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of information did you go to Judge Archbald for ?-A. In the first place, the conditions of the purchase, and also the character surrounding the title of the property.

Q. Why did you go to Judge Archbald about the title to the property?—A. Well, I knew that the judge in years gone by had been an attorney through there—

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not hear what the witness says. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness must speak

A. The reason I went to Judge Archbald was that I thought the judge would probably know the information better than I would get or could get by hiring another attorney, which was the question whether the Pennsylvania still owned the right of way through that property or not.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) You were referred to Judge Archbald on that question by John Henry Jones?—A. Not exactly that; but I asked John Henry Jones where I could get more data as to purchase money and the conditions of purchase money, and he said it was not on that account-

Q. Did you not say before the Judiciary Committee that you were referred to him by John Henry Jones on the question of title, and went to him as a lawyer to consult him about it?-I do not just remember. I may have said that, but if I did, I do not remember.

Q. What conversation did you have with Judge Archbald?-A. I asked him the price and conditions, and the price of $6,500 first, but that was cash. That was the price put up to the Central Pennsylvania Brewing Co. Then, if it was not cash, afterwards-some few days or a week or more had elapsed-and the price of $7,500, providing $2,000 only was to be paid in cash, and the balance, $5,500, was to be paid at 20 cents a ton royalty.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Judge Archbald on the question of title?-A. We did talk about the matter several times, and he told me he thought there was not any question about it. So I did not even go looking into the matter of title.

Q. Is that all the conversation you had with him?-A. That is about all.

Q. When did that conversation occur?-A. This spring some time-last spring; I believe along in February or March, or somewhere along there.

Q. Did it not occur in the month of December, 1911?-A. Well, I do not remember when that was first brought up; I believe it was in December; yes, it was in December that the proposition was brought to the Pennsylvania Brewing Co. But I think it was in January—it was after that—it was a month after it was brought to them before I went into it. I could not state just what time it was.

Q. How long was this conversation of yours with Judge Archbald?-A. I do not know; several different times. Maybe 10, 20, or 25 minutes at a time.

Q. And all he ever said to you on the question of title was that it was all right?—A. Yes; that he thought it was all right; that he did not think it was worth while to look into the matter.

Q. Did he disclose to you at that time that he was personally interested in the sale?—A. No, sir. The only thing I knew—in the first place, John Henry Jones told me that $500 of the $6,500 was a commission that was to be divided between him and Judge Archbald; but I thought at the time the price was raised to $7,500 that the commission had ceased so far as Mr. Jones and Judge Archbald were concerned.

Q. Did Judge Archbald tell you at any time in that conversation that he was interested in the transaction?-A. No; I do not think exactly; no, sir.

Q. Why did you give Judge Archbald or have a $500 note given to him?-A. In the first place, when John Henry Jones asked me about the $500 commission he was to receive, I told him there was not any-the $7,500, I thought, took the commission away from it, and I thought as long as they felt that way about it, the judge was entitled to something. Therefore, I told our people that we had better give him $500 for services, commission, or whatever they might call it.

Q. What did you give it to him for?-A. I thought I was giving it to him for information in regard to title, but it seems since that it was a little bit different from that.

Q. Why did you think you were giving it to him for information in regard to title?—A. Because I thought the price of $7,500, instead of $6,500, had taken the commission off.

Q. Did you have any conversation when you were at Judge Archbald's office with reference to compensating him for what he had done for you about the title in the course of 25 minutes?—A. I think we did. I told him that I would take care of him; that I would take care of him for the trouble I had put him to.

Q. Did he assent to that?—A. No; he did not consent to it either way; he did not say anything. I think one time he did say that he did not want anything; did not expect anything for that.

Q. All the trouble you had put him to up to that time was an interview of about 20 or 25 minutes.-A. No, sir; I had two or three interviews with him.

Q. Did you say this to the judge at that time?

Mr. SIMPSON. What page?

Mr. Mahager DAVIS. Page 1154:

So I asked the judge about the title, and he said he could not be my attorney. I says, "I understand you know something about these right of ways that went through this property, this Lacoe & Shiffer property." He said he did. I says, "All I want is your opinion, whether you think the title is right or wrong." He told me the title as far as he knew, and he went on to explain the right of ways, and how the Pennsylvania became in possession of it, and told me then how it was dated back to Lacoe & Shiffer. I told him then that I was thinking of purchasing this property.

You were then asked what month or year, and you stated it was sometime in December, and proceeded:

Yes. So I told the judge that his information to me, as far as the title was concerned, was just as good for me as to get an attorney, and I would compensate him for it, and he says, "No; you need not do that at all." I says, "I really consider it worth to me just as much as attorney's fees, and I would like to have you accept it from me if I purphes the property." purchase the property.

Q. Is that your statement of the interview?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. On that examination, Mr. Warnke, you testified that your reason for giving the judge this money was the information he had given you, did you not?—A. Well, I thought——

Q. You did so testify, did you not?-A. I did so testify;

Q. Do you desire to modify that statement?-A. I want to modify it this way: At that time I thought that the $500 com- I far as the love of Richards is concerned, go ask Mike.

mission had ceased when the price had raised from $6,500 to $7.500, and therefore I thought he was entitled to something for his trouble

Q. You dealt with the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. direct, did you?—A. I did after it got to a basis of how much money was to be paid down and the conditions of the lease, and so forth;

Q. What was your reason for calling on Judge Archbald to secure you an interview with Mr. Richards?—A. Well, that I could not exactly explain, any more than I just happened to think of the judge and probably thought that he might be able to have Mr. Richards reopen negotiations with me.

Q. Other men had tried the same thing for you and failed?-

A. Yes; an attorney, outside of myself.
Q. And you hoped that he could accomplish for you things that other men could not do?—A. No; I had very little hope. I did not really hope that he could accomplish it. That is one reason I did not call him up for weeks after he had seen him. It was four weeks after he had seen Mr. Richards before I ever saw or heard from Mr. Archbald in regard to his answer from Mr. Richards. So you can imagine it was very little hope that I had.

Q. It was your last shot, in other words?-A. It was my last shot; yes. Q. The last desperate remedy?—A. Mr. Richards handed it to me.

Cross-examination:

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) How long had you known Judge Archbald when you went to see him and asked him to see Mr. Richards?—A. Oh, as far back as I can remember.

Q. Was he to do anything except to see if Mr. Richards would give you another interview?-A. That was all.

Q. When testifying before the Judiciary Committee, in giving the reason which you were asked to give a moment ago by Mr. Davis, did you not say that the reason why you went to Judge Archbald was because everybody loved the man, and you thought as everybody loved him you might get a hearing and have redressed the wrong you thought had been done you?—A. Yes, sir; that was the reason. Judge Archbald was a man that was very well liked in his community, and I thought through that probably I could get some of my wrongs redressed; that Mr. Richards would probably give me another interview and probably fix things up.

How much had you in fact lost in the proceedings by which they took this lease away from you after you had been working for two years?—A. From $65,000 to $75,000.

Q. What connection was there, if any, between the interview you asked the judge to have with Mr. Richards and the matter of the purchase and the giving of the note in the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. matter?—A. Not any whatever.

Q. Was anything promised to the judge for seeing Mr.

Richards?-A. No, sir.

Q. And this note, which was given to him, the $500 note, had no connection whatever with his seeing Mr. Richards?— A. No, sir; none whatsoever.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What did he say?

Mr. SIMPSON. Nothing whatever, he said. Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Who was the acting agent for the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. in the matter?-A. Mr. Berry really was: when it got down to negotiating the terms and conditions Mr. Berry attended to those himself.

Will you give us his full name, please?-A. I think it is William H. Berry; I am not positive.

Q. Is it not John W.?-A. I am not positive as to the initials. Q. John W. Berry. The first negotiations, as I understand you, grew out of the proposition made by John Henry Jones to the brewing company?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as the brewing company turned it down, you concluded there was enough in it for you to take it up?—A. Yes.

Q. And the negotiations in relation to that matter then occurred between you on the one side and Mr. Jones and Judge Archbald on the other, until it got down to the terms and conditions?-A. Yes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have a question I should like to have propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents a question to be propounded to the witness, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

You state you appealed to Judge Archbald to get you an interview with Mr. Richards because everybody loved the judge. What reason do you have for believing Mr. Richards loved Judge Archbald?

The Witness. The Senator has got me. I would be willing to state that anybody within 20 miles of our community will bear me out in respect of the honorable Judge Archbald, but as

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Will you tell us whether or not Judge Archbald at any time made any demand upon you for any payment for seeing Mr. Richards?—A. No, sir. Q. Or ever suggested it to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. He never did. Now, coming back to the point we were at, where was the settlement made of the purchase of the fill from the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.?-A. In the Lacoe & Shiffer office at Pittston.

Q. Who were present?—A. The four members of the firm, and Mr. Berry, and I think Mr. Lacoe or Mr. Shiffer; I do not know which.

Q. Four members of which firm?-A. Four members of the Premier Coal Co.

Q. Of which you were a member?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Archbald present at the time?—A. No, sir. Q. All the money that was paid was paid to whom?-A. I think a certified check was handed to Mr. Berry.
Q. That was the $2,000 to be paid at the time of the settlement?—A. Yes. sir.

Q. And the $5,500 which was the balance for the consideration was to be paid in royalty at the rate of 20 cents per ton?-

- Q. How long was it after that settlement was made that you and your associates gave the Premier Coal Co.'s note, to your own order and indorsed by yourself, to Judge Archbald?—A. It may have been within a month or two; I could not say.
- Q. Within a month or two after that date?—A. Yes.
 Q. By the way, what connection, if any, has the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. with any railroad?-A. Not any; that is, so far as I know. But I am quite positive they have not any.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Did you give us the exact date, Mr. Witness, when you completed the purchase of the Lacoe & Shiffer dump?—A. I could not. I could not even swear to the month. I believe it was in March. It was the latter end of February or March; I am not positive; I do not remember.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) That is, of the present year?-A. Of the present year; yes.
Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be discharged so far as we are concerned.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; he is under subpæna from us. Of course, he is only discharged from attendance under the Government subpæna.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is discharged from the subpæna on the part of the managers, but will respond to the subpæna of respondent's counsel.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE F. BAER.

George F. Baer appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:
Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Where do you reside, Mr.

Baer?—A. At present in Philadelphia.

- Q. What is your occupation?—A. For the purposes of this case I am president of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal &
- Q. Are you also president of the Philadelphia & Reading

Q. Are you also president of the Finalesphia & Reading Railroad Co. or Railway Co.?—A. Yes.
Q. You are president of the Reading Co.?—A. Yes.
Q. Is the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co. a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce?—A. Yes.
Q. What is the character of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?—A. It is simply a mining company, engaged in the mining and selling anthracite and bituminous coal.

Q. What is the character of the Reading company?—A. The Reading company is a company incorporated in 1871, and it has the same powers under a special act of the assembly that the Pennsylvania company possesses, the Pennsylvania company being the company that operates the lines of railroad, as I understand, west of Pittsburgh. It is a charter that gives power to do almost any kind of business.

Q. Does the Reading company own a majority of the capital stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co.?-A. Yes.

Q. And also a majority or all the stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?—A. Yes; it owns all the stock of both the railway company and the coal and iron company, except such stock as is necessary to qualify directors.

Q. So that they are practically united through that common-stock ownership?-A. I will not say yes. I just give you what the facts are.

That is not important. Do you know Frederic Warnke? Q. That is not important. Do you know Frederic A. Yes; I met Mr. Warnke, the gentleman who was on the

Q. Who was just on the witness stand?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever have any interview with him with reference to the controversy existing between his company and your own, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., with reference to a lease held at Lorberry, Pa.?-A. Mr. Warnke came to me and said he had been involved in buying an interest in a washery, and it was impracticable to make that washery pay, with the small culm bank they had, and he wanted me to agree to lease him or his company-I have forgotten what the company was called-the culm bank of the Lincoln colliery. I told him we could not do that, that it was a fixed policy of the Coal & Iron Co. not to lease culm banks unless there was some special reason for it, and I explained what that might be. It might be a culm bank that was adjoining somebody else and we never could use it, and it might be possible therefore to make an exception to the general rule; but in all such cases the report of the vice president of the Coal & Iron Co., who resided at Pottsville and was in direct charge of mining operations, would have to be made, and special authority from the board. I referred him to Mr. Richards. Of course, I do not know what took place between him and Mr. Richards, except that Mr. Richards reported to me what the facts were, and I instructed him to say that under no conditions would we lease that culm bank.

Q. It was reported back to you from Mr. Richards?-A. Mr. Richards reported back to me that Mr. Warnke had been to We discussed at the regular meeting that we generally have once a week in Philadelphia of all the coal superintendents the propriety of leasing, and my instructions to him were peremptory not to entertain the proposition to lease the colliery; that it did not come within any exception.

Q. Were you afterwards approached on behalf of Mr. Warnke by any other person?-A. Several persons. A lawyer from Scranton-I do not remember his name-and a lawyer from Wilkes-Barre came down to see me and pled with me, and had a story of hard luck, and I simply declined. I said that our decision with regard to the matter was final.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Can you tell us about when it was you had that interview with Mr. Warnke?-A. Oh, I can not tell that. It must have been a couple of years ago. I have no idea, Mr. Simpson, frankly, and I would not like to fix the date. Mr. Richards probably can give you the date from his correspondence.

Q. Did you have any correspondence or conversation of any kind with Judge Archbald in regard to it?-A. None whatever.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all; thank you.

Redirect examination: (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Just one further question. Did Mr. Richards report to you at any time that Judge Archbald had approached him on behalf of Mr. Warnke?-A. After this inquiry was started in Congress, something was said in the papers about this, and one day when Mr. Richards came to Philadelphia. last winter, I believe it was, I asked him about it, and then he simply told me that Judge Archbald had dropped in to see him at Pottsville and asked him whether anything could be done. I had told him that my decision was final in the matter, and that is all he reported to me and all I know about it.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be discharged.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be finally dismissed.

TESTIMONY OF W. J. RICHARDS.

W. J. Richards appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Where do you live, Mr. Rich--A. Pottsville, Pa.

Q. How far from the city of Scranton ?- A. About 80 miles. Q. What is your occupation?—A. Vice president and general manager of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Of which Mr. George F. Baer, I believe, is president?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Frederic Warnke?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Robert W. Archbald?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you have any business transaction with Mr. Warnke in the year 1911 with reference to a coal operation of his at Lorberry, Pa.-A. Yes, sir. He had a lease on a certain coal bank from us and was an applicant for additional rights.

What period of time did those negotiations cover?-A. I should say about four years, probably.

Q. What was the status of the matter in the year 1911?—A. We refused to extend the rights.
Q. What right was it he wanted?—A. He wanted an additional bank, known as the Lincoln Bank.

Q. Was there any controversy about his right to the lease under which he was operating?—A. I did not consider it so. He made some claim that certain-

Q. There was no controversy from your point of view?-A.

No, sir.

Q. You claimed his lease had expired?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. He resisted that claim, I believe?-A. I do not know that he resisted it; he contended.

O. Did he have any number of interviews with you on the subject?-A. Yes, sir; at various times.

Q. What was your response to him at those interviews?—
That we could not lease this bank.

Q. Did Judge Archbald ever come to see you on the subject?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When and where?-A. He came to Pottsville to see me on the 27th of November.

Q. 1911?-A. Yes, sir,

Q. Was that visit preceded by any correspondence?-A. Yes, sir; he wrote me a letter.

Q. Have you that letter ?- A. Yes, sir.

Produce it.

(The letter was handed to the manager.)

Mr. Manager DAVIS. We offer that letter in evidence without further identification. The Secretary will read it.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 85.]

(R. W. Archbald, judge, United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., November 24, 1911.

W. J. RICHARDS, Esq., Pottsville, Pa.

My Dear Mr. Richards: Permit me to inquire whether you are to be at Pottsville Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning next; and, if so, whether I could see you for a few minutes? I am coming down to Pottsville on another matter, getting there Monday afternoon, and I would like to make the one trip serve both ends if possible. I could defer my coming for a day, so as to see you Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning, but would prefer the other arrangement. I endeavored to call you up by long distance this morning, but it was reported that you were out of town, and it was not known just when you would be back.

Yours, very truly.

R. W. Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Did you answer that letter?—Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of the reply?—A. (Producing paper.) I have a carbon copy of it.

Q. We will take that in lieu of the original and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 86.]

NOVEMBER 25, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. ARCHBALD: Yours of the 24th instant received to-day, and I have wired you this afternoon as follows:
"Letter received. Will be away Monday, but will be here Tuesday morning."

morning."

It will give me pleasure to meet you on Tuesday morning, as per your letter.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Did Judge Archbald appear in accordance with that engagement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What arrangement did you have with him on the subject?—A. He simply asked me as to the status of these negotiations with Warnke, and I told him that we declined to make any further leases.

Q. How long was he in your office?-A. I can not recollect, but I do not think it was more than 15 or 20 minutes.

Q. Had he any other purpose at that interview?-A. No, sir. Q. No other business, so far as you know?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Did you have any other correspondence or conversation with Judge Archbald in regard to this matter?—A. No. sir.

Q. And you have given us, as far as you can now recall it, the substance of all that occurred during the time he was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. The witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Finally?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, sir.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be finally discharged.

EBEN B. THOMAS.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, Mr. Eben B. Thomas we will not need as a witness, and we therefore ask that he may be discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection, Mr. President. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered. TESTIMONY OF ALTON KIZER.

Alton Kizer appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Where do you live, Mr. Kizer?—A. In Scranton.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Real-estate broker; principally real estate and builder.

Q. Do you know Judge Robert W. Archbald?—A. I do. Q. Do you know Mr. Frederic Warnke?—A. I do.

Q. Are you a member or a stockholder of the concern known as the Premier Coal Co.?-A. Yes; we have organized a concern that we call by that name.

Q. Who compose that corporation or partnership, whichever it is?—A. Walter Schlager, S. H. Swingle, and Frederic Warnke, and myself.

Q. Who is president of the corporation?—A. Mr. Warnke. Q. And who is its secretary and treasury?—A. Mr. Swingle. Q. Where are your offices, Mr. Kizer?—A. Mears Building, 8, 10, and 11, Scranton, Pa.

Q. Did your corporation, to your knowledge, ever execute a note to Judge Robert W. Archbald for $500?—A. There was a note of $510 executed, made payable to ourselves and given to

Q. Payable to yourselves and then indorsed by yourselves?-

A. Indorsed by ourselves; yes, sir.

Q. And delivered to Judge Archbald?-A. Yes.

When and where was that note delivered to him?-A. At the Mears Building. I do not know just the exact date: some time in April, I believe.

Q. Of this year?—A. Yes. Q. At your offices?-A. Yes.

Q. Was it delivered to him in person?—A. I think so.

Q. Did he come to your office for the purpose of getting it?-

Q. Who made the delivery to him?—A. There seems to be a little uncertainty about the delivery. Mr. Warnke thought it was me, but it was either Mr. Swingle or myself. At any rate, it was one of us, or both of us.

Q. Were you present at the time?—A. Yes.

Q. Had he any other errand to your office at that time?—A. Well, none that I know of. He might of dropped in to pass the time of day, but that was the principal errand.

Q. Had any arrangement been made in advance for his coming at that time to get the note?-A. I do not know that there had.

Q. Did you deliver it to him of your own motion or by direction of some of your associates?—A. Well, we had agreed. That was a part of the purchase price of the coal bank, and it was simply in readiness. Instead of paying the cash we simply made it in a note and included the discount.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we can not hear the witness in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness has been warned three or four times to speak louder.

The Witness. I am unable to get my voice up. I am not used to speaking in the Senate Chamber. That seems to be the trouble. I will get more used to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Preced with the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Proceed with the witness, Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Who wrote the note?—A. The treasurer, Mr. Swingle, as I remember it.

Q. Who signed it on behalf of your company?—A. He would also sign it as treasurer.

Q. Has that note ever been paid?—A. I think so.

Q. To whom?-A. To the bank where it was discounted, I presume.

Q. It was discounted, was it, by Judge Archbald?-A. I think so.

Q. What bank?-A. Well, it is my memory it was the Third National Bank.

Q. Of Scranton ?- A. Yes.

Q. How many visits did Judge Archbald make to your office, do you remember, to get this note?-A. I remember one.

Q. Was there any other visit?-A. He might have come, but I remember one distinctly that I was present when he came.

Q. You mean one in addition to the visit when the note was presented?—A. No; I mean just the one.

Q. You do not know whether he made any other visits on the same errand or not?-A. He might have. I do not know that he did, and I do not know that he did not.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk to be propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri propounds the following question, which will be submitted to the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Give the full details of the conversation or conversations between yourself and your business associates relative to the payment to Judge Archbald of the $500.

The Witness. We were to pay $8,000 for the bank, out of which $500 was to be paid as commission. We paid $2,000 down, and the balance at 20 cents per ton royalty as it is taken from

Mr. REED. I should like to have the question read again to the witness

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Repeat the question to the witness, so that he may answer it fully.

The Secretary. The question is as follows:

Q. Give the full details of the conversation or conversations between burself and your business associates relative to the payment to Judge yourself and your bus. Archbald of the $500.

The WITNESS. Well, I have tried to cover that. What point is it-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will, so far as practicable, answer the question. A Senator is not allowed to propound a question orally to the witness.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the Senator can only propound a question in writing.
Mr. REED. I understand, Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can send an additional question to the desk if he so desires.

Mr. REED. I understand the rule perfectly. I wanted to have this question-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule of the Senate does not permit the Senator to do further than to send a question to the desk in writing.

Mr. REED. The rule does not prohibit my requesting the Chair to ask the witness to answer again this question. is what I am asking for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). Remember the question, and answer it as fully as you can.

The WITNESS. I tried to carry the question, and I tried to answer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Give the question to the witness; give him the paper.

(The paper was handed to the witness.)

The WITNESS (after reading paper). Well, the full details are that we were simply to pay the $500 as commission on the sale of this bank.

Mr. President, I desire to propound another Mr. REED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of the Senator from Missouri will be read to the witness by the Secretary when sent to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. What did you say to your partners and what did they say to you when you discussed the payment of the $500? What was said about Judge Archbald's connection? Give the facts fully.

The WITNESS. Well, it was simply a commission for the sale of the bank.

Mr. President, I do not think that is an answer. Mr. REED. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will look at the question and answer the particular question as to what was said. Read the question and answer it as it is written. There are two questions. Answer the first one first, and then the second.

The WITNESS (after reading the question). Well, as I before stated, we were to pay $8,000 for the bank-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let me see that question. [After examining question.] Mr. Witness, you certainly know what that question means, and you are required to answer it. Answer what was said. Read the question again—the first question. Mr. Witness, that question must be answered by you without further delay.

The WITNESS. I am trying to answer it if I can understand it. The Secretary again read the question, as follows:

Q. What did you say to your partners and what did they say to you when you discussed the payment of the $500?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a plain question, The Witness. Well, we said we would pay the $500, and they drew up a note for it—made it in the form of a note.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the second question.

The Secretary read as follows:

What was said about Judge Archbald's connection? Give the facts

The WITNESS. Well, the only connection that I know of that Judge Archbald-we had met over in Judge Archbald's office, and it was agreed among ourselves that we pay $500 commission for the sale of this bank. Seven thousand five hundred dollars was to be paid to Mr. Berry. An arrangement was made with Mr. John W. Berry of $2,000 down and the balance to be paid at the rate of 20 cents a ton to be sure he got his money before the bank would be exhausted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). You are not heard by the Senate. Why do you not speak louder?

The Witness. Well, I am endeavoring to.
Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) You say you were at Judge Archbald's office?—A. We were at Judge Archbald's office.
Q. When?—A. Well, I can not give the date—just a little

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the manager proceeds, there is another question, sent to the desk by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], which will be read by the Secre-

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. State, as nearly as you can, all that Judge Archbald said when he came to your office; and what was said by you, or in your presence, to him.

The WITNESS. Well, as I remember, Judge Archbald came in, and he was given the note for $500. I do not know just the exact conversation that did take place, but we understood he was to receive the $500. There was some talk as to the titlewhether the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. owned the tract or the Laurel Line or Lacoe & Shiffer. We probably went over that. We may have talked with the judge about it. We had an attorney with us who represented us. We were over in the judge's office, and from there finally we went down to—I am getting now to the time when we closed the transaction—we went down to Mr. Berry's office at Pittston, and the matter was closed up, and we made the final payment. We were represented by an attorney. That is the sum and substance of the whole trans-

Mr. Manager DAVIS. Is there any other question on the part of the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no other question on the part of the Senator.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) When was it that you were at Judge Archbald's office?—A. Well, I can not give you just the date; I have not anything to recall the date, except the fact we were there. The date I could not just give you.

Q. How long before you closed the deal?—A. Well, just about that time, because we went down within a day or two or the same day or the following day with Mr. Berry. There were some other little transactions there. There were some things that the attorneys had to look up—the records—to see whether they had full right to it. This had originally been a Pennsylvania Railroad fill, and probably had changed hands once or twice, and the ownership was a question. That is, we thought that it might be a question as to whether Lacoe & Shiffer had the legal right to the fill.

Q. Let me ask you, were you buying the fill outright or buying a lease on it?—A. Well, originally we were to buy it outright; but it finally developed, as we went along the lines, that it was to be in the form of a lease, with a certain payment of $2,000 and the balance at-

Q. Did Lacoe & Shiffer own it outright or did they own it under a mining lease?—A. No; I think they owned it outright.
Q. You say you "think"; you certainly know.—A. They owned it outright; at any rate they signed the papers, and it satisfied our attorneys; so they must have owned it outright.

Q. Who was with you at Judge Archbald's office ?- A. Well, I think we were all there—the parties interested.

Q. Name them .- A. Mr. Swingle was there and Mr. Schlager --I am not positive whether Mr. Warnke was or not-and I was there.

Q. Anyone else?-A. Our attorney was there.

Q. Who was your attorney?-A. Mr. Houck. Q. Why did you go to Judge Archbald's office?-A. Well, it seemed that we went over there with the thought that the judge possibly had something to do with or had some interest in the bank as to the sale of it.

Q. You say you "think" and "possibly." You know why you went to Judge Archbald's office. Why was it?-A. That would be the reason we went there-to try to complete the negotiations for this bank.

Q. Why did you think that Judge Archbald had some interest in the sale of it?—A. Well, going back, this was brought to my attention, that there was a certain bank that might be had. I do not know how it did develop, but, at any rate, it developed that we understood that Judge Archbald had something to do with the sale of this bank. Therefore we simply went over to Judge Archbald's office.

Q. Who brought it to your attention that there was a bank you might get?—A. Mr. Swingle, originally.

Q. Is that all the information you had about Judge Archbald's connection with it before you went to his office?-A. That is practically what we had about it.

Q. He did not own the bank, did he?—A. No; I do not think so.

Q. You knew that fact?—A. I knew he did not own it.

Q. What information had you personally about his connection with the deal before you went to his office?-A. I do not know that I had any, except that he was interested in the sale of the bank

Q. In what way?-A. Well, that developed later-in the way of a commission.

Q. You did not know at that time, then, that he had a commission on it? Is that true?-A: No; I did not. Q. What conversation did you have at Judge Archbald's office?-A. Well, it finally developed, as we were along the lines of the negotiation, that we were to pay him the $500 commis-

Q. For what?-A. For the sale of the bank if we completed the negotiations.

Q. What did he have to do with your completing the negotiations?—A. Well, there was considerable to do. Q. What?—A. They had to find out who was the owner. is not as easy a thing to find out who is the owner of a culm pile as it seems to be. There is this one claims to own it, and another one claims to own it, and that was the main thing to ascertain, if possible, who was the owner or who to go to.

Q. What help did he give you in ascertaining who was the owner?—A. Well, through his information we got in connection with Mr. Berry, as I remember the exact detail.

- Q. Did you not know long before you went to Judge Archbald's office the people who were in charge of the bank were Lacoe & Shiffer and that Mr. Berry was their local representative?-A. Until we went there I had never met Mr. Berry.

Q. That is not my question.—A. No; I did not.
Q. Did you not know you were dealing for the Lacoe & Shiffer dump?—A. No; at the time we went to Judge Archbald's office I had no idea who owned the dump positively.

Q. Of course, your associates knew who you were dealing with?—A. They may have; I do not know; I did not.

Q. Did you have anything at all to do with that transaction before that day?—A. The day we went over?

Q. Yes.—A. We had talked it over, and I had even gone down to look at the dump, but I had not the slightest idea who owned the dump.

Q. Do you mean to say it was not until you got to Judge Archbald's office that you knew with whom you were dealing as owners of that dump?—A. That was about the time that John W. Berry appeared there in person, and it developed that he and Lacoe owned the dump.

Q. John W. Berry appeared where in person?-A. Well, I do not know just where we met Mr. Berry—whether it was on the street, or just where; but about the time Berry came to Scranton, and finally, in the final conclusion, we went down to Mr. Berry's office at Pittston.

Q. You did not meet Mr. Berry at Scranton or somewhere else by any introduction of Judge Archbald, did you?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Then I ask you again what service it was that Judge Archbald was to render you with reference to the purchase of this property?—A. Well, I understood that on the sale of the dump Judge Archbald was to receive a commission on the dump-a pure and simple commission.

Q. And why was he to receive that from you?—A. Well, in buying and selling—we frequently pay a commission on a sale of a house and often have to-

Q. Well, you do not do it unless you have some reason for it, do you?-A. Well, if we want it and have the purchase price, why, we have got to pay it.

Q. Why was Judge Archbald entitled to demand from you a commission on the sale of this property?-A. Well, I do not know as I can say.

Q. Did you never inquire?-A. I must have inquired.

Q. What was your information?-A. I simply understood that he was to receive a commission of $500 on the sale of that culm dump, if it was sold, and we wanted the dump.

Q. What service did he render to you and your associates that entitled him to that commission?—A. Well, first of all, he seemed to have the sale of it.

Q. How did that appear?-A. Well, it appeared that way because we went over to see the judge before it was finally purchased in the way of making terms.

Q. Did he seem to be the agent for the owners of the dump?-

A. Well, perhaps not the agent, and perhaps he may have been.
Q. What did you say to him and what did he say to you on that subject?—A. Well, as I remember, he said that Mr. Berry, of Lacoe & Shiffer, had the dump for sale, and we were trying to get together. We wanted to buy it outright for cash origi-That is the way we talked it over first, but it finally developed that it took some talking back and forth, and Mr. Berry wanted a certain amount down and a certain amount per tonnage, and the judge assisted us in getting the arrangement completed.

Q. How did he assist you?-A. Well, by talking the matter over with us.

Q. How many interviews did you have with him at his office or elsewhere?--A. One; I am not positive-possibly two.

Q. And for talking it over with you there at his office and telling you that the Lacoe & Shiffer Co. owned the dump you agreed to pay him $500?-A. We were glad to pay $500 commission to get the bank, and we would have paid more for the bank if we had to. We thought it was good; it was hard to get, and we thought the commission was a fair one.

Q. Could you not have bought the dump without Judge Archbald's assistance?-A. Well, I do not know. The dump had laid there—well, for 40 years.

Q. Could you not have bought it without going over and holding that conversation at Judge Archbald's office, which seems to have been all he did for you?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to the statement of the manager that that seems to be all he did. I think it is not for the ger that that seems to be an he did. I think it is not for the manager to testify or speak on that point.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. It seems to me that that was all. But I will qualify my statement.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well, then.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. But it fairly bears that construction without any explanation. Read the question.

The Reporter read the question.

The WITNESS. I do not know whether we could or not. We did not try any other way.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Was your next interview with Judge Archbald on the subject at the time when he came to your office to get the note?-A. I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember what time of day he came to your office for that purpose?—A. Well, I do not know that I could tell the time of day.

Q. How long was he there?-A. Just a few minutes-probably 5 to 10 minutes-I could not say that.

Q. Did you engage in conversation with him?-A. Not particularly; no.

Q. Did anyone in the office engage in conversation with -A. I do not think so.

Q. Do you mean to say that he simply came in and got the note and went out without the exchange of any words?-Well, we might have talked the matter over. I do not remember whether we did, or what we said.

Q. Did he ask you for the note?-A. I do not know as to We had it ready when he came. He may have or

Q. You do not remember distinctly that that was the only purpose of his presence there?—A. I think so.

Mr. REED. I would like to have this question propounded. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri submits a question to be propounded to the witness, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Do you want to be understood as testifying that when Judge Archbald came to your office you simply handed him a note for $500 instead of cash, and that nothing was said? There must have been a conversation about the payment and about why Judge Archbald was to be paid $500, and why a note was given instead of the cash. I want the conversation—what was said—and if you can not give the exact language then give its substance.

The WITNESS. The parties interested had already talked over as to the payment and the amount, and accordingly instead of paying cash we gave a note and included the discount, which made it cash; made the note payable to our order and indorsed it personally.

Mr. REED. I ask to have the question read to the witness and that he be instructed to answer; not to give his conclusions, but what was said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will hand the question to the witness so he can read it.

The WITNESS (after reading the question). As to the first item, we had already made arrangements to pay the $500, and had it ready, and I do not know that there was anything said. I do not know that I gave him the note. I do not know that Mr. Swingle did. I do not remember any conversation. As to the note, instead of cash we considered a note made payable to our order, so there would be no difficulty in discounting.

Mr. REED. I ask that the witness be directed to answer the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness says he does not remember what was said.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the last part of his answer was a mere conclusion, not the conversation or whether there was a conversation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness has stated that he does not remember that there was any conversation.

The Witness. I do not remember what conversation was had. I do not remember what was said, if anything.

Mr. REED. Very well. I have one more question that I would like to have propounded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the question sent to the desk by the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you understand that Judge Archbald was the agent of the owners of the dump; and if so, how did you get that understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (after a pause). Give the witness the question to read.

A. (After reading the question.) Well, that must have been my understanding, that Judge Archbald had to do with the sale of the dump; that he probably represented Mr. Berry. not know if it would be agent or just how, but we did understand that he was to have the $500 payment commission on the deal. And as to how I got that in mind, I do not know just how it did occur first. Cross-examination:

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Kizer, do you know what became of the note?—A. Finally.

Q. Yes. After it was paid.—A. We got the note back to the office after it was paid.

Q. Do you know who has it now?-A. I think Mr. Swingle has it here.

Q. You spoke of this as being a fill, possibly belonging to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. You meant the Pennsylvania Coal Co., did you not?-A. Yes; I wish to correct that—the Pennsylvania Coal Co. Let us see, now. The old gravity-

Q. The old gravity fill?-A. The abandoned bed of the old railroad.

Q. Which the Pennsylvania Coal Co. had for carrying their coal to connect with the other road?—A. Yes. I did not mean to say the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I meant the Pennsylvania Coal Co.—the old gravity system.

Q. There is no connection between the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania Coal Co?—A. None whatever. It is simply an old abandoned fill.

Q. You were asked as to any conversations in relation to the $500 to be paid. When did you first learn that there was $500 to be paid?—A. Well, I do not know just what time, but it was during the negotiations, and I remember we inquired, and we said-

Q. Just answer my questions, if you please, and we will get along very much better.—A. All right. I do not know.
Q. Who was it who said in your presence that there was $500 to be paid?—A. Well, I do not know but that it was Mr.

Q. What did Mr. Warnke say when he said that? Just give as near as you can the substance of what he said .- A. I do not know but that Swingle told me-he or Warnke.

Q. Let us take one at a time and we will get along better. What was it he said, as near as you can remember?-A. Well, that the judge was to have $500.

Q. What did Swingle say?-A. He spoke about it-well, he wanted to know whether there was going to be any more $500.

Q. That is what Swingle said, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who answered him?-A. Mr. Warnke, as I remem-

Q. What did Warnke say in answer?-A. He said, "No; that is all."

Q. "That is all." Was the $500 spoken of afterwards?-A. Among oursevles, do you mean?

Q. Yes; I mean among yourselves.—A. Why, certainly.

Q. Yes; I mean among yourselves.—A. Why, certainly.
Q. Who spoke of it next?—A. Well, we all talked it over.
Q. Can you not tell us who spoke of it next?—A. Well,
Swingle told me about the $500, anyway.
Q. What did he say when he told you about it?—A. He said that it had developed that there was $500.
Q. To be paid?—A. To be paid.
Q. Did he say to whom?—A. To Judge Archbald.
Q. To Judge Archbald; and what did you say when Swingle said that?-A. Well, I do not know; I said-let us see. I may have said the bank was worth it, and we were willing to pay it.

Q. You say you may have said it. Do you recall whether you did say it?—A. Yes; I did say it.

Q. You recollect you did say it?-A. Yes.

Q. Was there anything said by anybody else about it?—Well; I do not recall any special conversation.

Q. Can you recall any other conversation occurring in your presence on the part of any of the members of your company in which this $500 note was spoken of?—A. Well, I do not just recall any.

Q. Then you think you have given us now as near as you can the language of yourself and associates what it was that was said in all the interviews in which that $500 note was spoken of?-A. That is what I am trying to do.

Q. I am asking you now whether you have given all that was said about that $500 note in all the interviews, as near as you can recall?—A. I think so.

Q. Did you know that Judge Archbald had an option on that gravity fill from the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.?—A. Well, I do not know that I did.

Q. You do not remember hearing that spoken of?-A. I do not know but that I did.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. I think that is all. Mr. President, it is now five minutes of adjourning time. We may have some questions in the morning.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are not through.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is one other question that I want to ask the witness, which has been suggested to me by my col-

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Had the Premier Coal Co. or yourself, or, so far as you know, any of your associates except Mr. Warnke, any interest in the matter in dispute between Mr. Warnke and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.?-A. Nothing whatever. We had no lawsuits pending in any court anywhere.

Q. Was there anything said at any time to the effect that this $500 was to be given or any payment of any kind to be made to Judge Archbald for anything he would do in that other matter?-A. Nothing whatever. It was simply the payment on the sale of the bank.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two questions sent to the desk by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Craw-FORD] that will be propounded, if there is time.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Of course I recognize that the managers have not the right to make a motion to that effect, but I respectfully suggest that the managers desire the time of the session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment extended this afternoon until we have concluded the examination of this witness, which I hope will not be very long

Mr. Manager DAVIS. I think I have but one additional question, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to ask unanimous consent, as it is said a short additional time will be required to complete the examination of this witness, that the order of the Senate be so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment shall prolong its session beyond 6 o'clock until the examination of this witness may be concluded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary will propound the first question which has been sent to the desk by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr.

CRAWFORD1.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Is it customary in your locality for the buyer of property to pay a commission to the agent representing the owner who sells it?

The WITNESS. Will you read it again?

The question was again read.

The WITNESS. It is, very frequently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the next question propounded by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford].

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Do you mean to say that while Judge Archbald was agent for the seller of the dump he accepted a commission from the buyer of it?

The WITNESS. Well, I do not know that he was agent. He may have had an option, and at any rate I know we paid

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You are not to direct your answer to the Secretary. You are speaking to the Senate now, and you should talk out louder, so that everyone can hear.

The WITNESS. Will you give me that question again? [The question was handed to the witness.] The commission may have been from the fact that he held the option on the thing.

We have frequently paid commissions. I mean to say we paid a commission on the sale of the dump-$500.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) You say one of the questions you took up with Judge Archbald was the matter of the title?-A. We talked it over with Judge Archbald, notwithstanding the fact that we were represented by an attorney.

Q. And your doubt about the title arose from the claims of the Pennsylvania Coal Co. Was the title that you feared the possibility of the title of the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?—A. This portion was a fill on the old Gravity bed, and it had been abandoned. It developed that Lacoe and Shiffer, who owned land around there when the road was abandoned—if the old Gravity Railroad did not have a deed for it, it reverted back to the original owner. Therefore there was a question whether the parties owning the land adjoining it would be the legal owners or it would still remain in the possession of the old Pennsylvania Gravity Railroad, long since out of existence-probably 20 years.

Q. That Pennsylvania Gravity Railroad was the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?-A. Yes; and they used this road to take coal to market.

Q. But you say the Pennsylvania Coal Co. had no connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I believe that was your statement?-A. No; it was that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co .what we know now as the Pennsylvania Railroad Co .- has no connection whatever.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that the Pennsylvania Coal Co. is one of the operating companies owned by the Eric Railroad Co.?—A. They were purchased by the Eric—all the holdings.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that Mr. W. A. May is vice president and general manager of the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?—A. I believe he is; yes.

Q. Also vice president and general manager of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?—A. That is his title, as I understand.

Q. One and the same man?—A. Yes.

Q. I believe that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] has sent a question to be propounded to the witness. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Is it customary in your country for a man to act as the agent of the owner of property in the sale thereof and at the same time to act as the attorney of the purchaser in the examination of the title?

The WITNESS. As to examining the title, we were represented by an attorney who satisfied us as to the legal points of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You are not answering the question, Mr. Witness.

The Witness. I would say no.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Well, that is an answer to the question. The witness says "No."
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, this witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be finally discharged?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be excused finally.

SUBPŒNA AND DISCHARGE OF WITNESSES.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I desire that the following witnesses may be discharged: James F. Bell, V. L. Petersen, and W. L. Pryor. We agreed to discharge Mr. Pryor the other day, but there seems to have been some misunderstanding about it. Also John M. Robertson may be discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Petersen and Robertson are under our subpœna, and we wish to have them kept.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witnesses whose names have been read by the manager will be discharged from liability to the managers, but a summons will be issued on behalf of the respondent to the two who have been named by counsel.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As far as Pryor and Bell are concerned, we do not care to have them retained.

C. H. VON STORCH AND W. M. RUTH.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. C. H. Von Storch and W. M. Ruth have been duly subpænaed on behalf of the managers on the part of the House to appear here as witnesses. The process has been regularly served upon them, as shown by the return of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and I wish them to be called now so that I may move for an order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will call the witnesses named.

The SERGEANT AT ARMS. C. H. Von Storch! C. H. Von Storch! C. H. Von Storch! Appear and answer the summons. W. M. Ruth! W. M. Ruth! W. M. Ruth! Appear and answer the summons.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I ask for the adoption of the order which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the order.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That attachments do issue in accordance with the rule of the Senate of the United States for C. H. Von Storch and W. M. Ruth, witnesses heretofore duly summoned in this proceeding on behalf of the managers of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be issued in accordance, unless there be objection on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 14, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, draw us by Thy holy influence to that nobility of soul without which the ideal home can not be, without which the pure patriot can not be, without which the real statesman could not be, without which pure and undefiled religion could not exist; that our homes may be pure and holy, our Republic rich in citizenship, strong in statesmanship, and our faith be deep and ever abiding in Thee, O God our Father.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Journal shows, from the reading, that on yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ansberry] moved to reconsider the last three votes, as I understood, relating to the contested-election case. BERRY and myself both made motions and asked that they lie on the table. The gentleman from Ohio did not vote with the majority on the last proposition, and would have no right to make a motion to reconsider on that. I take it that if the Journal shows that he did make the motion and no point of order was made upon it that would settle it. The SPEAKER. The Chair understood, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ansberry] made his motion, that he made it with reference to the committee resolution. Of course the point stated by the gentleman from Illinois is absolutely correct. What suggestion has the gentleman to make?

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to have the Jounal corrected in that respect if the Speaker holds that, the motion having been made and no point of order having been made as to the right of a gentleman to make it, it is too late to make the point of order after the matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Journal ought to be changed to conform to the fact, and that is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] made the motion to reconsider on the committee

Mr. MANN. On the substitute and on the committee resolution, and I made the motion to reconsider on the Palmer reso-

The SPEAKER. And that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the motion to reconsider on the Palmer resolution. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected to show the facts as stated by the Speaker. There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on page 498 of the Record of December 11, on the vote to recommit, I am recorded as voting "present." By arrangement with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collier] I had supposed that I was paired with another gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], who was sick. Consequently I did vote "present." I desire to state, however, that by some misunderstanding Mr. Sisson was paired with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HANNA], and that if there had been no such misunderstanding and I had been at liberty to vote, I would have voted "yea" on that motion.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent for one minute and a half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Col-LIER] asks unanimous consent for a minute and a half. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, on the day the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson] mentions, I was authorized by my colleague, Mr. Sisson, who was sick, to pair him with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson]. The gentleman from Minnesota left it to me to attend to the arrangement of the pair, and I thought that he had been properly paired. He stated at the time that he was opposed to the bill. I make this statement in justice to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson], because he left the arrangement with me, and I thought he was properly paired.

The SPEAKER. Is there anything that the gentleman from Minnesota asks to have done about this?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think that there is anything that can be done, unless it be to leave the statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how it could be.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 66.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 19, 1912, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock m. on Thursday January 2, 1913.

ALLEGED CRUELTIES IN PERU.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record some press notices relative to alleged atrocities and cruelties practiced by the agents of the rubber trade in Peru upon the helpless Indians of that country, to be printed in connection with the resolution that I am going to introduce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print certain excerpts from publications concerning alleged cruelties in the rubber trade in South America. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. How much of this is there?

Mr. KINDRED. It is very short, less than a third of a column.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

COURTHOUSE, HELENA, ARK.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3436) to grant to Phillips County, Ark., certain lots in the city of Helena for a site for a county courthouse.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

ment be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (No. 1268).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (8. 3436) granting to Phillips County, Ark, certain lots in the city of Helena for a site for a county courthouse, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
KNUTE NELSON,
MARK A. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Ford the Schack.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the mendandent of the House of $24 per month.

Managers on the part of the House.

The name of Campany is altered to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and imitations of the pension and increase and

Phillips County, Ark., submit the following written statement, explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The House amendment is self-explanatory and is as follows:

Add the following proviso to the bill:

Provided, That upon the discontinuance of the use of this property for public purposes it shall revert to the United States.

The effect of the agreement at the conference is to recede from said amendment and to leave the bill as the same originally passed the Senate.

Jos. T. ROBINSON. JAMES M. GRAHAM. Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 27062) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which bill is on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. As this is the first bill of this character that has been considered at this session, I suggest that the gentleman move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole. It probably will not take any longer.

Mr. ADAIR. We have been considering these

Mr. ADAIR. We have been considering these bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole. This is a very short bill. Mr. MANN. I suggest that it is proper that at least one of these bills be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ADAIR. Does the gentleman object?

The SPEAKER. It is not a question of objection.

Mr. ADAIR. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of pension bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills in order this day under the rule, with Mr. Cullor in the chair.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment if no general debate is desired. The Chair hears no request for general debate.

The bill is as follows:

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22 on page 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 7 by striking out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18 on page 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 22, by striking out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 32, lines 7, 8, 9, and 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 32, by striking out lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, which reads as Amend, page 32, by straing out the follows:

"The name of Carver S. Griffin, late of Company I, Thirty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I notice by this report 228 persons provided for who can not receive the amounts provided in this bill under the general pension laws. I call on you to strike name on page 67. The party is 65 years of age; he entered the service February, 1864; he served until July, 1865, after the war; he was pensioned under the act of 1862 at $14 a month.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this man is pensioned under the general pension laws recently enlarged by the Sherwood Act, and this man's property is estimated to be worth $1,800. Usually a man's property is estimated at about one-third of what he is really worth. I dare say in all probability he is worth $5,000. But, take it at the estimate here, at the last term of Congress we passed a general act applicable to all known as the Sherwood Act. This man is not taken out of the class to which that act applies, except he is worth money. Now, then, the committee comes in here and proposes to give this man a bonus because he has got property. The very first opportunity after the passage of the Sherwood Act on the first pension day of this session we have discrimination between soldiers. Members will recall the statements made in the discussion of the Sherwood bill, and the country will remember how pension leaders stood here and promised the House that if it would pass the Sherwood bill they would not bring in any more of these bills, and that special bills would almost disappear from this House; that the Sherwood bill would relieve the need of special pensions. Two hundred and twenty-eight special pensions on the first pension day after the Sherwood bill became a law! And the case I move to strike out discriminates against the old soldier, who has no property and needs help, in favor of a short-service soldier only 65 years old and has property, and I think the House should strike his name from the list.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost,

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cullop, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 27062) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amend-ments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass,

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amend-

There was no demand for a separate vote.

On motion of Mr. ADAIR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill; and pending that motion, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from South Dakota how much time is desired on that side for general debate?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We desire on this side 1 hour and 15 minutes

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman willing to eliminate the speech that was delivered yesterday, which was not specially on the bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not see how I can. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That would only allow us 25 minutes on this side.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not want to take any advantage of the gentlemen on the other side if they think they want more time. I think we can get through in an hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will reduce the time to an hour on that side and give us half an hour, for the reason that the speech yesterday, as is well known, ought not to be charged to us.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, it is one of the few speeches on the subject of Indian affairs that has been delivered in general debate on the Indian bill for some time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is true, but I do not think we ought to be charged with it, because it was a speech on the general question involving the rights of Oklahoma Indians known as the Mississippi Choctaws. We are not repudiating the speech at all.

Mr. MANN. How much time is desired on that side?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will take 30 minutes and allow the other side an hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. We want the same time on this side that you take on that side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If we take an hour on this side, how much time will the gentleman take on that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was going to suggest that we have an hour and 15 minutes on this side and the gentleman from Texas take 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think the time should be equally divided be-tween the two sides. You will never do away with that principle in the House with my consent.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Illinois is going to object, we can not make the agreement.

Mr. MANN. Divide the time equally between the two sides;

whether it will be all used on this side or not I do not know.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then we will make this agreement, that on this side we have one hour, and the gentleman take enough on that side to make it even with what we had that is, an hour and 45 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is entirely satisfactory, and I shall ask for 1 hour and 45 minutes upon this side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and pending that ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours and 45 minutes, 1 hour and 45 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] and 1 hour by myself, this side having already used 45 minutes in general debate on yesterday.

The gentleman from Texas moves that the The SPEAKER. House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; and pending that asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours and 45 minutes, he to control 1 hour of that time and the gentleman from South Dakota 1 hour and 45 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill II. II. bill, with Mr. Robinson in the chair.
bill, with Mr. Robinson in the chair.
Mr. Chairman, I will ask the sideration of the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation gentleman from South Dakota to consume some of his time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am going to discuss for a few minutes the appropriation bill which is now before the committee, and am going to call the attention of the committee to some conditions that prevail among the Indians in Oklahoma that I think will be of interest to the House, and conditions that ought to be brought to the attention not only of the House but to the attention of the country. I want to say with reference to the pending bill that there is not much in it that does not meet with my approval. The bill, so far as the appropriations are concerned, has been held down so that there can not be very much criticism of the amounts that are carried in it, as a whole. The bill is also free from claims and new legislation, and I will state further that, following precedents established in the Sixty-first Congress, it is drafted with a view, wherever it is possible under the law and without violating treaty obligations, to make appropriations from the funds of the Indians for their support rather than from the Federal Treasury. So, speaking generally, I can say this is a good bill, with one or two exceptions, and it is to the exceptions that I will direct my remarks.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, in the State of Oklahoma there is about one-third or a little more of our Indian population, and it will be observed in this bill, as well as in other legislation that has been from time to time before the House, that invariably there are exceptions made with reference to the general rule applied to Indian legislation, when it applies to Oklahoma, and this bill departs from the rule adopted by the committee in that it contains one item of important legislation, and the only appropriation that is not estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury. It also reduces very materially the appropriation for administrative purposes among the Indians in Oklahoma below what has been estimated, and to a point where there is practically not a dollar provided for administering the affairs of the Indians, so far as supervision is concerned. The appropriation proposed is simply to pay the expenses of the commissioner in charge of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the expenses incident to his office for the purpose of closing up their affairs and settling their estates and distributing among them the large sums of money they have to their credit. There is nothing contemplated for supervising the affairs of the individual restricted Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand there is a justification of the item to which the gentleman refers. It was filed with the chairman of the committee after the hearings were had the other day and after the bill was reported favorably. It justifies that item.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Congress there was an effort made to reduce the appropriation for administrative purposes in the Five Civilized Tribes so as to eliminate what are known as district agents, and if the appropriation carried in the pending bill is adopted the district agents will be discontinued at the end of this fiscal year. I called attention last year to the necessity of continuing the district agents; that it is through them the incompetent or restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes are protected and their affairs are supervised under the direction of the Interior Department, and, as I have just stated, if the appropriation carried in this bill is the amount that is finally appropriated when the bill becomes a law, it will be impossible in the Five Civilized Tribes to continue in the next fiscal year the district agents, and the gentlemen from Oklahoma on the other side of the House do not hesitate on every occasion to state that they want to eliminate the district agents, that they want to drive out of Oklahoma in the Five Civilized Tribes so far as possible Federal supervision of the affairs of the Indians. There is no dispute between us on that point. They frankly acknowledge it.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentle-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And when I speak of gentlemen from Oklahoma I am referring particularly to gentlemen on that side of the House and did not have in mind my friend from Oklahoma, Mr. Morgan. I have stated that when we legislate with regard to the Indians we invariably follow a different rule in Oklahoma than we follow with regard to the Indians generally in the country.

I have in mind a general law passed by Congress with reference to administering the estates of deceased Indians. something to do with its passage. It placed the jurisdiction exclusively in the Interior Department, but when the law was being considered our friends from Oklahoma, always alert to protect what they believe to be in the interest of their State, excepted from its application the Indians in Oklahoma. An act was passed as to Oklahoma, giving the jurisdiction in such matters to the probate courts of that State. It is the act of May 27, 1908, and it reads as follows:

That the persons and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. Chairman, on former occasions I and others on this side of the House have questioned the integrity and the honesty of the probate courts of Oklahoma, and I want to say right now in the outset that, in my opinion, the probate courts in that portion of Oklahoma where the Five Civilized Tribes reside some of the judges are corrupt and dishonest and a large number of them are indifferent in the discharge of the duties of their office, so far as the affairs of Indian minors and Indians generally are concerned, and particularly in guardianship matters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I certainly will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. The statement made by the gentleman, or the charge made by the gentleman, of course, is a very serious onethat the probate courts and probate judges in such portions of Oklahoma are either indifferent to the care of the wards of the court or are dishonest and desirous, practically, of depriving the wards of their property. I hope the gentleman will not make such a statement in the House unless he has some proof to submit to the House on that matter.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, if my good friend from Illinois will be patient for a few moments, I think before I conclude that the House will see that I am fully justified in making the statement that I have made.

And I will go further than that, Mr. Chairman, by making this statement: That if a Representative from that portion of Oklahoma where the Five Civilized Tribes reside wants to perpetuate himself in office and make a record that will meet with the approval of his constituents he wants, on all occasions, to see to it that as much money is obtained from the Public Treasury as is possible to be expended in Oklahoma; that he also should see to it that legislation be secured removing from the Indians much of the protection that they have now from the Federal Government, so that there will be very little supervision over their affairs by the Government; and, furthermore, to secure legislation so that expenses for administrative purposes, money for a part of the expenses of administering the affairs of the Indians that heretofore has been paid out of their own funds in accordance with the law, so that in the future it will be paid out of the Federal Treasury. In other words, anything accomplished that will put money into Oklahoma or take away the restrictions from the Indians in that country and compel the United States to pay administrative expenses that otherwise ought to be paid, and have heretofore been paid, out of the funds of the Indians themselves makes whoever is responsible for it popular with the people in eastern Oklahoma. In the pending bill there has been eliminated a provision of the bill that was estimated for and was in last year's bill, which provides that certain expenses of administration, so far as the sale of lands, collection of rents, and so forth, shall be paid from the funds of the Indians, received from the sale of lands, rents, and other sources.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman,

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think it is entirely good form for him, the ex-chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and ranking member of the minority on the committee at this time, when every item in this bill was agreed to by unanimous consent, to come on the floor of this House and seek to make any portion of the bill appear bad that he did not try to make appear bad when the bill was under consideration?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think, Mr. Chairman, without divulging anything that transpired in the committee, the gentleman knows I am not violating any understanding that may have been had among the members of the committee in commenting upon certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. It is a fact that every item in the bill was agreed to unanimously, is it not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not say that, Mr. Chairman. I do not care to go into what transpired, and I understand under the rules of the House it would not be proper to state what did happen in the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, perhaps that is true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will discuss that with the gentleman at another time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be understood as casting any reflections upon our good friends from Oklahoma. The conditions in the communities from which they come, and particularly of the gentlemen who represent that portion of Okla-homa where the Five Civilized Tribes are located, are such that it probably would be impossible for them to be reelected if they took any other position. But I think I will make it apparent before I conclude that it should always be considered what the interest of a Representative may be when any question of importance is before the House. The House is aware of the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs as now constituted under the new rule, which provides that committees shall be made through a committee instead of being named by the Speaker—three members of that committee are from the State of Oklahoma; in other words, one-seventh of the committee is from that State. I merely mention that in passing.

Mr. Chairman, I have on several former occasions, and other gentlemen have called the attention of the House to the condition of affairs in Oklahoma so far as the administration of the affairs of the Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes is concerned, and particularly with reference to the manner in which the property of Indian minors has been handled through the probate courts. We have repeatedly cited a number of concrete cases where there was gross neglect if not dishonesty on the part of some of the probate judges, and the gentlemen on the other side answered it by stating that there were a few cases where there had been dishonesty and corruption, but in those cases the judges had been removed or some one else had succeeded them in office. They told us that the State Legislature of Oklahoma had passed a law giving a certain board jurisdiction to look into these questions of administration, and that the machinery for looking after these guardianship matters was entirely adequate under the probate machinery in Oklahoma and that no Federal supervision is necessary, and therefore that there is no need of employing district agents. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that since the act of 1908 was passed Congress has not caused an investigation to be made in order to ascertain in what manner the affairs of Indian minors were being administered in the probate courts of Oklahoma. But it happens that a few weeks ago the Creek Nation, under some arrangement through the Department of the Interior, caused an investigation to be made of the status of the guardianship cases in the eight counties constituting the Creek Nation. Mr. Chairman, I am going to briefly refer to that report, and will state how it was made, and then I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will say that I was justified in the statement which I made at the outset as to the probate courts of Oklahoma, at least in eight counties comprising the Creek Nation. This report was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior a few days ago and bears date November 27, and it was made by Mr. M. L. Mott and is signed

Mr. COOPER. Of what year?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. 1912. Mr. Mott happens to be the attorney for the Creek Nation. So far as I know he is a good lawyer, and I have never heard his integrity or his ability questioned. This report was made in accordance with an arrangement by which he was authorized by the Secretary of the Interior and the principal chief of the Creek Nation to expend some of the tribal moneys in going into the different counties and making an examination of the files in guardianship cases that are there pending.

Mr. Mott comments on the policy of the law with reference to guardianship matters in Oklahoma and states his objections to it in accordance with the position that I took in advocating legislation for the States generally, where there are Indians, that the administration of such affairs should be in the Department of the Interior instead of in the local courts, and he says in his report that his objections to the law is that he does not think that the local environment is such as to afford the Indian protection. And that, Mr. Chairman, is the situation generally in the Indian country, because the white people, as a rule, are not particularly concerned about their Indian neighbors, except to get what they have, and that condition being general, the policy that prevails in these localities is generally accepted and little attention is paid to what may be done affecting the Indians or their property. This report, Mr. Chairman, was made by 15 men employed under Mr. Mott's direction. They visited the different offices of the clerks of the court in the several counties in the Creek Nation, abstracting and obtaining the following information in a given number o cases: The names of the minors whose affairs are being administered, the name of the guardian, the amount handled, the sale of lands allotted or inherited, fees allowed the attorneys for the guardian, court costs, fees allowed guardians, and the total cost of administration. Accompanying the report are several exhibits which are bound and indexed, filed in the Interior Department, containing an abstract in each case which is referred to in this report, and is accessible to any Member for reference.

This information is divided into three classes. The first class comprises the cases in which administration has been in the hands of professional guardians. By "professional guardians" is meant a class of persons who make a business of acting as guardians to a large extent, and I was informed, when in Oklahoma two years ago, that there is a profession or an occupation in the eastern portion of the State known as that of a "professional guardian." I presume he is generally a pretty good friend of the court or he would not be appointed. I understand these persons are often appointed guardians in several cases at the same time.

The second class of cases is where the administration has been in the hands of competent relatives or business men; that is, where the Indian child has a parent who is competent, or some relative, or where he is perhaps only in a small degree an Indian, and has some person in his family who is entirely capable of acting, and that person becomes the guardian.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the reports in the cases of Indian guardianship, the report also includes white guardianships; that is, guardianships where there is no Indian question involved. This enables us to compare the cost of the administration in the Indian cases with white cases.

I am going to call attention to the condition of affairs that prevails in Muskogee County, as shown by this report—one of the eight counties in the Creek Nation, one of the Five Civilized Tribes, and before doing so I want to state that out of 6,900 cases, as I recall, the cases, so far as the files were concerned, were complete in only about 2,300. In the other forty-odd hundred cases the papers were either not in the files or no report had been made, and it is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that some of the files probably never will be returned, and I presume reports will not be forthcoming, and no report will ever be filed unless there is some action taken to compel them to be filed.

In Muskogee County there were 584 guardianships said to be in the hands of professional guardians. The amount handled by this class was $1,172,000.65. The amount of attorney's fees paid in those cases in that one county was $130,350.78. The amount of court costs was $43,090.57, and the amount of guardians' fees was $72,503.91. The cost of administration in that county was 20.13 per cent of the amount handled.

Now, I want the Members of the House to keep in mind the fact that in that county it cost 20.13 per cent of the amount handled to pay the expenses incident to the guardianships of Indians in cases where the guardian is a so-called professional guardian.

Mr. MADDEN. That included the $130,000, the $43,000, and the $72,000?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The whole expense was $246,000, which is 20.13 per cent of the amount handled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.
Mr. MANN. If I understand the gentleman correctly, his statement is that as to these guardianship cases taken together the cost of administration was 20 per cent of the total amount that went through the guardianships?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; of the total amount handled.

A little over 20 per cent? Mr. MANN.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; a little over 20 per "

Mr. Chairman, in this county there were 112 guardianships Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That percentage and that statement applies, as I understand my colleague, to the administration of these five hundred and odd cases which the socalled professional guardians administered?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This has to do with the cases handled by the 584 so-called professional guardianships.

The report also shows the number of cases in the hands of competent guardians. The number of cases is 112, and the amount handled $225,000, and the cost of administration of those cases was 4.2 per cent of the amount handled. Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "competent guardians"?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. When I referred to that I explained it by stating that it means the natural guardians where they are competent, or some relative. Some business man may be the uncle or some other relative of a child. It means anybody but a "professional" guardian.

Mr. MURDOCK. Either Indian or white?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. This applies only to Indians,

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am talking only about Indians now. In addition to these reports in Indian cases we have a report of 49 guardians of white minors in the same county, and the cost of the administration of the amount handled is only 1.7 per cent.

The report shows the cases in each of the eight counties comprising the Creek Nation tabulated in the same form that Muskogee County is tabulated, showing substantially the same in-formation; but I think the important thing is to come down to the aggregate.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman does that, will be yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Let us understand it. Do I understand that for the same services, so far as the court and the administration are concerned, in professional guardianship cases the cost is 20 per cent of the amount handled?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. MANN. And that in the white cases the cost is less than 2 per cent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. Mr. MANN. It looks very suspicious.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That illustrates what I said moment ago. These probate judges are conducting their offices with a view to causing no criticism from those who elect them to office, but they apparently have little concern for the Indians up in the hills and out in the swamps.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has the gentleman any segregated figures showing what these professional guardians have made in fees and what their pay was in Muskogee County?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am going to give some figures that will be interesting.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman give that?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I may not be able to give just what the gentleman asks for, but I think when I give the aggregate that will be very easy to figure out.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated what the guardians' fees were.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Would the gentleman like to know what the attorneys' fees were?

Mr. MANN. No; the guardians' fees.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wanted to know what the professional guardian got out of the transaction.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Before I get through I will give the gentleman some figures on that. Summing up the aggregate of the eight counties—for I have not time to take each county-it shows that the total number of so-called professional guardianships is 2,320.

Total amount of funds handled	$3, 896, 693, 06 346, 095, 39 138, 205, 46 279, 182, 49
Total expense of guardianship	763, 483. 34

Percentage cost of administration, as I have already stated. 19.3 per cent of the amount handled.

It also shows:

Total number of competent guardianships is 534.

Percentage cost of administration, 3.1 per cent of the amount handled.

These two classes include only guardianships of tribal minors.

This aggregate shows the total number of white guardian	aships is 203.
	$328, 536.00
Total amount of attorneys' fees	3, 117. 94
Total court costs	2, 625. 51
Total guardian fees	2, 021. 40
Total expense of guardianship	7, 755, 85

Percentage cost of administration, 2.3 per cent of the amount handled.

These figures include all guardianship cases in the Creek Nation where the record was available, and, as I have already stated, there are 4,339 cases where the information as to cost of handling could not be obtained, and further on I will refer to how much the aggregate of expenses would be if all the cases were included.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, Mr. FERRIS. I can not think that the gentleman cares to mislead the House, and I am sure the House does not want to kogee County?

be misled. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to something which will explain, at least partially, the figures he has just given.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would rather the gentleman would explain this situation in his own time.

Mr. FERRIS. It will only take a moment, and it ought to go in here.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very well. Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has criticized our courts, from one side of the State to the other, and I know he believes he is justified in doing it; but we, who know the facts, believe that his criticism can not be well founded.

The estates of Indian wards on which administration is had sometimes consists of 5 acres, 10 acres, 17 acres, 4 acres, or 33 acres, the property being probably 50 or 60 miles away from the The Indian has on numerous occasions given as high as 8, 10, 12, or 15 conveyances, which must be brought into court and canceled. The Indian gives a multiplicity of conveyances when he has no right to do it, and each of these conveyances puts a cloud upon his title. The administrator has to go and clear up this title, and the cost of administration on a miniature estate sometimes may cost more than 20 per cent of its value.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am very glad that the gentleman from Oklahoma has some explanation to make of this startling condition of affairs, a condition that I think is appalling, notwithstanding the gentleman's confidence that I am not justified in taking that position.

I want to repeat that in the eight counties the number of so-called professional guardianships is 2,320, and the total amount of funds handled is $3,896,693.06; the total amount of attorneys' fees is $346,095.39; the court costs are $138,205.46; the total guardian fees, $279,182.49; making a total of $763, 483.34.

The percentage cost of the administration of the amount handled is 19.3 per cent.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I suppose this summary applies only with reference to professional guardians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is all. The percentage cost of administering the cases under competent guardians is 3.1 per cent, and in the white cases 2.3 per cent of the amount handled, as I stated a while ago.

Mr. Chairman, I have stated that there were 4.339 cases where no reports have been filed or the papers were not in the files. I have made a computation of about how much money in the same proportion would be paid out in professional guardian cases in the eight counties in all the cases, and I find it would be about $1,600,000. Now, gentlemen, you can see that the law business ought to be prospering down there in that country, and you must remember that the Creek Nation is only a small part of the Five Civilized Tribes. If the other nations' conditions are similar to the Creek Nation, and I firmly believe they are, think of what an enormous amount of money is paid yearly to guardians, attorneys, and in court costs simply in guardianship cases alone.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It is sometimes difficult to get figures straight in your head, and therefore the gentleman will pardon me if I repeat something he has said. In the summary which the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes he computes 10 per cent as the cent of the gentleman makes the gen tleman makes he computes 19 per cent as the cost of the administration of these cases where professional guardians were appointed by the court and 3.1 per cent in the Indian cases where the natural guardians were appointed, and in the white cases 2 per cent.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; and I call attention to the suggestion made by my friend from Oklahoma, Mr. Ferris, that in Indian cases, on account of minors having small tracts of land the expenses would be more than in white guardianships, but I submit there is nothing in his argument, because there can not be any difference as to the status of minors whose affairs are in the hands of the professional guardians and those Indian minors in the hands of the natural guardians.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I suppose that the gentleman from Oklahoma would claim that Indians under natural guardians had not made so many conveyances.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the inference from what the gentleman said, but I can not see how there would be any difference, as all are Indians. One would probably have as much land as the other.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman from South Dakota

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Who certifies to the statements of Mus-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say for the information of the gentleman that there is an affidavit on file as to each case that has been referred to in this report in the Interior Department bound in book form, and there is a reference in the report where it can be found, and if the gentleman wants the details, he can go to the Interior Department and ascertain what he is asking me for.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Does the affidavit state that the clerk of the court refused to certify to the facts?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not going to get into any controversy as to what is in the affidavit. The affidavit is on file. If the gentleman can get anything out of it to controvert the showing I have made, I have no doubt he will do it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Was the report presented to the Indian Committee while it was considering the bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The report was submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House and the Senate yesterday or the day before, though I can not see what that has to do with it.

Mr. Chairman, this report does not contain very much that I think was not pretty well known by a good many members of the committee a long time before this bill was reported. We discussed this question in the last session of Congress within a year and called attention to what we believe, with reference to the manner in which cases of guardianship were being administered in the probate courts, and gave the facts in a number of cases that showed an intolerable condition of affairs.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.
Mr. NYE. What period of time does this report cover?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It covers just about four years.

Mr. NYE. The act conferring jurisdiction on the probate courts was passed by Congress in 1908?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. CARTER. Is there any report prior to the act of May 27, 1908? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have none.

Mr. CARTER. I want to ask the gentleman one question, for I know that he wants to get the facts straight before the House. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that professional guardians were appointed long before Oklahoma was a State; that they were appointed by the Federal judges in Indian Territory?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I leave it to the House to answer that question in the minds of each Member by suggesting that I do not think it makes any difference whether they existed 50 or 20 or 10 years ago. They are there at the present time, and the gentleman admits it by his last statement.

Mr. CARTER. When were they first appointed? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, there has been grafting in eastern Oklahoma ever since the white man went in there, when it was known as the Indian Territory.

Mr. CARTER. The same as they have in South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. South Dakota has never been accused of allowing its Indians to be robbed, though I have no doubt that there have been people that would not hesitate to take advantage of them if given an opportunity. I never heard of professional guardians in South Dakota, or in any other State except Oklahoma, and the gentleman's excuse for their being there is that they originated under the Federal judges in Indian Territory. He clearly admits that they exist, and I submit that is sufficient to condemn the courts.

Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to point out if it has ever been charged that there has been any grafting in South Dakota.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman himself admits there has been grafting. It is not necessary to point it out.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There are attempts to graft in every locality where there is an Indian population. Mr. CARTER. The thing I want to get straight is this: The gentleman has made a general assault on the State of Oklahoma, and what I want understood is that whatever system there may be of professional guardians that he speaks of was inherited from the Federal régime before Oklahoma became a State.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. All right-admitted.

Mr. CANNON. But does it justify it?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I leave that to the House.
Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman is making an assault upon professional guardians as a general proposition, or on the administration by these professional guardians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should want to say both, to a certain extent, but I want to particularly say that I have never hearl of professional guardians outside of the State of Oklahoma. Here is a statement in Mr. Mott's report that refers to a subclass of professional guardians that I want to read:

There might be as a subclass carved out of the class of professional guardians, one which could be properly described as an incompetent and thoroughly irresponsible class. This class is composed of adult members of the tribe who have dissipated or been swindled out of their own estates after the removal of restrictions, who have little regard for the wards in their care and who can be and are in many instances used by others connected with the administration.

This report also states, and this is seneral, because there was not time nor opportunity to verify it, viz, to ascertain how much money has been dissipated and squandered of these estates of minors under the item of maintenance, but I apprehend that if we could go into the records and find out what that is, it would be so much greater than this sum that has been expended in attorneys' fees, court costs, and guardianship fees, that this would be a mere bagatelle as compared to what that amount would be. He says:

Extravagant and totally unwarranted allowances for maintenance and personal expenses of wards have been made, all of which can be verified by the probate records, and where the allowances are aggravatingly large and unnecessary the presumption is that some one other than the ward is getting the benefit of the excessive amount.

Then he makes a statement quoting a man who at one time was a probate attorney for the district agents, that after an extensive investigation he finds there are a great number of instances in which large sums of money of minors have been loaned by guardians on totally inadequate securities, many of the loans being made to guardians themselves and members of their families, and in many instances the bondsmen of the guardians are totally insolvent. Mr. Chairman, this report further shows in each county a number of cases where the costs are extremely excessive and extravagant, that are above the average, and I presume it will be found upon investigation that it is this class of cases that were handled by these unscrupulous guardians, which he puts in a class by themselves. I find that there are in the first county six cases, the highest cost being 73.8 per cent of the amount handled, and the lowest 39.7. In the next county the highest is 71 per cent and the lowest 22 per cent. In the next one the highest is 70 per cent and the lowest 16 per cent, and then, in the next county, the highest is 60 per cent, and so it runs on through, until we find one case in Okmulgee County, where the cost of administering the amount handled is 90.5 per cent. I might go on giving figures, but it is all on file in the department and there is an abstract of each one of the cases, giving the full details. Mr. Morr, before submitting his report, took up the matter with 30 States in the Union to ascertain the average cost of administering in guardianship cases, and he has submitted that. He has corresponded with thirty-odd States, and the correspondence is on file in the Interior Department and referred to here as an exhibit, so that it can be examined. In 30 States he finds that the average cost does not exceed 3 per cent.

So it appears, Mr. Chairman, that in Oklahoma, so far as the white population is concerned, the average cost of handling guardianship cases is a little below the average of the other States in the Union, and as to Indian guardianships, where the guardian is competent, it is just slightly above the average for the other States. So, I say again, that the county judges in Oklahoma are apparently quite particular to discharge the duty of their offices to the satisfaction of the people who elect them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that there is a vast difference between Indians and Indian estates as distinguished from whites and white estates? Is it not a fact that it is sometimes almost impossible to determine who the heirs of an Indian are? Suppose the Indian has had three or four wives? It would be very hard to determine who the heirs are and to whom the property should go.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In one class of Indian cases, where they are represented by a competent guardian, the cost is 4 per cent or less.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How can a competent guardian better than anyone else determine who are the proper heirs in these Indian affairs? How can it be determined without great cost and expense?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Texas, in his usual neighborly spirit, big hearted and generous as he always is, desires to help out his friends in Oklahoma and wants to defend the condition of affairs which I am now exposing, I wish he would do so in his own time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will certainly do it.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to state in passing that some of these so-called professional guardians are lawyers, so that it can not be said that they are incompetent. The expense, though, is just as great for attorney's fees and guardian's fees, as in cases where the guardian is not a lawyer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman suggest anywhere that a firm of lawyers obtained more than $750,000 as a fee from the Federal courts which was paid in the gentleman's administration and also $330,000 costs and expenses, and that that firm was indicted in the Federal courts for $30,000 of those costs and expenses, and that the President of the United States. at the instance of the chairman of the executive committee of Texas had that case dismissed against them peremptorily? Can the gentleman state a case similar to that; if he can, I will put in a defense and not before?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am very sorry my good friend from Texas would add anything to my argument by bringing in that old scandal that happened in Oklahoma several years ago.

Mr. CARTER. It happened up here; it did not happen there. Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit, is it legitimate as a plea to set off larceny in one place by citing larceny in

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I admit it is not. larceny on the part of these attorneys who got that big fee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have stated that there has been a consistent effort to obtain legislation to make it easier to take what the Indian has, legislation removing restrictions, legislation that makes it possible for them to sell their lands, legislation that permits them to make leases, to withhold appropriations for employment of district agents who do supervise and look after the affairs of the Indians whose restrictions have not been removed. That is popular in Oklahoma. And why? Why, do you know there are several thousand lawyers practicing in the Five Civilized Tribes? You gentlemen stop and think a minute of having the bar in each county and each town and each city in your district constantly writing to you and calling upon you to secure legislation along a certain line, and then, Mr. Chairman, this vast sum of money that goes to these lawyers and these guardians, professional and otherwise, the court costs, and so forth, that money circulates in the community where the money goes, and therefore if you went down there and called an indignation meeting to expose what this Mott report discloses, you could not get very many to take any interest in it.

Why, because the local environment is so saturated, and has been since the white man went into eastern Oklahoma, that part which was the Indian Territory, that everybody believes, as a witness said to me in our investigation when we were down there two or three years ago, in reply to a comment by me of what I thought reprehensible. He said, "Mr. Burke, in the West we do not look at this question as you people do else-I promptly suggested to him that he limit the territory to Oklahoma.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. In one of these cases the gentleman has stated that 90 per cent of the fund was consumed in the way of commissions and expenditures by the guardian. Now, I am interested to know, as a member of the committee, how the Indian got this 10 per cent, and I would like to know what the items were which constituted the 90 per cent, if the gentleman has them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have no information that the 10 per cent is left. I think somebody got it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not certain about the Indians getting it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. One of the things that has been done by Congress is the enactment of legislation removing restrictions, and by reason of the law as it now exists restrictions have been removed from about 8,000 Creek Indians. by reason of which restrictions were removed from one million two hundred and sixty-odd thousand acres of land. That is the amount of lands that the Indians possessed when the restrictions were removed. This report shows, and I don't think anyone will question it, that not one out of eight to-day has an acre of land or a dollar of money, and the Indians are living presumably out of the estates of minors.

Mr. MURDOCK. In how many years?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. About four years, I think; three or four years. Seven-eighths of these Indians who had their restrictions removed are to-day without any property or any money, and they do not pay any taxes.

I have said to the gentleman from Oklahoma that if they have not any concern from a moral standpoint of right and wrong in allowing the Indians to be defrauded out of their property, they ought to have some consideration for their own State, because if this thing continues you will soon have a pauper population upon your hands, and I think I can prophesy, and it will not be disputed, that when that time comes you can not come to Congress and have them taken care of at the expense of the Federal Government. They are a rich people with a large sum of money, entirely sufficient to guarantee them against pauperism, and if they are only protected by the Government until such time as they can walk alone, they will not be paupers. But if this condition of affairs prevails, and the condition that some of our Oklahoma friends boast will prevail after March 4 next, the time of this pauperized condition will soon arrive, and I am going to comment upon it further before I conclude.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. CARTER. I simply want to make a short observation, if the gentleman will permit. The Federal Government can certainly have no jurisdiction over any Indian except a restricted Indian. Under the present law it is as absolutely impossible to sell the allotted lands of a restricted minor Indian as it is for the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] to. go to heaven to-day. He may go there in the future, and I

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am going to tell the gentleman why that is so.

Mr. CARTER. Let me finish my statement. If that be true, then how on earth are these children for whom you are pleading ever going to become homeless and paupers?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think I have satisfied most of the Members of the House, if I have not the gentleman from Oklahoma, that it is possible.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman refuses to answer the question.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am answering. There was a bill passed in the last Congress because the existing law was interfering somewhat with the transfer of lands down there in Therefore a bill was introduced to change the law, Oklahoma. and I thought it was a good measure, and I still think so. The courts had passed upon the question, and I thought we could very properly correct the law so that it would do what was intended, according to the court's interpretation. Therefore the bill was passed, and in another body or in conference there was a little amendment slipped into it that resulted in the President vetoing it when it reached the White House, and, I think, very properly. In other words, somebody from Oklahoma, as usual, was on the job, and, while we had passed the bill in good faith-

Mr. CARTER. Did not the gentleman try to help pass the

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have stated that I did. Mr. CARTER. But after it came back with the amendment, which he said was slipped into it, did he not help to pass the bill through the House in my absence?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Upon the assurance of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] and others that the amendment did not do what it in fact did do, as I learned afterwards by examining it.

Mr. CARTER. But "the gentleman from Oklahoma" was 1,500 miles from here when that bill was passed, and did not have anything to do with the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not intend to refer to it at all. The bill was vetoed. In connection with that I find with the message vetoing that law that there is attached to it a letter from the department of charities and corrections in the State of Oklahoma to the Secretary of the Interior, and in it reference is made to a Miss Barnard, and it states that she has been intervening in behalf of approximately 3,000 orphans, nearly all of them Indian children, whose estates were being exploited or disposed of by incompetent and grafting guardians. She goes on to say that they have had many guardians removed, and so forth. The letter states-

We have been invited to come down in several counties by county judges who do not seem to be able to compel wholesale guardians to report, and while we have not been able to cover the ground as thoroughly as we wish to, yet the number of petitions for the sale of Indian children's properties has been reduced almost to a minimum.

Mr. CARTER. Does that apply to allotted lands? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. He says further:

People are afraid to buy these lands, because they fear that we will intervene and spoil the deal.

So they are not selling nearly as much land, it seems, as they did on former occasions. That, I think, answers the gentleman's [Mr. CARTER] question.

Mr. CARTER. Let us not have any socialistic argument about this. Let us nail down something.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not yield to the gentle-

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman has not answered the question. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Car-TER] will address the Chair when he wishes to interrupt the

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I might refer to the remark of the gentleman, made on the floor of the House yesterdayand I do it in good spirit-which shows the mind of the gentleman. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] had the floor, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] rose and said, "I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire], who always sympathizes with Oklahoma in looting the Treasury as much as it can, if he would be willing," and so forth. In other words, he asked his colleague a question, and in that question attempts to compliment him by suggesting or assuming that he is in sympathy with Oklahoma in looting the Treasury as much as it can.

Mr. CARTER Will the gentleman say that I made that remark seriously?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have the remark from the Reporter's notes. The gentleman can correct it or withdraw it.

Mr. CARTER. I do not care to withdraw it or to correct it. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then let it stand.
Mr. CARTER. I just asked the gentleman if he contends that I made that remark seriously.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, the gentleman refuses to answer. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am going to quote the gentleman in another statement, and if I misquote him I hope he will correct me. I do not want to do him any injustice. I have stated what the condition is in Oklahoma, and I have stated what the sentiment among the people is. The more legislation you secure to take away the protection that the Indian has the more legislation you enact to secure the money that belongs to the Indians and have it deposited in local banks-and there are several million dollars of their money there now deposited-and the more you do to take away the representatives of the Government who are guarding that money in the banks the higher you stand with the constituencies that sends you here.

Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] made a speech, or several speeches, in the campaign before the election, and in a speech quoted in an Oklahoma newspaper, at length, he is alleged to have made this statement that I will If the gentleman did not make it, I have no doubt he will get up and say that he did not, and I will accept his statement, and I am sure the House will. But in this speech he is quoted as having said in substance this:

The question is not one between Democrats and Republicans, but it is a question of electing Woodrow Wilson and getting the restrictions off the Indians lands and getting the hands of the Federal minions off the affairs of the Oklahoma people.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman unqualifiedly that I made no such statement.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the gentleman has been misquoted by the press of his State.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will ask the gentleman if it would be popular to make such a statement in his district?

Mr. CARTER. I will say that I do not think it would be. The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must first get recognition from the Chair before interrupting a Member. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 43 minutes. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have read in the Oklahoma papers what it is proposed to do after March 4 in Oklahoma with reference to Indian matters, and it is right in line with what I have heard our good friends say as to what they would like to have done, and I will read this for the information of the House. The Muskogee Times-Democrat, of December 9, 1912, from its correspondent here in Washington, received and published what I am now going to read:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

A movement has been started here to bring about the appointment of an assistant secretary of the interior whose headquarters shall be at Muskogee, Okla. and who shall be clothed with full power to act on questions affecting the administration of the Five Civilized Tribes without the necessity of further delay in having the Secretary of Interior in person act upon all matters affecting the various Indian tribes. It is proposed to have the assistant secretary empowered to remove restrictions upon Indian allotments and to decide all questions that are now passed upon by the Secretary of Interior. Senator

Gore, of Oklahoma, who is perhaps closer to the incoming administration than any other living man, is heartily in favor of the plan and also favors the appointment of an Oklahoma man who is familiar with the perplexing problems that surround the settlement of the Indian question in eastern Oklahoma. If the scheme is adopted it will make of Muskogee a little Washington, and all persons having business in connection with Indian matters will be required to go to Muskogee instead of the National Capital, as under the present system. The Oklahoma congressional delegation look with favor upon the Gore plan, and it is quite likely that soon after March 4 an assistant secretary of the interior will be located in Muskogee with power to act in all Indian matters, such as the sale of lands, the approval of leases, the removal of restrictions upon Indian allotments, and the direction of the policy to be pursued in connection with the handling of the Indians.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say if that is to be the

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say if that is to be the policy of the incoming administration, then God pity the poor Indians in Oklahoma.

This bill now pending proposes to take away an appropriation for the paying of expenses of certain administrative officers who are there now representing the Government in protecting the Indians. Probably very soon after March 4 our Democratic friends will cause to be removed the very efficient commissioner, J. George Wright, who has discharged the duties of his office for a number of years without a suggestion even being made that he has been in any manner corrupt, derelict, or failed in the discharge of his responsibilities, and I may say the same of the Union agent, Mr. Kelsey, who is the man who looks directly after the administration of the affairs of the individual restricted Indians. In fact, from what I have heard from Oklahoma, I believe it is the intention to displace both of these efficient officials if our Democratic friends can bring it about.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I shall be glad to yield if I have any time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes, in order that he may tell the Committee of the Whole what Mr. J. George Wright said when he took that position in 1900.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, the gentleman from Texas is going to tell us that we did not get through as soon as J. George Wright said we would.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did he not say in 1900 that if we would give him $600,000 he would close up the business in Oklahoma in two years? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

I think the then commissioner did, but it was not J. George Wright.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And that was 12 years ago.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think it was as long ago as that. We passed legislation after that providing that the rolls should not be closed until March 4, 1907.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many millions of dollars has he spent there since that time, and in the name of God how much longer is he going to take?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Until it can be closed up in an honest and legal manner; the gentleman from Texas knows that the delay in closing up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes has not been due in any manner to the failure on the part of the present commissioner to discharge his duty, but because of additional legislation by Congress, litigation and court decisions affecting the property rights of the Indians, and other things that made it impossible to do so, matters that could not be anticipated several years ago. So long as there are lands yet to be sold, allotments to be completed, and collections to be made we ought to, and I believe will, continue the organization we now have in the Five Civilized Tribes, and I sincerely hope that even after the business affairs of nations are finally settled and the money distributed, that the Government will continue to supervise and protect the unrestricted Indians until such time as they are sufficiently advanced to properly care for and manage their own affairs. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3436) granting to Phillips County, Ark, certain lots in the city of Helena for a site for a county courthouse.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 32.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln memorial, determined upon and recommended to Congress December 4, 1912, by the commission created by the act entitled "An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial of Abraham Lincoln," approved February 9, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris].

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Davenport].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Recorp, inasmuch as in 10 minutes I can not say all that I wish to say.

I can not say all that I wish to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest and with a great deal of patience to the dirge of a departing officeholder who now temporarily resides in my district, whose dirge is transmitted to this House through his proxy, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. I refer to Mr. Mott, who now occupies the position of attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians by appointment from the Secretary of the Mr. Mott knows that his days are limited, and, like the dying adder, he seeks to cast and throw his venom upon his pur-The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] and the man who furnished him the data know that when they make charges and insinuations against Tom Leahey, who is the present county judge of Muskogee County, Okla., that the said Leahey is willfully dishonest, they make charges that are willfully false and were known to be falsehoods at the time they were made. [Applause.] You can trace the record of Mr. Leahey from Wisconsin, where he was born and reared, up to the time he came to Muskogee, and nowhere will you find any act committed by him as unworthy of a gentleman, and any insinuation made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], furnished him by Mr. Mott, is false, and basely so.

I say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] that if the Interior Department, for whom he has spoken on the floor of this House, had such accusations to bring against my constituents, why did not the department bring them in the open, where they could be discussed in the committee, and where the parties against whom the accusations were brought could learn of what they were charged instead of waiting until the last hour to bring reflections and charges which cast reflections upon the entire people of the State of Oklahoma?

I want, further, to call your attention to the fact that when the Indian appropriation bills have been up for consideration in the House for the last few Congresses nothing but accusations and reflections have been brought against the good citizenship of the State of Oklahoma, and especially has it been so with reference to those that lived in that part of Oklahoma which was formerly Indian Territory. I want to say to the gentlemen who make those charges and accusations that there is nowhere to be found a nobler or more upright people than the citizenship of the third congressional district of the State of Oklahoma and the people of the entire State, and you should not seek to cast reflections upon their fair name and the name of the State of Oklahoma solely and only, as I charge here, because the employees of the Interior Department see the power of that department waning in that country and want to cast reflections and try to hold on to their jobs through infamy and falsehoods. [Applause.]

I say there is not a word of truth in the statements. There may be some men in Oklahoma, as well as all other States, who are not honest, and it was but a short time ago that three men were appointed to appraise the Choctaw and Chickasaw segregated coal and asphalt land by the Interior Department upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Republican State committee in Oklahoma, and they were recently removed or resigned because they were dishonest, but because of that fact are you willing to cast insinuation and reflection upon the entire State and its population?

We read in the Good Book that when the Savior came on earth he selected 12 men whom he thought to be fair, upright, and honest, but one proved to be a traitor, yet that fact was not used or taken to cast reflection upon the others. I regret very much we can not discuss legislative bills here without the motives and acts of the good people of Oklahoma being impugned, and I have grown sick and tired of some of the Members of this House and the employees of the Interior Department in this regard.

I want to state here that the charges are untrue, and that no man has the right to come upon the floor of this House and make such base assertions, especially when he knows that if he would take a little time and trouble to investigate his charges he would find that they were untrue, basely made, and false. asked the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] who, if anyone, had certified to the statements from which he read with reference to the handling of probate cases in the State of Oklahoma, and especially in the county of Muskogee, and he did not answer me and say that no one had certified to it, but indirectly evaded the question by saying that if anyone would go down to the Interior Department the original was on file there and could ascertain its contents and find out who signed the statement. I then asked him if the clerk of the court in Muskogee County had certified to the statement being correct, and why it was that one of the departmental officers, Mr. Mott, who owes his job to the Secretary of the Interior and who is ready and willing to cast reflections and besmirch the fair name of Oklahoma, was taken, and to that he makes no answer, but he is willing to stand up as the mouthpiece of such employees of the Government and let it be published to the world that he asserts facts that are untrue and were known to be untrue by Mott and his crowd when he made them. I am willing to admit that it is the ardent desire of the officeholders of Interior Department exercising jurisdiction over that part of Oklahoma, formerly Indian Territory, to hold on to their jobs at any cost. It matters not to them whom they may slander or falsely represent. A condition has existed in the department that the decent, respectable, and upright people were compelled to resent, and in that way a feeling has been engendered by the employees of the department which will cause them to do anything to perpetuate their jobs.

Before I conclude on this subject I want to state to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] that when he attempts to cast a reflection on me or any of the Members from Oklahoma or the good citizens of that State, and say we do not dare to stand up and resist the influence of the citizens down there because of political reasons, his statement is unwarranted and unjustified, and he had no right to make such accusations, because they are untrue. No man can charge, truthfully, that I dare not stand up when a matter of right is involved, even though I may have been stepping upon the toes of some carpetbag officeholder down there and whom I was seeking to kick out of the country. Such statements come with bad grace, and it is the poorest way on God's green earth to When you get a man to the point of where he is always charging somebody with dishonesty I am reminded of the old adage in ancient history of what some old sage said:

That the best proof he is dishonest is that he is always charging some one else with being dishonest.

I therefore ask the House to beware of those who are always trying to charge their fellow men with impure motives, even though they are the mouthpiece of an Interior Department which has had unlimited control over a certain class of citizens who were the pioneers in this great country of ours.

I now want to speak for a moment upon the question of citizenship, which has been discussed pending this bill, and to lay down the proposition that blood is not sufficient to entitle a party to be enrolled as a member of either of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

When these tribes were living east of the Mississippi River various treaties were entered into between the tribes and the Government of the United States, finally resulting in a treaty being made whereby all moved west of the Mississippi River and ceded to the United States their lands owned east of the Article 14 of the treaty between the Choctaw Mississippi River. and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians and the Government of the United States, made in 1830, provides for certain citizens that may desire to remain in the States, and among other things provides upon what terms and conditions they may remain and secure their allotments. Article 12 of the treaty between the Cherokee Tribe of Indians and the Government of the United States, made at New Echota, provides in substance the same as the treaties I have mentioned, and provides for those Cherokees who desire to remain east of the Mississippi River. various treaties were entered into and the tribes had formed their governments west of the Mississippi River the question arose between the Cherokee Indians residing in the States of North Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama and the Cherokees residing west of the Mississippi River as to the former's rights to participate in certain annuities which were due and should be paid to the Cherokee Tribe of Indians as a tribe west of the Mississippi River. Jurisdiction was con-ferred upon the United States Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to settle this controversy, and a decision was rendered which is found in volume 117 of the United States Supreme Court Reports at page 288, the title of which is the "Cherokee trust funds," the parties in interest being the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians against the United States and the Cherokee Nation, commonly known as the Cherokee Nation West. The court, after reviewing all the treaties and going into the question at length, on page 311 of that report uses the following language:

If Indians in that State, or in any other State east of the Mississippi, wish to enjoy the benefits of the common property of the Cherokee Nation, in whatever form it may exist, they must, as held by the Court of Claims, comply with the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation and be readmitted to citizenship as there provided. They can not live out of its territory, evade the obligations and burdens of citizenship, and at the same time enjoy the benefits of the funds and common property of the nation. Those funds and that property were dedicated by the constitution of the Cherokees and were intended by the treaties with the United States for the benefit of the united nation, and not in any respect for those who had separated from it and became aliens to their nation.

For many years before 1896 parties residing in the different States had been making application to the different tribal authorities to be readmitted to citizenship to the tribes upon the ground that they were Indians by blood or descendants of some one of the Indian families that had been a member of the eastern tribe and a great many had been admitted, but many were denied admission upon various grounds. The applications became so numerous that the tribal authorities became dilatory about passing upon the questions, and in 1896, after Congress had provided for the creation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes to negotiate treaties with the Five Tribes, and on the 10th day of June, 1896, Congress passed an act enlarging the jurisdiction of that commission, and among other things they gave to that commission, commonly known as the Dawes commission, power to receive applications for citizenship in the respective tribes and to hear and determine the same, with the right of appeal to the United States district court. The provisions of that act with reference to the power conferred upon the commission are as follows:

of that act with reference to the power conferred upon the commission are as follows:

That said commission is further authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine the applications of all persons who may apply to them for citizenship in any of said nations, and after said hearing they shall determine the right of said applicant to be so admitted and enrolled: Provided, however, That such application shall be made to such commissioners within three months after the passage of this act. The said commission shall decide all such applications within 90 days after the same shall be made. That in determining all such applications said commission shall respect all laws of the several nations or tribes not inconsistent with the laws of the United States and all treaties with either of said nations or tribes, and shall give due force and effect to the rolls, usages, and customs of the said nations or said tribes: And provided further, That the rolls of citizenship of the several tribes as now existing are hereby confirmed, and any person who shall claim to be entitled to be added to said rolls as a citizen of either of said tribes and whose right thereto has either been denied or not acted upon, or any citizen who may within three months from and after the passage of this act desire such citizenship, may apply to the legally constituted court or committee designated by the several tribes for such citizenship, and such court or committee shall determine such application within 30 days from the date thereof.

In the performance of such duty said commission shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to send for persons and papers, and all depositions, affidavits, and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing within the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of pe

Under this authority delegated to the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes there were filed in the Cherokee Nation alone more than 5,400 separate cases, embracing in all, including the heads of families and children, about 70,000 persons. When the commission investigated the cases and passed upon them, including those that were enrolled by the United States court in the Indian Territory, of the 70,000 who made application about 385 were enrolled. Congress later gave them the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to test the validity of this legislation, and the Supreme Court sustained the legislation. This ended, so far as the Cherokee Nation was concerned, the question of authority to place anyone on the roll that was not readmitted.

On June 28, 1898, Congress passed an act entitled "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," which provided for the making of a final roll of the members of the respective tribes in order that when allotments were made the Government would know to whom they should allot the land, and in one paragraph of section 21 of the said act the following language is used:

No person shall be enrolled who has not heretofore removed to and in good faith settled in the nation in which he claims citizenship: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to militate against any rights or privileges which the Mississippl Choctaws may have under the laws or the treaties with the United States.

Subsequent to the passage of this act Congress passed an act authorizing the commission to identify the Mississippi Choctaws in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 28, 1898, and fixed a definite time when the Mississippi Choctaws might come and locate in the Choctaw Nation, west of the Mississippi River.

My contention is that no Indian of either of the Five Civilized Tribes, under existing laws or treaties, is entitled to participate in the lands and funds of either of the tribes unless he complies with the laws and the treaties and returned to the tribe and identified himself with the tribe as he should do under the law or the treaty. It has been repeatedly held by the highest judicial tribunals in the States and by the Supreme Court of the United States that a treaty is nothing more than a law and may be amended and repealed the same as any other law. I am opposed to the opening of the rolls for the purpose of enrolling anyone who has not removed to and in good faith settled with his respective tribe, and who is not a bona fide member of the tribe as provided by the laws and treaties.

There are some few citizens in the Cherokee Nation who have lived all their lives in the Indian Territory and who are Indians by blood, and about which there is no dispute as to their right, and whose cases were in transit between Muskogee, Okla., and the Interior Department at Washington on March 4, 1907, when the rolls were finally closed. All such persons whose cases did not reach the department should, in my judgment, be enrolled by name; but I shall certainly oppose the opening of the rolls generally or give to any department of the Government discretionary power to hear, investigate, and adjudicate the rights of citizenship of anyone claiming citizenship in either of the said Five Civilized Tribes. There is no reason why a list of those who are entitled to be enrolled, as set out above, should not be prepared by the department and submitted to Congress so that they might be enrolled. I would favor enrolling by name those, as herein stated, that come within that class, but I should not be in favor of any general provision opening the [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman the gentleman yields back the rest of his time. Will the gentleman from South Dakota use the remainder of his time? We have only one more argument on this side.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mc-Guire] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman uses his time, I would like to inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had 41 minutes remain-The gentleman now has 31 minutes remaining, deducting the time that has been allotted to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply want to discuss an amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. I do not care to go into any of the features or the merits of the appropriation bill.

There has been for a number of years in my State a matter which has challenged the attention of practically all of the citizens of the southeast portion of the State as well as the Members of Congress, both in the Senate and in the House. It is a question which means much to a great many of the citizens of Oklahoma, and one which will not be settled without many complications arising, and it will not be settled without difficulty and much attention. I refer to those who have made application to be placed upon the rolls with the two tribes in the southeast portion of the State, to wit, the Choctaws and the Chickasaws

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], in his discussion yesterday, stated that he exonerated the chairman and other members of the committee, because the Interior Department had failed to make a report with respect to those applications. I have no one to exonerate, for the reason that I think that every one on the committee, regardless of his opinion, is absolutely honest and fair with respect to that opinion. I differ from some gentlemen in my own State and from some of my own colleagues from my State with respect to this matter, for the reason that I have fully and decisively concluded, so far as I am concerned, that a grave injustice has been done to hundreds and thousands of the citizens and persons of Indian blood in my State.

For instance, I hold in my hand excerpts from a report made by the Secretary of the Interior to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate. They designated those people by classes.

The first class are noncompetents, so designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and from a letter of April 22, 1912, to the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, in class No. 1, known as "incompetents" or designated as incompetents by the Interior Department, they found that 800 persons were excluded from the rolls who were entitled to be placed on the rolls. That is one report from the Interior Department to which the gentleman from Mississippi failed to call the attention of the House.

What do we mean by noncompetents? I will call attention to a few of them. For instance, there were a number of orphans in the schools, supported by the tribes and the Government at that time, who were entirely overlooked, and there never has been an application made by those people, because they were noncompetents, and so they were left off the rolls. Their brothers, their slatters their slatters their slatters. brothers, their sisters, their relatives, the more capable members of the families, are on the rolls, but those who were absolutely incompetent and those who to-day must have the care of the Government and the tribes, because they were incapable of making applications, are left off the rolls. Somebody is respon-

I did all I could in the committee from time to time to have these people placed upon the rolls. The Interior Department sent one of the most able men in that department to make an investigation, and he remarked to me that he went with the intention of coinciding with the views of the Dawes Commission, to leave them off the rolls, but when he found a state of affairs there that he could not justify he recommended that those 800 incompetents, overlooked because of their incompetency, be placed upon the rolls. They are in class No. 1.

Class No. 2 are designated as delinquent cases. Who are they? There were 52 of them. They were found by the Dawes Commission to be entitled to enrollment, but there was a delay in certifying those names to the Secretary of the Interior, and the rolls closed under the law the day before they reached the Interior Department; and also the 52 cases had been adjudituded. cated; they are to-day off the rolls and receive none of the benefits of tribal lands or money.

Gentlemen, there is no excuse whatever for that, and those 52 people have made their applications persistently and incessantly from the day they were left off in 1907 to the present time, but the Government of the United States has failed to recognize them. Do not forget that these are cases which have been adjudicated, and because they did not reach the Secretary of the Interior in time were left off, and are off to-day.

There is another class of cases, the Mississippi Choctaws: I will not go into details, but they were given six months after they were notified of conditions, laws, and so forth, to reach Oklahoma. Some of them were financially unable to change their residence. Others did not receive their notification until less than six months before the time they were to reach Oklahoma. It was impossible for them to comply with the laws and the regulations, and they are omitted from the rolls.

Class 4 consists of jurisdictional and imperfectly adjudicated This relates to the cases that were disposed of by a tribal court, a court created by Congress. I will have no time to go into the details, but this relates to the Mississippi Choc-

The Department of the Interior has written a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate, recommending that in all 2,726 of those Indians who have been left off the roll be placed upon it. So it is not the fault of the Secretary of the Interior, but the fault of the committee.

I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mc-Guire] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he expects to use the balance of his time in one speech?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, I wanted to ask if he will kindly place in the Record the names and addresses of those guardians whom he has asserted to be professional guardians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That would necessitate printing 2,000 names, and I think it would probably be better at a later time to ask to have all of these exhibits printed as a House document. I would not object to that.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me inquire where they can be found.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are on file in the Interior Department, as the report will show. Mr. Chairman, I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota can not be passed over with such suggestions as have been made on the floor of the House. tlemen who have replied to him so far have stated that this report was not presented to the committee until they had reported this bill. What has that got to do with it? There is nothing in the bill on the subject. This bill was reported to the House a few days after Congress convened, practically without any consideration, because the Indian bill is not made up by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, but is left in the main to the tender mercies of the Senate. These gentlemen have had for several days the same statement that the gentleman from South Dakota has had. The gentleman from South Dakota, with the assiduity he always uses, gave attention to the report. Gentlemen who ought to have given attention to the report apparently have paid no attention to it until now, and they now say that it ought to have been presented before.

My distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] seems to think that because the gentleman from South Dakota had not filed a minority report that therefore he ought not to say anything on the floor of the House in consideration of the Indian bill, either about an item in the bill or about something that is not in the bill.

Yesterday we had an example in the House of the effect of the report of committees. If there be any partisan proposition which comes before the House it is a report on a contestedelection case. An Elections Committee, consisting two-thirds of Democratic members, had considered an election contest, and in making their report had declined to recommend the seating of the Democratic contestant, plainly because he had been guilty of fraud or had not secured the votes. Without a syllable from any committee, without a backing of any report of any portion of this House responsible for its work, a large share of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, with no knowledge of the subject whatever, voted to seat a man on the floor of the House. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] voted with that bunch.

I congratulate certain Democratic Members of this House for refusing, in violation of conscience and without any support of the committee, to vote to seat a man who had no right to his These gentlemen stood by the committee. I propose to read and to insert in the RECORD now a roll of honor, consisting of Democratic Members of the House who place conscience above partisanship, and who voted, not on the suggestion of some Member in or out of the House, but who voted according to the report of the committee. They are:

ROLL OF HONOR.

ALEXANDER of Missouri, ASHEROOK of Obio, AYRES of New York, BARNHART of Indiana, BLATHRICK of Obio, BOEHNE OF Indiana, BUCKINSON OF Obio, BYENES OF SOUTH CAROLINA, CO. of Indiana, DICKINSON OF MISSOURI, DIES OF TEXAS, DOUGHTON OF NORTH CAROLINA, EDWARDS OF GEORGIA, EVANS OF Illinois, FAISON OF NORTH CAROLINA, EDWARDS OF New York, FOSTER OF Illinois, FOWLER OF Illinois, GARRETT OF TENNESSEE, GLASS OF VIrginia, GODWIN OF NORTH CAROLINA, GUIDGER OF NORTH CAROLINA, HAMILTON OF WEST VIRGINIA, HAMILTON OF MISSOURI, HAMMOND OF MINNESOUR, HAV OF VIRGINIA, HENSLEY OF MISSOURI, HOLLAND OF VIRGINIA, HOUSTON OF TENNESSEE, JOHNSON OF SOUTH CAROLINA, JONES OF VIRGINIA, KINDEED OF NEW YORK, KINKEAD OF NEW JERSEY, KONOP OF WISCONSIN, LAMB OF VIRGINIA, LEVER OF SOUTH CAROLINA, LINTHICUM OF MARYLAND, LOBECK OF Nebraska, MACON OF ARRANSSE, MAQUIRE OF NEW YORK, RAINEY OF Illinois, RAKER OF CALIFORNIA, RANDELL OF TEXAS, RANSBELL OF LOUISIANA, REPLEY OF NEW YORK, RAINEY OF Illinois, RAKER OF CALIFORNIA, RANDELL OF TEXAS, RANSBELL OF MISSOURI, RUSSELL OF MISSOURI, STEDDAN OF NORTH CAROLINA, STEDDAN OF NORTH CAROLINA, STEDDAN OF NORTH CAROLINA, STEDDAN OF NORTH CAROLINA, STEDHENS OF NEW YORK, RODDENBERY OF GEORGIA, RUBEY OF MISSOURI, RUSSELL OF MISSOURI, STEDDAN OF NORTH CAROLINA, STEDHENS OF NEW YORK, THOMAS OF KENTUCKY, TOWNSEND OF NEW JERSEY, UNDERSHILL OF NEW YORK, WHITACRE OF Obio, WHITE OF Obio.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. I will, but I have only a short time. I am sorry the gentleman is not on the roll.

Mr. MURRAY. May I inquire whether or not the gentleman from Illinois would revise his estimate if he knew that a Member or Members of the House of Representatives had been able to make personal investigation of this contested-election case by a visit to the district affected?

Mr. MANN. I can not see how a visit to the district would help in getting information. If a gentleman of this House went into the district and investigated this case instead of studying the record himself, he was using his time most idly.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. For a question; not for much discussion.

Mr. MURRAY. May I make a statement?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I can not give the gentleman much time.
Mr. MURRAY. Just a minute?
Mr. MANN. Proceed.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, during the campaign I was fortunate enough to be assigned by the Democratic national committee to make a speech or speeches in this very district. By reason of my presence in that district I was able to get information, not only from partisan politicians but from a man with whom I was at college and who was more familiar with the conditions than any man outside the district can possibly be, and it was entirely because of the information that I was able to get from those sources that I concluded my vote should be as it was. I simply make the statement, because I think the gentleman is sincere in his estimate of the roll of honor, and I regret that I am not on any sincere roll of honor that he may compile; but I think, as a matter of justice to me as a Representative of a district in this House, I should be permitted to make that statement.

I have not much time in which to Mr. MANN. Let us see. reply to the gentleman. Here is a case that has been heard upon testimony. Both sides have called their witnesses. side has cross-examined or had the opportunity to crossexamine the witnesses on the other side. The judges have rendered their decisions, and a gentleman of this House who is, after all, one of the final judges, goes out on the street and asks some college friend, "What ought I to do in this case?" Suppose the judge of a court, after he had heard the testimony of the witnesses and had heard the arguments of counsel, should go into a neighboring saloon and ask the saloon keeper, "How shall I decide this case?" [Laughter on the Republican side.] That is what the gentleman from Massachusetts has done. am surprised, and I regret that I gave the gentleman the opportunity to insert into the RECORD a thing that so belittles his position.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. MURRAY. I rise to say that if the gentleman insists that his comparison of cases is a fair one, I have no criticism of it at this time. I think it is such a ridiculous comparison that it ought not to come from the able leader of the minority in this House

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if that is any satisfaction to the gentleman, I am perfectly willing that he should have it. He did not follow a committee acting as judges deciding the case. He followed a gentleman who made a motion in the House purely because he wanted to seat a Democrat, not because the Democrat was elected.

I shall insert in the RECORD at this point, in connection with the roll of honor, a list of the Democratic Members of the House who voted to seat a Democrat who was refused a favorable report by the Democratic Committee on Elections:

MEMBERS WHO VOTED TO SEAT A DEMOCRAT WHO WAS REFUSED A FAVOR-ABLE REPORT BY THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

MEMBERS WHO VOYED TO SEAT A DEMOCRAT WHO WAS REFUSED A FAVORABLE REPORT BY THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

ADAIR Of Indiana, ALLEN OF ONIO, ANSEERRY OF ONIO, BARTLETT OF GEORGIA, BEALL OF TEXAS, BELL OF GEORGIA, BURGESS OF TEXAS, BURKE OF WISCONSIN, BURLESON OF TEXAS, BYERNS OF TENNESSON, CANDLER OF MISSISSIPPI, CANTRILL OF KENTUCKY, CARLIN OF VIRGINIA, CARTER OF OKIAHOMA, CLAYPOOL OF ONIO, CLAYTON OF ALABAMA, CULLOF OF INDIANA, COLLER OF MISSISSIPPI, COVINGTON OF MARYLAND, CULLOF OF INDIANA, C

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen can point to these lists, if they desire, to indicate in which one they are to be found. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] takes pride and glory in doing what he has done. After a while he will be ashamed, and other Members of the House who voted with him will be ashamed, of where their names are found, and the roll of honor that goes into the RECORD will be many times pointed to with pride by gentlemen on that side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] seemed to believe that the statements made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] reflected upon all the citizenship of Oklahoma. Nothing of the sort is true. The gentleman from South Dakota in making his statement undoubtedly hoped that the gentleman from Oklahoma would disavow the dishonest and dishonorable actions of some of the Oklahoma courts, and would come and defend not the rascals but the honest men of Oklahoma.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois vield?

Mr. MANN. One moment. If it be true that the honest men are so largely in the majority-and I have no doubt they are they are the ones who need to be defended, and their defense comes by the ascertainment of the facts and the correction of the evil which has been exposed. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, reverting to the gentleman's statement of a few moments ago and what he termed a roll of honor upon this side of the House-and I am delighted that I am in what in the gentleman's estimation is a roll of honor, because I think he is entirely sincere in characterizing it as such—he has censured certain gentlemen upon this side for not following the report of the committee. How many gentlemen on his side of the aisle could be placed upon a roll of dishonor for not following the committee touching the other case?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen upon this side of the aisle did not believe the report of the committee was cor-rect as far as it went. The gentlemen upon this side of the aisle followed the report of the Republican members of the Elections Committee.

Gentleman on that side of the aisle, notwithstanding the report of the Democratic members of the committee and a unanimous report from the committee, with no warrant in conscience or fact, voted to seat a man not because he sa elected. but because he wore the same political stripe which they do of Democracy. Now, Mr. Chairman, the statements made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] can not be brushed aside lightly, and it will not do to say, as suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], that there might be a case here or there where the estate was small and scattered and 15 conveyances illegally had been made. The gentleman referred to 15 conveyances two or three times. I do not know whether that is the regular number of conveyances made illegally in Oklahoma or not. The statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota was the average. There is no honest court in this land, I do not care where it is, which extended over a period of years which will put the expenses of guardianship administration up as high as 20 per cent, or even as high as 10 per cent, and when the statement is made that an investigation shows that the guardianship expenses, the expenses of administration in the probate court, have run up as high as 20 per cent, it should be investigated. We have got a lot of investigating committees going on around the House. We had better investigate this; find out whether these facts as alleged are actual facts; find out whether 20 per cent, one-fifth of the amount involved, is made out to lawyers, to clerks, and professional guardians, because it can not be paid out honestly. This is on the average

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to state, if the gentleman will permit, that the law of Oklahoma limits the fee in administration cases, but not in guardianship cases. I omitted to do that in my remarks.

Mr. MANN. Well, whether the law limits it or does not limit it, it is not possible that on the average in thousands of cases the expenses of the administration shall be one-fifth of the total amount which is collected or in question in the estate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] brushes it aside by stating that at one time there was a fee paid of $750,000. I remember when I called attention to that fee on the floor of the House and attempted to provide against it and similar fees, but I did not meet with any aid from the gentleman from Texas in regard to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman entirely misapprehends and misstates the matter in connection with that.

I neither misstate nor misapprehend it. Mr. MANN. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will examine the Record, he will see I spoke against it and voted against it every time I had the opportunity.

Mr. MANN. I neither misstate nor misapprehend; I remember what took place about these things. I have frequently denounced those big fees. I denounced some the gentleman from Texas proposed to put in the bill at the last session of Congress, some which did go in in conference. But it is no answer to fraud that is now being committed to say that fraud was committed by some one else. The particulars to each case are on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. The gentleman from Oklahoma or anybody else can go there and examine the memorandum concerning each case, can examine the files in each case, and those that have been examined presumably are in the probate court, and the records of the probate court in Oklahoma in these cases will show how much has been paid. Let the gentleman examine these facts, let a committee of this House be appointed to examine the facts; let us know whether it be the purpose of Congress or the administrative officials of the Government to remove the restrictions upon Indians and then either rob them of their property or when they die loot the estates of their children. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] stated that the man who made this report came to Oklahoma from North Carolina with a carpetbag. Pray where did the gentleman from Oklahoma come from into Oklahoma? How long has he lived in Oklahoma?

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman want a reply?
Mr. MANN. Yes; how long has he lived in Oklahoma?
Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to answer the gentleman by saying that I have lived there 12 years and never held a Federal commission, nor did I go there because I had a Federal commission in my pocket.

Mr. MANN. Very well, the gentleman has not lived so long in Oklahoma that he can talk about anybody else coming there with a carpetbag.

Wr. FERRIS. I have lived long enough to consult the people as to what I got and not get it by appointment.

The gentleman has not lived long enough to consult the people, but long enough to be elected a Member of this

House, and I will say a valuable Member of this House

I have made no assault upon the gentleman from Oklahoma, but when he says, in answer to the statements made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], that they ought not to be considered because they were made by a carpetbagger who came into the State, I say, for God's sake, how long have you been a resident of the State? Because, in the opinion of the old-style southerner, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] is a mere carpetbagger down there. He will have to live a great deal longer than 12 years in one of the Southern States not to be called a carpetbagger. There is no reflection upon the gentleman from Oklahoma going into the State only 12 years ago, and it is no answer for the gentleman to say that the official who made this report went into the State from South Carolina. The question is, Are the facts stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], as set forth in this report, true?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. The gentleman has time of his own and endeavors to cut me short; but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, I will not ask the question.

Mr. MANN. It is no answer to these charges to say that they are made by some man who comes from some other State. As the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] said, it is just a little improbable that the most disinterested statement will be obtained from the average citizen of Oklahoma. How many lawyers are there in the city of Muskogee? Will any-body answer that? How many lawyers are there in that town? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Two hundred.

Mr. MANN. How large a town is it?
Mr. DAVENPORT. About 34,000.
Mr. MANN. Two hundred lawyers for a town with a population of 34,000.

Will my colleague yield for a short question? Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman. Mr. GRAHAM. It appears from the discussion up to this time that the paper from which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] read did not get before the Indian Committee at all. Why did it not?

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but he is mistaken in his premises. It appears, on the contrary, that the paper from which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] read was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and to various Members from Oklahoma who are on that committee. As I said before, the bill has nothing to do with it. There is no line in the bill on the subject. We are discussing the general proposition, and when fraud is charged and apparently proved, the gentlemen say, "It did not come to us before the bill was reported."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have had no meetings of the committee since it came to us at all.

Mr. MANN. It is not the fault of anybody but the gentle-an himself. Why did you not call a committee meeting?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We did not have an opportunity. Mr. MANN. The gentleman can call a committee meeting now for to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. He can call it any day. Is it any answer to these charges to say that they have not considered them? Here are the facts set forth in the report, on file in the Interior Department. The gentlemen say, "We did not know about it." They have had the papers in their possession. Possibly they have not had time to examine them, but that does not answer the charges. Let them have an investigation to see whether these charges are true or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will follow our own course in our own way, without any dictation about it.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman talks about dictation he gets lippy about it and he violates the rule of the House to be discourteous. He does not know how to be courteous. He knows just about as much about courtesy as he does about the Indian bill, and that is enough.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield to me, and I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. GRAHAM]

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to know in good faith why that information did not get to the Indian Committee sooner.

Mr. BURK& of South Dakota. The report seems to have been completed in Oklahoma on the 27th day of November. It was brought to Washington three or four days ago by the gentleman who made it. He immediately went to the Secretary of the Interior with the report, and just as soon as they could make the copies they transmitted one by special messenger to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House, another to the committee in the Senate, and also a copy to the two Senators from Oklahoma; and the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Ferris and Mr. Carter, each received a copy. I incidentally heard of the report and I asked the Secretary for a copy, and got it. Mr. MANN. T

Mr. MANN. There has to be a time for everything. T report comes down to date. There is no secrecy about it. It could not have been presented last has just been made. summer; it could not have been presented last winter. information is only now ascertained. I had expected, when I heard the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] give the facts in his possession, that my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, Mr. Carter, and my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, Mr. Ferris, and my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, Mr. DAVENPORT, would do what I believe almost any other Member of this House would have done when the charges were made, and say that this was news to them and that we should investi-

If these charges are true, then there ought to be something done about them. If these charges are not true, we want that fact to be published; but instead of suggesting that, each one of the gentlemen is begging the question.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN. Not just now. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] says he has not examined the report, and yet he denounces it as false.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to say that when the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] started to read it, I then heard of it for the first time. That is the first I knew it had been made, and it referred to Indians that belong almost exclusively in the third district, the district which I have the honor to represent. I had no opportunity to investigate it. Had I known such a report had been made I beg to assure the gentleman I would have investigated the report for the reason I have joined the department when it was right and fought it when I thought it was wrong.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman who has not seen the report takes exception to the courtesy of the department in not having sent him a copy, and brands the statement as "lies and falsehoods."

Mr. DAVENPORT. And I stand by that yet.

Mr. MANN. That is about as close as the gentleman gets to these questions. He says it is "false." Why does he not investigate, why does he not ascertain, if he wants to protect the Indians in his district from paying 20 per cent for expenses? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I thought, Mr. Chairman, that I had five minutes I am short five minutes on the time that was given me. I had 31 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it was after

2.30 o'clock when the gentleman was recognized. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has kept the time, and, according to the time kept by the Chair, the gentleman from Illinois had 29 minutes. He began at 27 minutes past 2.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the rest of the time on this side to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr.

CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] had an agreement with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], or stated to the gentleman from South Dakota, that he would conclude in one speech. There are two gentlemen who would like to address the House for five minutes each, besides myself, and if it is agreeable and there is no objection,

I would be very glad to have them address the House in my time, the time to be taken from my time. They will discuss a different subject from that which I discussed. Those gentlemen are the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object, because I have discovered on many occasions that gentlemen on that side of the House do not pretend to keep agreements.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman must not say that, because I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen ought not to ask unanimous consent when they have made an agreement and, after the time has been passed by, then propose to violate it.

Mr. CARTER. I had no part in the agreement.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman yielding his time,
Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. MURRAY]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to speak of so much of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as related to my conduct and my action in regard to this contested-election case of McLean against Bowman.

The gentleman from Illinois says that the time will come when I shall be ashamed of that action. I do not believe that is so, Mr. Chairman, although I believe that I shall always regret, as I regret now, that I had to vote to unseat a man in the House of Representatives with whom I have had such pleasant relations as I have had with Mr. Bowman, the gentleman who was unseated yesterday.

Not only were my relations with Mr. Bowman himself pleasant, but he had a son who was a schoolmate of mine when I was a student at the Harvard Law School, and on account of that fact I approached the consideration of this case with the utmost care that I could give to it, and I tried to get exact information in regard to it. It was not possible for me to satisfy myself by following simply the evidence as presented before the Committee on Elections, and the gentleman well knows that it is not possible to make a judicial examination of any question of that sort which is considered by a committee of the House of Representatives.

He criticizes me for going outside of the testimony that was taken and for making an independent investigation, and he likens me to a judge who might be clothed with judicial authority who should go to a saloon for the purpose of determining a judicial dispute after the evidence had been put in. With the limited knowledge of the law that I have as compared with his superior wisdom I call his attention to the fact that there are rules of evidence that should be absolutely and accurately followed when a judicial determination is to be made, but that those-exact rules of jurisprudence and those limitations of testimony have no application, as far as I have ever been able to ascertain, to any legislative committee upon which I have ever served. I do not believe there ever was such an application, and I cite as authority from your own side the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Prouty] to bear me out in that statement that there was no such limitation of testimony before this committee. I did go outside of the work of the committee to get what I believed to be an impartial and a fair determination of the facts in the case, not because I wanted to take the word of partisan Democrats with whom I am associated and for whom I have high regard, nor because I hesitated to join partisan Republicans, if, indeed, they might be right in their judgment of the case; but I made an independent investigation, just as I believe a man in the legislative branch of the Government ought to do with regard to the problems that are pressing here for solution; and when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] compares my conduct to that of a judge who would go to a saloon to determine a judicial dispute, I say he said something to a young man and about a young man that he will be ashamed of long before I am ever ashamed of my conduct in this case. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. MANN. I told the truth.

Mr. MURRAY. I have heard something here to-day about a roll of honor. I should like to be on any personal roll of honor that might be compiled by the gentleman from Illinois. I admire him and always have admired him since the early days of my service here. I believe that when he is able to get away from the intense partisanship which characterizes most of his conduct here he contributes greatly to the value of membership in this House of Representatives, and when partisanship is not involved I am always most happy to go to him, as I hope I will be able to go to him in the future, to get for my youthful service the benefit of his advice; but I have no ambition to serve on Republican rolls of honor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have no ambition to see my name written high on any list of Republican rolls of honor.

Mr. Chairman, before I came here I served in other legislative bodies in a city government and in a State government. I have seen Republican rolls of honor compiled before. I suppose I could climb to a high place on such a roll if I might be willing to scand pat on Schedule K. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I suppose if I should be willing to repudiate the verdict of the American people and refuse to revise Schedule K, that so vitally affects the interests of the people of this land, my name might be written high, but it will never be written by that kind of conduct on my part any more than it will be written by my vote to retain in this House of Representatives a man who, in my honest judgment, ought to be unseated from its membership [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks to make, and I ask that I may be given permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois lays great stress upon the fact that the two Members of Congress from Oklahoma who addressed this committee to-day did not declare themselves opposed to dishonesty. With all fairminded men sitting in this House who can rise above partisanship to an impartial survey of men and measures no such asseveration of honesty by Members from the State of Oklahoma is necessary. The two Members from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT and Mr. Ferris], I dare say, come as near having the confidence of this House as the gentleman from Illinois himself, and that is saying a great deal.

But, on behalf of them and myself, I will say that if there is any dishonesty in Oklahoma, the Oklahoma delegation in Congress is opposed to it, and the Members of that delegation will stand shoulder to shoulder with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], or any other Members of the House or any other body that may have jurisdiction for an investigation of any conditions that may even smack of impropriety or dishonesty in Oklahoma or any other place.

But when this investigation is instituted we shall ask that it be not confined to the probate courts of Oklahoma alone, but that a thorough and searching investigation of the conduct of every man who has had to do with Indian affairs in Oklahoma for the past few years, both State and Federal, be made. We shall ask an investigation of the Indian office at Muskogee. should like to know what becomes of the million and odd dollars used by this office every year. We should like to know what duties are performed by the more than 500 employees on the Federal pay roll at Muskogee. We should like to know where these 500 employees were when all this robbery of Indians was taking place, which has been so ably exploited by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. We would like to know why it is that all these restricted minor Indian estates are being dissipated, when it is the duty of these five hundred and odd Federal officers to see that it is not done. And we would especially like to know why it is that this great dissipation of restricted minor estates is taking place, when no title can pass to any of these lands except by the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and he will act only upon a favorable recommendation from these Oklahoma Indian agents.

We have heard a great deal of the misconduct of Oklahoma State officers, but there is some other misconduct which has been going on for years, information about which has not been so freely given. While this misconduct comes strictly in the view of the department, strange to say, it never seems to be mentioned by any of the department officers or by gentlemen on that side of the House.

The chief requisite for employment in the Indian service in Oklahoma in the past seems to have been indifference to duty and ignorance of Indian affairs. The people who are sent there to fill those jobs remind me very much of a young newspaper man, whom it was my good fortune to meet on a visit to this city several years ago. I was introduced to him as an Indian. He said, "Carter, are you a real Indian?" I said, "I am." He then said, "Are you one of those fellows who are on tribal rolls and get lands and money?" I again repeated, "I am." Well," said he, "I am awful glad to meet you. You know I went, said he, I am awful glad to meet you. You know I wrote two articles on the habits, traits, and characteristics of the American Indian, for which I got $250, and you are the first confounded Indian I ever met in my life." [Laughter.]

In the light of past events, I think this gentleman would have made an excellent district Indian agent for Oklahoma.

I have had on my desk for some time charges of a most serious nature against these very district agents, but because most of them had gotten out of the service, because I did not desire to pose as a muckraker, and because I am not inclined to tear down the character of any man, either for political or other purposes. I have never referred to these men by name, but if there is to be an investigation of Indian affairs in Oklahoma past and present conditions certainly demand a turning on of the light, not only on the probate judges, but also upon the entire Federal Indian service in that State.

In view of this situation I think the time is now ripe to present some of the cases of fraud and corruption by this so-called Indian Bureau. I want to call attention first to a gentleman by the name of Charles Knapp, one of the great district agents, the name of Charles Knapp, one of the great district agents, always so valiantly defended by our friend from South Dakota, Mr. Burke. He was located at the city of Hugo, Choctaw County, and drew, I am informed, $2,000 a year from the Federal Treasury, ostensibly for the protection of the Indian. Let us see how he protected them. This young man came to our State from New York, I understand, and, like my newspaper friend, I do not suppose he ever saw an Indian until he went to the State of Oklahoma to supervise them, but he seems to have had abundant knowledge of some other things.

If the charges brought against Mr. Knapp are true, he ought to be behind the bars of a prison cell, for it is said of him that he had a regular scale of prices for which he would give any kind of a recommendation for any kind of an approval of any kind of a matter that an applicant might desire if such applicant would only pay his price. And I am reliably informed that a great many of Mr. Knapp's recommendations were passed upon favorably by the Indian Office and by the Secretary of the Perhaps this may account for some of the irregularities referred to by my friend from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. However that may be, it has been, in a large measure, the practice of our probate judges to advise and counsel with these district agents with regard to probate matters of Indians. charges were preferred against Mr. Knapp, I am informed that he was permitted to resign without trial, and the grand jury of Choctaw County, I understand, has never been able to get any of the facts from the department.

Then there was another district agent at Muskogee, right under the nose of Dana H. Kelsey, who was charged for a long time with similar wrongdoing and who was permitted to resign without an investigation.

Still another district agent at Pauls Valley, I am informed, resigned from his position as district agent, and a short time after his resignation had taken effect large bodies of Indian lands sold by his direction when district agent were transferred to him by the vendee, acting as a dummy for him.

Then, again, at Chickasha a somewhat similar case is re-I do not give the names. It is immaterial, anyway, since these names can be ascertained at the department. An investigation should be made, not only as to the misconduct of these gentlemen but as to the reasons for the department withholding this information from Congress and the courts of Oklahoma.

And again, Mr. Chairman, since we are to have an investigation, let us, at least, have some light on that crowning iniquity of recent occurrence, the fraudulent appraisement of the surface of the segregated mineral lands. Let us see why it is that these three appraisers have been permitted to shove their hands into the tribal treasury to the extent of $15 per day without accomplishing anything, it seems, except fraud and corruption. Let us see why it is that these men were permitted to resign without an investigation, and let the Secretary of the Interior tell us why it is that no mention of this disgraceful transaction has been presented to Congress.

It is passing strange that none of these shady and fraudulent transactions of Government officials are ever presented to this House by the department. They seem to have no trouble in ferreting out any alleged corruption by State officials, but are woefully short on keeping Congress informed as to the shortcomings of their own officials.

I reiterate we want to correct any evils that may exist in Oklahoma, but we call on you gentlemen to witness that Oklahoma is a new State and our officers, until five years ago, had no experience whatever. There may have been discrepancies by our officers, there may have been even wrongdoing by our officers, but in my opinion these charges are greatly exaggerated, and I certainly believe that an investigation will disclose the fact that little, if any, more fraud exists among the officers of the State of Oklahoma than in many other States.

We are eager for an investigation of these matters, but I ask you, my colleagues, not to condemn the name of a fair State and its officers on such ex parte testimony as has been given in this Chamber to-day.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I was called out during a part of the discussion, during the speech especially of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. Do I understand that the man who made the investigation and the report of it, to which reference has been made, is an employee in Muskogee?

Mr. CARTER. He is.

Mr. COOPER. Is he in receipt of a salary of $5,000 a year?

Mr. CARTER. He is.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma wishes to mislead the House. The gentleman who made this report is the attorney for the Creek Nation, and is paid a salary of $5,000 a year out of their funds, and, under an arrangement with the principal chief of that nation, he was permitted to use the moneys of the tribe to make this investigation.

Mr. COOPER. Who appointed him, I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of the Interior, at the suggestion of the chief.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the only way an arrangement made between the chief and this attorney could be made effective was by approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and he approved, upon the statement having been made to him that this condition existed.

Mr. CARTER. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will permit me to conduct my own colloquy. I know the gentleman is well posted upon these matters, but he and I do not agree on many things, and our replies will naturally differ. This man Mott was first appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. That is to say, his original contract required only the approval of the Secretary of the Interior before it was valid. tract now requires the approval of the President, but that is a difference between tweedle dee and tweedle dum, for the President always leaves these matters of approval of Indian contracts to the Secretary. It is true that the contract must be signed by the tribal chief, but the chief himself, who is a full-blood Indian, not able to speak English, is a creation of the Interior Department, and his head might come off if he did other than what the Interior Department wanted him to do, and the gentleman from South Dakota knows that.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman then think that the investigator was entirely disinterested?

Mr. CARTER. With this attorney sitting in the gallery at the present time, I do not hesitate to say that I feel sure his investigation was conducted with a view, largely, to a continuation of his job and the perquisites that go therewith, as such investigations usually are conducted when they are made ex parte by an employee of the department.
Mr. COOPER. There are 500 employe

There are 500 employees in Muskogee?

Mr. CARTER.

There are more than that. More than 500—all at Muskogee? Mr. COOPER.

Yes; more than 500 on the pay roll there. Mr. CARTER.

They have supervision of these tribes? Mr. COOPER.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. One of the great newspapers of the country, the New York Herald, has been making an investigation of this subject for some weeks. I have seen a number of copies of the paper and extracts from the paper, and their investigator reports a dreadful condition, so far as the prevalence of trachoma and other diseases is concerned. For example, at the Kiowa Agency 65 per cent have trachoma. What has the gentleman to say of the supervision and its efficiency under which such an alarming condition of disease exists at that agency?

Mr. CARTER. The disease is prevalent among those tribes; but I want to be perfectly fair and state to the gentleman that the Kiowas and Comanches are not part of the Five Civilized Tribes, but they are Indians in Oklahoma, and the supervision which the gentleman calls attention to is quite characteristic of the supervision that is extended over the Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. COOPER. They are under Federal supervision,

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I also read in the reports of this agent or investigator of the New York Herald that the deaths from tuberculosis alone approximated 35 in 1,000 among these Indians. Is that so?

Mr. CARTER. I have not those figures by me, but I assume the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COOPER. He said that he secured that information from officials in Oklahoma and from department officials here He said that he secured that information Now, as I am informed, the death rate from all diseases in Panama, supposedly a deadly region, is only about 15 or 16 per thousand, and yet the statement is that the death rate from tuberculosis alone of Indians there under Federal supervision is 35 per thousand.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is comparing the percentage of deaths with deaths elsewhere.

Mr. COOPER. I was referring to the percentage of all deaths.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state briefly—just about half a minute—that last year's appropriation bill carried $40,000 for the purpose of building a hospital for the treatment of these very diseases among the Kiowa and Comanche Indians on the Fort Sill Reservation. We met the very matter concerning which the New York Herald has had so much to say.

Mr. COOPER. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] another question. What do these 500 officials do; what are the so-called agents doing?

Mr. CARTER. They do the Indians. [Laughter and applause.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think this is intentional or unintentional on their part?

Mr. CARTER. I believe they do it with malice aforethought. Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman think that there ought to be a substitution of another kind of supervision from that which prevails there now?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have very clearly in my mind what should be done with the Indians in Oklahoma, the so-called Five Civilized Tribes. It is quite complicated and would entail a lengthy discussion which I have not the time to take up right now. I wish I had. In general, it provides this: The turning loose of all the Indians whom this Congress has legislated upon as legally competent and dividing among them every dollar of money in the Treasury that belongs to them, and then placing them upon their own resources, but continue supervision of the restricted class of Indians until they become competent.

Mr. COOPER. Well, I will say to the gentleman among the articles I read in the Herald on this subject is one from Mr. Leupp and Mr. Meritt and other presumably very expert men of the Indian service, and they all agree and say that in many respects conditions are just as bad as they can be. What has the Indian Committee done to change or looking toward a change of those conditions?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, this disease of trachoma has only been brought to the attention of Congress within the last few years, and if the gentleman will examine the Indian appropriation bill he will find we have been making an appropriation annually for the purpose of an investigation and the treatment of this disease of which he has spoken.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Mr. CARTER. I will have to refuse to be interrupted further because I have some other matters to which I wish to call attention, and my time has mostly been consumed in colloquy.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] tells us that he opposed the big fee of $750,000 when it was passed by this It is strange that the Record does not show something about it. The RECORD shows that the act under which this fee was approved passed this House without any such provision. It went to the Senate without any such provision. It went to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am not sure that the matter was inserted there. But when it came back from conference the provision was there under which the $750,000 fee was permitted, and the Record shows absolutely no objection to it by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. It is not my recollection that the $750,000 fee was ever allowed by Congress.

Mr. CARTER. You are correct as to the fixing of the fee itself.

Mr. MANN. I suppose so. When it was announced that the $750,000 fee was to be paid, I denounced it, and endeavored to secure legislation which would prevent not only the payment of that but any other similar fee.

Mr. CARTER. Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is true; but the gen-tleman voted for that provision which took the safeguard of approval out of the hands of the Secretary of the Interior and put it in the hands of an unknown court.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has no authority for saying that I voted for it.

Mr. CARTER. The record shows that the gentleman did not make any objection.

Mr. MANN. I did not have an opportunity to make an objection. I did not know there was such a provision.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman at the very best, then, stands only on all fours with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Steph-ENS], against whom he made the charge.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas was on the committee, and it was his business to know.

Mr. CARTER. But the gentleman was not on the conference committee, and this matter was inserted in conference, with no consideration whatever by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Judge Little, of Arkansas, was on that conference. I was not.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] had no better opportunity of getting information about it than the gentleman from Illinois had.

Mr. MANN. I was talking about subsequently.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There were 12 Republicans to 6 Democrats.

Mr. CARTER. To end it all I will say that I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has been opposed to the fee. But we know the one thing that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] has continually dinged into our ears ever since that transaction has been the injustice of the big McMurray fee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I pray the indulgence of the committee for a brief expression of my personal feelings in these premises. I am proud that the blood of the aborigines of this country course through my veins. I believe I feel as keenly my responsibility to defend the Indian and his property from the greed of the unscrupulous grafter as any man on the floor of this House. for they are flesh of my flesh, bone of my bone, and blood of my blood.

But the gentleman from South Dakota has said that political consideration influenced the Members from Oklahoma in deciding these matters between the Indians and whites. The gentleman may speak for himself, but not for me. Let me assure the gentleman that the first consideration coming into my mind, when weighing an Indian question, is not that of political exigency, but that of loyalty and fealty of blood; and if the time should ever come when my hand or my voice should be wittingly raised against the Indian and his interest, may that hand be palsied, withered, and paralyzed, and my tongue be cleft to the roof of my mouth, that I may not in the future give expression to sentiments either for or against them.

But, Mr. Chairman, never was a more thorough and farreaching effort organized and put into execution to defame and slander the fair name of one of the sister States of this Republic than that attempted by the officials of the Indian Bureau in Oklahoma against that State, and which it appears is being done in a large measure for political consideration.

During the recent campaign letters were sent out under Government frank misstating facts in attempts, as I verily believe, to discredit the candidacy of the three men from Oklahoma, Mr. DAVENPORT, Mr. FERRIS, and myself.

And since the election information has come to me through a reliable source that a large portion of the time of these Indian officials at Muskogee is being consumed in formulating plans to take part in the congressional redistricting of our State, to the disadvantage of some of the gentlemen who now have the honor to represent Oklahoma, and it will give me great pleasure to have each and every one of these leeches opposed to my interests, for I feel certain that the selfishness of their purpose will be so obvious as to work to my advantage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these Indian Office officials are doing nobody any damage by their political activities, except the Indian himself. For if their time had been employed in honest endeavors to protect the helpless wards left to their stewardship instead of vain political attempts it might not be necessary to listen to such charges of fraud and corruption as have been presented to this House to-day. In other words, the same responsibility that rests on our courts rests on the Indian Bureau, and you can not convict our county judges without incriminating the district agents.

Let me read, if I have the time, just one little quotation from a report of one of the Indian officials to the Secretary of the Interior. He says:

And now, Mr. Oklahoma citizen, it is time to adopt the recall and ast every Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, barring

Are politics being played in the handling of Indian affairs, my friends? I call upon the fair-minded Members of this body to bear witness

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule. The CHAIRMAN. All general debate on the bill has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. FERRIS. And, Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.
Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record my remarks about the Mississippi Choc-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], and his colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carten], ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $200,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if he can inform me where I can secure a copy of the printed hearings on the bill now before us.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The stenographers' reports have not come in yet. We had extensive hearings last spring before we prepared the bill of last winter, and we also had hearings a few days since, but the stenographers' reports have not been received yet, so that we have not had opportunity to have them printed.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says that the committee had hearings on another bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On last year's appropriation bill, with the same language.

Mr. MONDELL. I am speaking of the bill now pending before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The bill now before the House is the Indian appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year. Last year's bill, for the service of the current year, was the same. It was in the same language and for the same amounts, and extensive hearings were printed thereon. We have had short hearings on this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that the reason why there have been no hearings worth mentioning on this bill and no hearings printed is that the bill is identical this year with the last year's bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct, and the circumstances and conditions are the same.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill is so entirely identical with the current Indian appropriation bill that there is no reason why Members and others concerned in the Indian Service should be informed about it, and therefore there were no extensive hearings. Is that the understanding?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There were hearings, as I stated, but we have not had time to print them yet. But they will be printed.

Mr. MONDELL. Were any considerable hearings had in connection with the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When we were not satisfied with any item we had hearings upon it. We cut this item $24,000, because there was an unexpended balance of $24,000 under the other bill.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing available here in the way of printed matter whereby anybody in the House can inform himself as to the reasons for allowing or denying any of the items estimated for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is in the office now, at the present time.

Mr. MONDELL. In what office?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In my office. There are the printed hearings of last year concerning the same items in the As to this item, we reduced it $24,000.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose there are also in the gentleman's office the printed hearings of two years ago and of three years ago and of four years ago. But what information could I secure from those printed hearings on the bill that is now before the House? I have been seeking information in regard to this particular bill, and I have been unable to secure it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman from Wyoming had come before the committee a few days ago, when we were considering this item, he would have had the opportunity of being heard upon it.

Mr. MONDELL. How long did the committee consider this item-for five minutes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Long enough to satisfy ourselves that it was correct.

Mr. MONDELL. What evidence does the committee present in the way of hearings in this particular instance in relation to the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. If I may supplement what the chairman has said, we had quite extensive hearings even this year; not quite as extensive as we had last year.

Mr. MONDELL. What ler man call extensive hearings? What length of hearings does the gentle-

Mr. FERRIS. Just let me conclude my statement, and then the gentleman can judge for himself. We had the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and we had the irrigation people, both Mr. Newell and the irrigation people of the Indian Office. We had three or four different officials from the Indian Office, and asked them in detail about the items.

Where is all this valuable information to be Mr. MONDELL.

had?

Mr. FERRIS. The committee stenographers took it down. Of course, the gentleman not being there and not appearing be-fore the committee, any item that he might have been interested in, this or any other, was not presented.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not a member of the committee, and I have no interest in this item any more than any other Member of the House has, but I am interested in the Indian appropriation bill, as I am in all appropriation bills, as a Member of the House. We are accustomed to inform ourselves with regard to appropriation bills by obtaining and reading the printed reports of the hearings. In this case, if there were any hearings, they must have been very brief indeed, because the bill was very promptly reported to the House. I have not been able to secure a copy of whatever hearings there may have been, either in the original notes or in the manuscript or in printed form. I should like to be informed with regard to the matters before the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman might have the committee stenographers read their notes to him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to strike out any portion of this bill; but I really would like to know whether the stenographic reports of the hearings before the Indian Affairs Committee have been written out.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know, Mr. MANN. Why should we go to the expense of having stenographers to report the hearings unless the hearings are printed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that most of the stenographic reports of these hearings have been written out and have reached the committee, but not all of them. As soon as they are complete they will be printed.

Mr. MANN. When did they reach the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As fast as the committee stenographers transcribed them.

Mr. MANN. I have had the fortune or misfortune of serving as chairman of one of the committees of the House, and other gentlemen have had similar service. I believe it has always been the invariable custom of the stenographers who take the hearings before the committees on one day to furnish their copy written out the next morning. With every other committee except the distinguished Committee on Indian Affairs it has been the custom to send the transcript of the testimony to the Printing Office and have it printed the next day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not the custom, however, to do that until all of the copy has come in, so that it can be printed all together.

Mr. MANN. It is not the custom of any other committee in the House except the Committee on Indian Affairs to wait until all the testimony is in before it is printed. It is the custom to have the testimony printed as it is taken. What is the use of printing testimony now on the Indian appropriation bill, when the bill will be passed to-day? I should have supposed that the gentleman in charge of the bill would have the testimony printed for consideration in making up the bill or for the membership of the House in the discussion of the bill. However, I have no disposition to criticize the Committee on Indian I should like to ask my distinguished friend from Affairs. Texas [Mr. Stephens] whether this item is in the same amount as in the law for the current year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We reduced the amount $50,000 because there is an unexpended balance and it was not neces-sarv.

Mr. MANN. What is the money used for; what surveys are to be made in the Indian service next year? What authorization is there for making surveys for the allotment of land? The gentleman says there is a $50,000 surplus. Of course, nobody knows what the surplus for the current year will be, because the current year will not end until the 30th of June

Mr. KENDALL. They anticipate that surplus.

Mr. MANN. They guess at it, and it may be a good guess. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This money is to go to the General Land Office to reimburse them for having made the surveys for the Indian Office.

Mr. MANN. What surveys are to be made in the next fiscal What is the use of appropriating money unless you know something about the necessity for its use?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is under the jurisdiction of the department at the present time.

Mr. MANN. The department is not authorized to make allotments of land unless authorized by Congress. What allotments are authorized by which money could be used during the next fiscal year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have them right here and I will give them to the gentleman.

In this connection attention is invited to the following surveys which should be made at the earliest possible date: Conditions on the various private land grants, confirmed to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico by the Court of Private Land Claims, require that the boundaries of these grants be determined and marked with permanent monuments at the earliest practicable date. Conflicts are constantly arising between these Indians and white settlers, involving valuable timber and water rights which can only be finally settled, and avoided in the future, by determining and locating the boundaries of these various pueblos. It is estimated by the General Land Office that it will cost approximately $20,000 to survey the boundaries of these pueblos and establish mile and half-mile monuments with iron posts, brass capped.

Then it goes on and itemizes the whole matter, which I will

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $325,000, to remain available until expended: Provided. That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds are or may be available under any other act of Congress: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit reasonable expenditures from this appropriation for preliminary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects, for investigations and surveys for power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, or to prevent the Bureau of Indian Affairs from having the benefit of consultation with engineers in other branches of the public service or carrying out existing agreements with the Reclamation Service; for pay of one chief inspector of Irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $4,000; one assistant inspector firigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation of irrigation, at $3 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-care fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government and while remaining there under orders, $4,200; in all, $335,700: Provided also, That not to exceed seven superinendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, may be employed.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that Mr. MANN. paragraph. Will my friend from Texas give us some information about this item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is the general irrigation work, A part of these funds are nonreimbursable; when paid out for the purpose of building ditches and dams for Indians who have no funds they are not reimbursable. But if paid out for Indians who have funds and lands to be sold hereafter, they are expected to recoup the amount of money expended by the United States Government for building the permanent irrigation works. This is an estimate for the whole United States, a great many reservations, and I think it will be unnecessary to read all of Mr. MANN. If the Indians have no lands, what use have they for irrigation works?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indians have lands, of course. You could not have irrigation projects unless they had lands.

Mr. MANN. If the Indians have the land, why should not the land pay the cost of irrigation? What further obligation is there on the part of the Government of the United States to build irrigation projects for Indians who are not under govern-mental supervision, perhaps whose land is allotted to them, than for anybody else out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The United States is building for white people all over the United States, under the reclamation act, irrigation projects and dams; spending millions of dollars for white persons, and certainly they ought to expend money in the same way for Indians.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be spent in the same way as for white persons. Now, for white persons it is all chargeable to the land. All the cost of irrigation projects is charged against the land and is repaid to the Treasury. This item is simply a gratuity to some Indians whose property has been so far looted that they have not very much, or else we propose to present them with something they ought not to have.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse the Government or not. If the Indians have property out of which it can be reimbursed we put the word "reimbursable" in the bill, but if they can not reimburse or refund to the Government the amount of money used by it we leave the word "reimbursable" out because they are the wards of the Government, and the United States is compelled to supply them with water and therefore irrigation projects.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, this item has nothing to do with reimbursable funds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not. Mr. MANN. Now, upon what theory do we proceed in authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter upon any new project he pleases to be paid out of the Federal Treasury and not charged to the property that is benefited thereby?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Some of it will be charged and can be charged.

Mr. MANN. By what authority? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It can be done by the Secretary of the Interior under existing laws.

Mr. MANN. Under what law?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are many streams running through these reservations. By damming these streams we very often create a water power by which electricity can be supplied to adjoining towns and the adjoining country. If that can be sold, then the United States Government will reimburse itself for money already expended on these projects and, at the same time, aid the Indians by giving them water to irrigate their lands.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the purpose of this item of $325,000 is to dam up rivers somewhere in order to obtain water power to sell lights to adjoining towns?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been done. The town of Roosevelt, in Arizona, has been built and an immense water power supplied there.

Mr. MANN. That was not done under any irrigation project, constructed under the provisions of this paragraph of the bill, was it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But this bill permits that to be done.

Mr. MANN. I know, but is it the policy of the Government to pay out of the Federal Treasury for the construction of dams in order to develop hydroelectric power to sell to neighboring towns, and not even have the fund reimbursable?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It might be done.

Mr. MANN. It might be done, but is that the proper policy for the Government to pursue? We might build Washington monuments in every county, but we will not do it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is the policy that has been pursued for some time, and that the Government proposes to pursue in the future, that if they have water running to waste, that can not be used for other purposes than irrigation or for the purpose of producing this power, it should not go to waste. This question of conservation reaches the Indian lands just as it does the public lands of the United States, and ought to be used in the same way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no comparison between That is to provide funds for the various reclamation them. projects out of the reclamation fund in the Treasury, which is all reimbursable by the purchasers of the land which is improved.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me read to the gentleman what the department says.

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. Here is the proposition. I know the department has been urging it. The Interior Department or the Indian Department is not concerned with principles to be adopted by Congress in disposing of the money in the Federal Treasury. They see something that ought to be done, and they want to do it, or, as the gentleman from Oklahoma says, they see the Indians and want to do them, which I think was a very unwarranted assertion. Shall the Government of the United States pursue the policy of permitting the white people, where the Indians live, to take away their most valuable properties, and then have the Government construct irrigation projects for their benefit and charge nothing against the land, where the land is improved?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have already undertaken many of these projects. They are under way at the present time.

I know they are-too many of them, altogether. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This money is to carry forward in many instances projects already begun, and the money already expended would be lost unless these appropriations are

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing to assume that those projects which have been commenced can not very well be abandoned, although I think the Government ought to charge the expense against the property which is benefited. But the provisions of this bill authorize the department to proceed with the investigations and surveys in reference to new projects, and having done that they can go ahead with the new projects under the provisions of the bill. The department is not confined in the expenditure of this sum of money for projects already under construction.

Mr. RODDENBERY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me call attention to the fact that no new project can be begun which costs over $30,000 without recommendation to Congress and appropriation for that specific purpose and without surveys having been made.

Mr. MANN. But you can start 10 that cost $25,000 apiece. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is not aware of the condition, I presume, in the West. You could not dam up a stream of any size by making an appropriation of $10,000 to furnish irrigation on 20,000 or 30,000 acres of land.

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman well knows, there are a large number of irrigation projects now under construction which cost less than $30,000 under the gentleman's supervision, yet the gentleman asks me how can it be done, and the gentleman is proposing to appropriate money for that very purpose, and that is what I am asking about.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman refuse to give water to the Indians who live in a small district and give it to those who live on a large reservation, where they had large streams?

Mr. MANN. I would not refuse to give it to any of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would be treat all alike?

Mr. MANN. I would treat all alike.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where it is a project under $30,000 the department has the right to proceed without investigation by Congress. If it is over $30,000 surveys must be made and the matter fully investigated and reported to Congress and an appropriation must be made; otherwise the appropriation is made out of the lump-sum appropriation for irrigation purposes.

Mr. MANN. Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

RODDENBERY]

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I was just going to ask the gentleman to what page his motion applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has reserved the point of order.

At the bottom of page 2 and page 3.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I have not been following the consideration of the bill very closely, but would it be possible to ascertain now from the gentleman who has the floor, the chairman of the committee, if this bill will be completed this after-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are very anxious to get through with the bill.

Mr. MANN. I see no reason why the bill should not be completed by 5 o'clock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia that this bill has no new legislation, has nothing in it that could or should be objected to, and we have very carefully considered it. It is cut more than a million dollars, I believe, from the proposed bill, and there is not a single item here that should not be carried in this bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I thoroughly understand the language of the gentleman from Texas, but the countenance of the gentleman from Illinois is very strongly expressive when he states that there is no reason why we should not get through this afternoon. There are about 31 pages of the bill, I believe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We can proceed with it.
Mr. RODDENBERY. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to give it as his opinion that we would complete the bill to-day?

Mr. MANN. I hope so, by 5 o'clock. Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-three gentlemen are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Whole House on the state of the Union.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] rise?

Mr. FERRIS. For the purpose of proceeding with the bill. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FERRIS. I desire to refer to the pending point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. FERRIS. The item to which the gentleman from Illinois has a pending point of order is the general appropriation item for scattering bands of Indians, without any funds, in the United States. No part of the money is to be expended in our State of Oklahoma, but it is to be expended wherever Indians can be found here and there without any funds of any kind or character in the irrigable sections, part of which is for the main-tenance, part of which is to aid in new projects, and part of which is to develop power purposes, and the other is to maintain projects already begun. The department asked for $360,000. We had them before us, and interrogated them quite at length about it, and we thought the showing which they made did not entitle them to more than they had last year, and therefore we gave them the same amount which they had then.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman inform the committee of the location of the power plants that are being constructed under this?

Mr. FERRIS. The chairman of the committee read that before the point of no quorum was made, and it is in the RECORD.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not recall that he said anything about the location of the power plant.

Mr. FERRIS. He read that before; but for the benefit of the gentleman I will read it again. I read on page 2 of the justification of the department, as follows:

To pay the proportionate charges for power development and administration building of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association assessed against 3,900 acres of Indian land. In addition to the cost of the Roosevelt Dam and irrigation distributing system, the water users' association is expending about $1,000,000 in building power plants to get the maximum income from this source at the earliest possible date. It is expected that when this power development shall have become completed the returns will reduce very substantially the cost of maintenance. This power development is borne equally by the whole acreage of the Salt River project.

It is understood that the assessments of $2.40 per acre will cover a period of 10 years, of which two payments have been made.

That is one item. Now, in the hearings before us we had the engineers who are carrying on this irrigation matter from the Indian Office, and they told us that they thought they could truthfully say, and without any exaggeration, that the money expended for this purpose would be returned manyfold within the near future. Whether they are right about that or not the gentleman may know better than we.

Mr. MONDELL. The particular case the gentleman cites is not a case of construction of power plant at all, but it is simply a payment from this fund to the reclamation fund in order to reimburse the reclamation fund for expenditures, or proportionate part of expenditures, at the Salt River Dam for the benefit of Indian lands. Are these Camp McDowell Indians that are referred to?

Mr. FERRIS. I could give the gentleman the items of expense for this particular appropriation if he desires it. They are:

For the salary, per diem, and traveling expenses of the Chief Inspector of Irrigation, $6,100.

For the salary, per diem, and traveling expenses of the Assistant Inspector of Irrigation, $4,600.

That includes both salary and traveling expenses, office of the Chief Engineer, payment of educational and registered employees for special investigations on various reservations, including educational employees and incidental expenses of the field section of the Washington office, $15,000.

Salary, per diem, and traveling and incidental expenses of H. F. Robinson, Superintendent of Irrigation, when on special investigations Admisson, superintendent and inspection, $5,000. C. R. Oldberg $5,000. L. M. Holt, $5,000. F. R. Schank, $5,000. W. S. Hanna, $5,000. H. W. Deitz, $5,000.

If I may have just a moment further, I will read a further statement to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the gentleman simply refers to some salaries. He has not referred to any construction whatever.

Mr. FERRIS. I will read to the gentleman the further part of this justification for using the irrigation general fund. These are the reasons given in support of this particular item:

This fund, which is nonreimbursable, is a very important one to the welfare of many needy Indians. It is applicable for work on various reservations where the Indians have no resources which can be used as a basis of credit to obtain loans from the Government. It is used for both irrigation and drainage; also for the protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods; it is also used for the payment of annual reclamation charges for Indian lands under the Truckee-Carson. Nev., and Salt River Valley, Ariz., reclamation projects. It provides for the expenses of the office of the Chief Inspector of Irrigation in connection with the exercise of general supervision over all irrigation work performed on Indian reservations, the preparation of monthly and annual cost reports, covering expenditures made from the general fund, tribal moneys, or special appropriations.

The amounts requested are given on the following pages, from which I have just read to the gentleman the items.

Now, they justify it on the ground that throughout the United States, where irrigable lands are situated, there are scattering bands of Indians that have to have help. The Government is not going to get the money back. It is not reimbursable. It is a proposition of the Government going down into its own pocket and doing for the Indians in the West, and especially in the Northwest, what they can not do for themselves. The theory of it is that it will place these Indians on a sound foundation, where they will be able to make their own living. Possibly they will and possibly they will not. But that is the appropriation that was made in former years, and we have done this year precisely what we have done in former years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Also, Mr. Chairman, in addition to its being expended in the hope of making these Indians self-supporting, much of this money is paid out for Indian labor, and we are thereby enabling them to support themselves by their own labor.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. The language provides that Indian labor shall be used wherever practicable.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] and other Members interested in the subject that under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of 1910 the Secretary of the Interior is required annually, before the convening of Congress in December, to transmit to Congress a detailed itemized statement of the expenditures of the lump-sum appropriations. He will find such a document relating to the expenditure of the appropria-tions for surveys and allotments in House Document No. 1024 of the present third session of the Sixty-second Congress, and the document which gives the details as to the expenditure of the fund for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, the last fiscal year, is House Document No. 1034, giving the State, the project, the amount expended, the amount originally estimated, and the amount that has been expended altogether on the several projects; and he will find it very interesting, if he is honestly seeking information relative to how this fund is expended-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the gentleman's last statement-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And I may say I assume he is honest in his desire for information.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the committee endeavored to determine where these funds were being used.

Mr. FERRIS. We did.

Mr. MONDELL. I was endeavoring to secure information as to the reservations on which the expenditures are now being made.

Mr. FERRIS All I can say to the gentleman is that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the department in charge of irrigation have in the past been allowed some latitude, and are allowed in this bill some latitude in regard to these expenditures. None are made in our State, because we have no irrigation projects there, but in different States that have irrigation projects there arise cases where the Indians are totally without funds, some having 5-acre allotments and some 10-acre allotments, and so on, and by the supply of this water by irrigation, through the action of the department, they can be put on their feet. I have no doubt that some of the money will be expended in the gentleman's State. He is very industrious. None of the money is to be expended in our State, where the pot usually boils. We have no part of this fund and no part of the general lump fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MONDELL. I thought that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] had concluded.
Mr. FERRIS. I had. I yield the floor.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. Stephens], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, does not seem to have a very clear notion as to the character of this particular fund or item of appropriation. At least I got that impression from what he said.

This is clearly a gratuity. I can not understand how any of it under any circumstances would be reimbursable. I imagine it is a fact that none of it has been returned, and that the reimbursement of no part of the fund under this appropriation is contemplated. It is a gratuity, and if wisely expended is a proper and necessary gratuity.

I suppose this is one of the items the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] had in mind when he said that the hearings were not as extensive as they have been in the past, because in many cases the appropriation was the same as last year. The department asked for a considerable increase, but the sum carried in the bill is to a dollar the amount carried in the current It strikes me as being a little curious that, without any considerable hearings on the subject, the committee should arrive at the conclusion that this work, scattered over a great many States-and, I suppose, expended on many projectsshould for the coming fiscal year receive exactly the amount to a dollar of the expenditure proposed for the current fiscal year.

STEPHENS of Texas. In the instances where the amount appropriated was the same the department failed to expend the amount appropriated last year, and it would be useless to give them more than they expended last year.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman inform us where they are now expending this money?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Oklahoma has stated it fully.

Now, will the chairman of the committee to this item? answer another question in regard to this item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice that it contains a provision that no part of these funds shall be used on any project provided for by specific appropriation, but this item also carries the appropriation for the chief irrigation engineer and his assistants. What is the practice of the department, or of the Indian Office, in those cases where the services of the chief and his assistants are required in connection with the construction of projects specifically provided for in other items? Does this prohibition of the use of this sum on projects specifically provided for prevent the employment of irrigation engineers on those projects? Or, if not, are the services of the engineers for the portion of the time so employed charged to those specific items and returned to this fund?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the engineer in charge of a certain project belongs to the Indian service, it is paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. How can it be done under the provision here that no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation project for which specific appropriation is made in this act or for which public funds may be available?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are all for irrigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to direct an inquiry to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. Has the gentleman from Illinois made a point of order against this paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Not yet. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to have the gentleman from Wyoming yield. I simply want to inquire what we are doing. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is addressing the committee.

Mr. MILLER. On the point of order?
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reserved a point of order. Does the gentleman from Minnesota make the point of order that the gentleman from Wyoming is not addressing himself to the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER. I do not want to do that, but it seems to me we should get on with the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has furnished us with such a volume of information with regard to the items of the bill that I suppose we should not take any time at all in the discussion of it; but, unfortunately, I have not been able to get a scrap of information with regard to any of the items of the bill anywhere, and I am seeking now to secure some light with regard to these important propositions, in connection with the discussion of the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make up my mind that gentlemen are not proceeding in good faith, and it is the duty of the committee to do the best it can to explain fully, and am going to do what I can and let gentlemen take the responsibility who pursue it further than good faith requires.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman whether he makes the point of order?

Mr. MANN. If the Chair insists upon the point of order being disposed of before information is furnished to Members of the House whether the item ought to remain in the bill, I will make it. In the first place, there is no authority at law for the appropriation, and, in the second place, there is no authority for changing the existing law to provide that the superintendent of irrigation shall be a skilled irrigation engineer or to provide the number which may be employed. The item in the bill proposes to make an indefinite appropriation for the construction of irrigation projects which may or may not have already been undertaken and which would authorize the construction of irrigation projects indefinitely throughout the United States. had reserved the point of order thinking that gentlemen might give the information which would cause me to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired to know whether the gentleman from Illinois was going to make the point of order.

The Chair had no disposition to cut off debate.

Mr. MANN. I would like to reserve the point of order, and I would like to ask a question or two, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask whether the gentleman is quite certain whether there is any provision in the bill which would authorize the construction of a power plant? I do not find anything in this item.

Mr. FERRIS. That is in the justification, and I think there is language in the bill that implies that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know where it is. I supposed this was an irrigation project. It is true that growing out of irrigation projects there might be incidentally the construction of a power plant. I should not think it desirable to construct power plants primarily for furnishing power, and I hope that was not the intention of the item. What leads the gentleman to believe that it is the expectation to construct a power plant except where the construction of the power plant is incidental to the irrigation project?

Mr. FERRIS. The language I relied upon begins on line 17, which reads as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods.

Then there is the explanation of the commissioner and of the irrigation engineers which appear in the justification to pay the proportionate charges for power development.

Mr. MANN. That is an irrigation project. Mr. FERRIS. I will read:

To pay the proportionate charges for power development and administration buildings of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association assessed against 3,900 acres of Indian land. In addition to the cost of the Roosevelt Dam and irrigation distributing system, the water nsers' association is expending about $1,000,000 in building a power plant to get the maximum income from this source at the earliest possible date. It is expected that when this power development shall have become complete the returns will reduce very substantially the cost of maintenance. The power development is borne equally by the whole acreage of the Salt River project.

Mr. MANN. That is all in connection with an irrigation project. The construction of a power plant in connection with an irrigation project is one thing. If I thought that this item authorized the Interior Department to construct a power plant without reference to irrigation projects, I should insist on the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois does not care to pursue that, I want to reply to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, after the explanation made, but with some doubt about it, I shall withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Chair took me off my

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming had already, by oversight of the Chair, spoken twice as long as he was entitled to speak. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming asked in a former part of his remarks where this money was to be expended. In my judgment, that is a legitimate question, and I think it ought to be answered. The gentleman asked me if the McDowell Indians were to have part of it. I have the information now:

McDowell Indians: To pay annual reclamation charges on 1,000 acres of land under the Salt River project, to be signed up for allotments to Indians of the Camp McDowell Indian Reservation, $2,500.

Then there is a note to this effect:

Their there is a note to this cheect.

This land has not been signed up, but it has been reserved for allotment purposes. It was proposed to allot Camp McDowell Indians on the Salt River Reservation, but they objected to removing. If they should elect to pay these allotments, this sum would be required to make up the first payment on account of water rights. If Camp McDowell Indians remain on the reservation, this land may be allotted to Salt River Indians, and it will be necessary to pay for water rights from the Roosevelt reclamation project.

In addition to that, there is the Gila Bend Reservation-Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me right there, the gentleman is aware that that allotment to the Camp McDowell Indians on the Salt River project has been under investigation by a committee of Congress, and it was the understanding of the members of that committee

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a point of order. I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Wyoming has the

Mr. RODDENBERY. I understood that the Chair ruled that the gentleman from Wyoming had already consumed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was recognized for five minutes more Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to more than five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I submit I have the floor, and I have already yielded to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the gentleman from Oklahoma has yielded, I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, to conclude my statement, it was the understanding of the members of that committee that the Indian Bureau had given up all thought of moving the Indians from the Camp McDowell lands and placing them under the Salt River project.

Mr. FERRIS. I believe the gentleman will observe that it is stated in the alternative-in the event they refuse to be removed and take allotments on the Camp McDowell Reservation, they then can have the money to use to pay for water rights from the Roosevelt reclamation project.

Mr. MONDELL. They already have refused, as I understand it, and we understood the Indian Office did not expect to further press the matter upon them.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed, I will give him the information that he asked for, which the House is entitled to know. There is the Glia Bend Reservation, and that is to have $15,000, and the reasons for it are stated.

Mr. MONDELL. That is where they have already expended $500,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Then there is the Maricopa Papagoes, and they are to have $15,000 to expend. There is to be 3,000 acres on Cahuilla Reservation, in California. Those are irrigable lands. Three thousand acres are suitable for irrigation, and 160 acres are irrigated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order against the paragraph that it is new legislation. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Oklahoma, if he desires to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the estimate of the department was for $360,000. The committee allowed it to the amount of $335,000. The language is the same as was carried last year, and this money—most, if not all—is for the purpose of maintenance and carrying on of irrigation projects already begun. It is for the benefit of the Indian service, regularly provided for by existing law. It is estimated for by the Indian Bureau. It is to pay the salaries and expenses of the Irrigation Division of the Indian Bureau, regularly constituted by law and in full operation, as it has been for years. The Indian bill is for the purpose of providing for the Indian Department lawfully created, and I do not think the paragraph is subject to the point of order. I would like to let the argument be concluded by the chairman of the committee, who, perhaps, has the matter better in hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill whether this is providing for a continuation of work already begun and authorized?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is. I do not think there is a new project in here that I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I desire to be heard, Mr. Chairman. The paragraph, the Chair observes, is on page 2 of the Indian appropriation bill, and while this item was carried in the provisions of the last appropriation bill it does not come under the head of a continuing project nor is it specifically authorized by existing statute to warrant the appropriation. And a further point, Mr. Chairman. It will be observed that this Indian appropriation and this paragraph is providing an appropriation now, in December, 1912, when an appropriation for this specific purpose is already made and will not be exhausted until July 1, 1913. This paragraph provides an appropriation from July 1, 1913, to July 1, 1914, and the bill and this paragraph is subject to the same point, because if the Chair will examine the record he will find that on April 16, 1912, and on June 7, 1912, two bills restricting immigration were reported to the House favorably from the Committee on Immigration and have never been given consideration. I do not now see the leaders of the House on the floor when a filibuster is being conducted on this bill in order to prevent the consideration of those two immigration bills, reported now nearly a year ago. It is not in order, Mr. Chairman, for the Committee on Indian Affairs to bring its bill in here and with it block and hold up for to-day and to-morrow the consideration of the immigration bill, when there is no need for this appropriation for six months. Mr. FERRIS. Will th

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In just a moment. And under the rules of the House it is improper for this bill to be considered between now and adjournment for Christmas, because on July 25, 1912, the chairman of the Committee on Rules of this House wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, in which he said:

On behalf of the Committee on Rules I will say as chairman that early in December of the next session of Congress—

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY (continuing):

the bill will be brought by rule before the House of Representatives in order that it may be considered.

The chairman by name designating the Dilliugham immigration bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Davenport] makes the point of order the gentleman from Georgia is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I will confine myself to the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In just a moment. Mr. Chairman, because the appropriation in this paragraph is jess than was recommended by the department or because it is under the estimate is no reason why it should be in order. Why, the paragraph is much more palpably subject to the point of order than the point of order made against my statement that the leaders were making no effectual effort to force the immediate consideration of the immigration bill. Early in December is now past and gone. The statement that I made that there is now before the House an immigration bill and that the Democratic leaders are submitting to its being stifled is much more in order than the paragraph in this bill seeking to appropriate money that is not needed on the face of the bill for more than six months. Where are the Democratic leaders that they are not here fighting the filibuster against this bill if they want to get to the ing the himself and immigration bill? [Applause on the Republication bill? [Applause on the Republication of the Manual Property of the M [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RODDENBERY. Why do not the Democratic leaders help my friend, the chairman of the Immigration Committee, put his bill through if they are not willing to the blocking of immigration legislation, legislation which the chairman of the Committee on Rules has promised the Congress and promised the people should be considered early in December?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In just a moment. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph is out of order for the additional reason that it provides an appropriation for an object that on its face is contrary to law, and there is no authorization in the statute for such an appropriation. I do not understand why the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and my distinguished friend from Oklahoma will stand for preferential consideration of a bill, when the money is not needed for over six months, instead of fighting for an immediate fulfillment of our promise to the people to pass, or at least consider, the bill restricting immigration in this country early in December. [Applause.] I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, how my distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] raises the question of order on the line of my efforts, when it is six months before he will need the Indian appropriation, and yet millions of people are asking that the restrictive immigration bill, for which I am contending, be considered, and our chairman of the Committee on Rules, four months ago, has stated, in writing, that early in December it would be considered. Yet it is now the 13th of December, and neither God nor man will see the immigration bill acted on before the Christmas holidays if the pending bill does not give way to it. So you need not say I am helping Mr. Mann conduct a filibuster against this bill. I make the point of order in order to get opportunity to demonstrate to the country, and state it on the floor, that the leaders on the Democratic side are not making the necessary effort to comply with the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Rules or to pass [Applause.] It is in the power of the leaders to the bill now. cause this Indian appropriation bill to be set aside to-morrow for consideration of the immigration bill. I rise to call attention to this only way and opportunity to in any degree live up to the promise of the chairman of the Committee on Rules for early consideration of this immigration legislation.

You shall not bring in these measures and consider them as privileged bills, and thus be in position to fool the people at home and make them believe we in good faith tried to get the immigration bill and could not do it. It can be done to-morrow by yielding this Indian bill to the immigration bill.

Mr. Chairman, on the question of order that I have submitted-[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman that he confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I desire to say that it is not in the power of the minority leader, aided by one alleged filibustering Democrat, to prevent the great Democratic leaders of the House from adopting such means as will get a vote on the immigration bill if they want it. This is a Democratic measure, and I am here, Mr. Chairman, saying to my colleagues of the majority and to the gentlemen of the minority, that it is time, by written promise, by parliamentary precedents, and in pursuance of good faith, to take up this immigration bill and act on it now, and not wait until January or February and then pass a piece of humbug legislation that we know will never be acted on by the Senate

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I had digressed slightly. [Laughter.] And I insist again, Mr. Chairman, as stated, that this paragraph is not authorized by law. Nor is it warranted by any statute, whereas a consideration of the immigration bill is promised by our Rules Committee, the promise is now past due, and in good faith the Democrats should perform. I am now standing by and supporting my Democratic chairman of the Committee on Rules and shall continue to do so until this Democratic measure is passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], the chairman of the committee, what authority exists for this appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The authority of law for the Indian Bureau. This is a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913. That carries this item referred to, as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, $325,000, to remain available until expanded. until expended.

Now, these dams, ditches, reservoirs, and so forth, are in the course of construction, and if there are any in here that are not in the course of construction, they are under the amount of $30,000, and the projects can be engaged in under existing law by the department without authorization of Congress. They have general authority of law to put in ditches, dams, reservoirs, and irrigation projects, where the amount does not exceed $30,000, and there is nothing in this bill that does not correspond with the law—nothing above $30,000. The dams, ditches, and so forth, above $30,000 have already been authorized by Congress under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, after the word "expended." On line 17. page 2, insert that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke].

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order was overruled. If so, I will withdraw the amendment. I thought the point of order was sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. Roddenbery], who apparently admits that he has been filibustering against the passage of this bill for the last hour and ten minutes, did me the honor to couple me with him in this filibustering expedition. I am perfectly willing to admit that the gentleman from Georgia has been filibustering, but I completely deny that I have been doing so. Here is an appropriation bill carrying something over $8,000,000 presented to the House without printed hearings of the committee, without any information whatever furnished in the report from the committee to the House, embracing a large number of important items, and in some cases embracing a policy to be pursued by the Government which will involve hereafter millions, if not hundreds of millions, of dollars.

And when inquiry is made concerning these items in a legitimate manner and not at length, but very briefly, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] considers that filibustering, and thereupon demands a quorum of the committee, and then takes the floor on the point of order and discusses something entirely apart from the point of order, again consuming time. he is correct when he says that he is filibustering. But a legitimate inquiry concerning an item in an appropriation bill, I hope, will never be considered as fillbustering by the House of Representatives. That is what we are here for, to a large extent—to furnish the supplies for the maintenance of the Government—and these items of appropriation in these appropriation bills ought to be scanned by somebody. They ought to be explained to the House when explanation is asked for, and the committee ought to be prepared to do it. No one ought to say it is filibustering to consider the items in a bill tarrying millions of dollars. I repudlate the idea that in asking questions concerning such matters I am endeavoring to filibuster or delay the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I now move that debate on the paragraph and all pending amendments thereto be closed. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing before the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I move that debate on the paragraph be now closed.

Mr. FERRIS. The paragraph has not yet been read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, $90,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. RODDENBERY. What line are we on?
Mr. DAVENPORT. On line 9, page 4.
The CHAIRMAN. Line 9, page 4.
Mr. RODDENBERY. Very well; line 9, page 4.
Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I observe that last year there was a provision in the bill providing that $10,000 should be approprieted for the purpose of an investigation by the Public appropriated for the purpose of an investigation by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the prevalence of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious diseases among Indians, and that that report was to be made not later than February 1, 1913. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, if that report has been made. I would like to know if the chairman of the committee can give us any information in reference to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The report may have been made, but it has not yet been filed with the committee or reached us.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be made to Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that within a very few days I noticed in the press of my State that representatives of this department and a physician and surgeon are now in the Northwest. The physician and surgeon is there at the present time, or has been there within a very few days, at work investigating this question, but I do not think the report has yet been received.

Mr. FOSTER. It has not been completed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not.
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that there has been a limited report made. A copy of it came to my office, I think, on Wednesday from some person designated by the Government to make the investigation in Oklahoma. The parties have been in Oklahoma, and they left there a short time ago. A preliminary report, at least, has been made, I presume, to the department of the Government which has the matter in charge. A copy was sent to me.

Mr. FOSTER. - Mr. Chairman, it has been stated a good many times, and I think with some degree of accuracy, in reference to trachoma and tuberculosis among Indians, that there was great prevalence among them of those diseases. What I was trying to get at was some information which would show whether or not the Government has made any progress in its efforts toward the eradication of these diseases, or the prevention of them; whether the Government is lessening the infection of trachoma, and whether there are fewer cases of tuberculosis or more cases now than heretofore.

I would like to know what the Government has been able to do for the Indians in reference to the treatment of these dis-I realize that it is a difficult matter to lessen diseases eases. among people who can not be taught the importance of sanitary conditions. I would like to know if the Government has been able to do anything or not in the suppression of these diseases.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, can answer in part the gentleman's inquiry. Mr. FOSTER. I should be glad.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The report states that trachoma yields to treatment-

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that is the fact, but strict sanitary regulations must be enforced.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. And certain recommendations are made. One recommendation in particular is to the effect that professional men, physicians, treat these cases at the homes of the Indians, where the physicians instruct the Indians that they should use individual towels, and instruct them otherwise along the lines of cleanliness, and demonstrate to them that by so doing these cases will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to state that there is a full report here from the department justifying this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman from Texas will excuse me, I am not attacking the appropriation, but what I want is information as to what they are doing in eradicating or preventing these diseases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was stated before the committee that during the fiscal year 1912 there were examined for these diseases 61,500 Indians. Of these 8,000, or 13 per cent, had tuberculosis, and 9,255, or 15 per cent, had trachoma. Now, I imagine that these examinations were made among certain tribes where these diseases are more prevalent than elsewhere. In fact, I know that to be the case. Some tribes are almost free from these infections, and the tribes where these examinations were made are in worse condition, so far as these diseases are concerned, than any other tribes in the United States, and these figures do not furnish a fair basis for all the Indians in the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform us whether the hearings which were had in reference to this item, if any were had, show that the amount of money appropriated here is sufficient to take care of this work and whether this work ought not to be done by the Public Health Service?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We gave them just the same amount that we did last year, and we are awaiting the report from the special committee appointed to investigate the question of tuberculosis and ophthalmia.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me this is a little different proposition, possibly, from some other items in the bill. Here are a lot of people who are likely to die within the next 12 months, or possibly the next six months, and a lot of others who are likely to become infected with trachoma. Now, in view of these facts I should like to inquire whether or not the present appropriation has been sufficient to produce a decline of these diseases among the Indians, whether they are able to eradicate trachoma and to prevent tuberculosis and smallpox among these

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a considerable medical force now in the employ of the department, and it was stated before the Committee on Indian Affairs that the medical force as it stands at present is still inadequate to cope with the situation, and material improvements over the present conditions must come through a specific improvement in the organization, personnel, and salaries of the medical force. The Indian Service physicians are the poorest paid in the Government, and yet their work is fully as difficult and, in many instances, involves greater hardship than the other service except in time of war. There are at the present time 50 contract physicians and 95 reg-ular physicians. The contract physicians receive $578 per annum on an average, and the regular physicians average $1,154 per annum. The contract physicians do not have the time, nor do they receive sufficient compensation, to enable them to perform the amount of medical work necessary.

That was the statement from which they made up these esti-

Mr. FOSTER. This $90,000 is in addition to the regular physicians and the contract physicians?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Mr. FOSTER. I realize that you can not get men to give sufficient medical service for $500 a year if there are a great many to treat.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are they required to devote their entire time to that work?

Mr. FOSTER. I judge that a physician who is in active practice would not be able to render sufficient service for that amount of money.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know anything about the facts in this case-whether or not they are required to give all their time to the work, or whether they are permitted to practice otherwise?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] be extended five minutes,

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from South Dakota that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I ask to be recognized on the amendment. I want to state in regard to the item—
Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order that all debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment, Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I move to strike out the last two words. With reference to this item I want to say that the department estimated that they ought to have $250,000 for this work in the next fiscal year. I did not favor the increase over the appropriation heretofore for this reason. I believe that the investigation that is now being made, when the report comes in, will show a condition of affairs that will perhaps be startling, and that large sums of money will have to be appropriated if we undertake to cope with it in the way of accomplishing much good. I believe the appropriation for the current fiscal year and the next fiscal year is sufficient to carry on the work of investigation, and to some extent to take care of the disease among the Indians.

The reason why I would not favor increasing the appropriation at this time is that in my own opinion if we are to engage in the expenditure of large sums of money in the care of diseased Indians, instead of creating in the Indian Bureau a health department, we ought to expend the money under the health department of the Government rather than in the Indian

I would say to the gentleman that if I could have my way about it this item of carrying on the reclamation work in the Indian Bureau, where large sums of money, going up into the million dollars, are expended, that it would not have been under the Indian Bureau, but under the Reclamation Service.

I want to get away as far as possible from these subjects that ought to be conducted under the department of the Government that is already equipped and that is possessed of the knowledge of the subject which the Indian Office does not have unless it creates a department within a department.

I want to say that about three years ago there was submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs a plan by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he proposed a complete department in each of the different divisions of the Indian Office-a health department, a reclamation department, a department that had charge of the timber interests of the Indians, and, I think, an agricultural department, and thus we would have had a bureau

It is because of that that I have not favored an increase of this appropriation in the use of a large sum of money in the Indian Office. But when we get the information that we will get in a short time, I think, if we have to appropriate large sums, let us do it under the proper department of the Government, and let the Committee on Appropriations make the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman's ideas are exactly

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. MANN. I have a bona fide amendment that I wish to

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on the paragraph be closed. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were 7 ayes and 31 noes.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to be Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. recognized with reference to this question of tuberculosis.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for an amendment to be offered increasing the amount of the appro-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 9, by striking out the figures " $90,000\,$ " and inserting " 125,000. "

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should not offer this amendment if I felt the committee had an opportunity to fully consider matters involved in this item. The appropriation for the current year is $90,000. The department, with the current year well passed, has concluded that it needs $250,000 for this work for the coming fiscal year. The committee did not increase the appropriation at all, and I think that no member of the committee will justify their failure to increase the appropriation from $90,000 to $250,000, the amount asked for, or any other amount, on the ground that they investigated the matter and have information that justifies a refusal to increase the appropriation. We all realize how important this work is. I know how important it is on the Indian reservation in my State. I know how very important it is on the Indian reservation with which I am familiar in the adjoining State of Montana, particularly in regard to trachoma. The spread of the disease has been alarming.

Yet this appropriation is so small that on the Shoshone Reservation, for instance, with its 2,200 Indians, they pay one surgeon $500 a year for all of the work carried on under this appropriation. That physician is a very competent man, with a splendid practice. I have talked with him about his work, and he is doing this work because he realizes the necessity for it, in spite of the fact that his compensation is so small that it does not at all pay him for the loss that he, suffers in his practice generally. I simply mention that as an illustration of the fact that the appropriation is altogether inadequate and certainly ought to be largely increased. The department asks for $250,000. The committee, without investigating the matter at all, refuses to increase the appropriation. I simply ask for half the amount that the Secretary estimated as absolutely neces-

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that a very excellent physician was unable to secure more than $500 for the work that he does under this appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. Mr. MILLER. I assume that the gentleman's idea is that the smallness of the appropriation was the cause of his receiving only $500

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that he is receiving as much as other physicians receive under this appropriation for the same character of service. That gentleman has never complained to me that he is not receiving enough, but I was on the reservation last fall and I saw the condition of the Indians. I talked with him and I realized then that the appropriation was aitogether too small if conditions on other reservations were the same as on that reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposi-tion to the amendment. The amendment of the gentleman involves the usual policy of the Indian Office from one end to the other of this bill. They have asked in each case throughout the bill for a much larger amount than they have received at the hands of the committee, and while the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] complains seriously about some physician on his reservation receiving only $500 a year, I call attention to the fact that they had left over as an unexpended balance last year the sum of $8,258.51 out of a total appropriation of $90,000, the same as we are giving this year. I also wish to call attention to the fact that the following are some of the things they advanced as reasons for this appropriation. It is proposed to expend the money asked for as follows. Their schemes are most of them propaganda and untried formulas: First, to improve the medical service rendered to Indians and to increase the number and salaries of physicians and nurses, and provide some general attention to school pupils. The fact of the matter is the committee has vigilantly and carefully refrained from increasing the salaries or increasing the number of officers from one end to the other of the bill.

The bill is reduced in size, so that it is a mere pamphlet. Second, they want to improve facilities for medical work by constructing and maintaining dispensaries, hospitals, and hospital camps for the treatment of diseased Indians, and maintaining of sanitarium schools, and also to supply adequate facilities and equipment to physicians and medical workers. want to build new hospitals and new dispensaries. This is not the proper way to proceed, if they are needed. The provision should be specific. Third, they want to correct the insanitary condition existing in the homes of diseased Indians. I call attention to the fact that that is an indeterminable proposition. They want to provide light and ventilation when required. presume the committee could well appropriate $5,000,000, which could be used on the 300,000 Indians to build houses and provide sanitary conditions for all of them. Fourth, to provide subsistence for needy, diseased Indians when under treatment. They even want to set up boarding houses and render aid to those in distress. The committee would hardly want to go that far. Fifth, to provide for the expenses incurred in maintaining quarantine, vaccination, and in the enforcement of health regulations. That, I think, is a good provision, but they have got $90,000 this year to do this with. They can employ a few less doctors and clerks and buy more medicine. Sixth, to remove sources of pollution of water supply and improve methods of sewage disposal in the Indian country. I submit that as an indeterminable proposition on which you can expend $500,000 or $1,000,000. There is no stopping, once launched on such an undertaking. Seventh, to provide for the salaries, expenses, and employment of opthalmologists to treat trachoma and eye diseases.

Last year we provided a $40,000 hospital to be erected, and they have not turned a wheel toward erecting it. this will cure some of them, and if it works well, it can be enlarged. Eighth, to carry on a thoroughgoing campaign of education among the Indians for the prevention of disease.

Now, if the committee wishes to enter upon eight indeterminable, unfathomable activities, why, increase this appropriation; otherwise it ought to be held down. I live in a State that has almost two-fifths of all the Indians in the United States, and we think $90,000 will be enough to carry on this work and deal with the troubles we have. At least, we may wait for outstanding reports that are to come, more definite in character

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me from what the gentleman from Oklahoma has said—

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I have already been recognized and was proceeding to speak.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making it

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves amend the amendment by inserting $175,000 in lieu of

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by substituting

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman has no right to interfere in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized, and he will proceed.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I confess what I do not know about this subject would fill, as the former Speaker of this House would say, a very large library; but I have been impressed by the reading to which I have listened by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] with the belief that the committee should have given a larger appropriation than $90,000. The gentleman from Oklahoma read some eight specifications that the department had in view to cover when it recommended an increase of the appropriation. The gentleman from Oklahoma stated that the objects of these eight recommendations were unfathomable. One of these was the sub-sistence of sick Indians under treatment. It is recognized everywhere, I believe, that the food, "the subsistence," sick person is of more consequence than medicine. It seems to me that most of the objects that the department had in view that he read about from the report were very desirable. This is a very serious subject. It involves the spread of very deadly and loathsome diseases among the Indians. The department has recommended that the appropriation be increased to $250,000. Some gentlemen think that the whole situation is not ideally worked out, and until that has been worked out to their satisfaction they will only make the small appropriation that has been made hitherto. It seems to me would be the wiser course, until we decide about the health bureau and until we decide the other questions that gentlemen have in mind, that we should have a care for the health of the Indian, and we should give an increased appropriation for the objects that are set out in the recommendations of the department; and I therefore think it the part of wisdom for the committee to increase the amount, and I should prefer to increase it to the amount I have named rather than the amount named by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think it would be wise, when the bureau failed to expend $8,000 of the amount last year, to increase it above $90,000 now? They did not expend the $90,000.

Mr. McCALL. Because a trivial balance was left over is no argument whatever. Eight thousand dollars is a very small They might not have the organization to carry on this work effectively, and they went on according to the old method, and therefore had a small balance left, but they recommend that the amount be increased from $90,000 to $250,000.

And I do not believe that this House is justified, in view of the amount of property that the Indians have, in view of the great amount of property they have had and from which they have been separated, and in view of the fact that we are their guardians, in disregarding this proposition of the department in regard to them and not increase the appropriation at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think there are two reasons why this amendment should not be adopted at this time. the first place, as has already been stated on the floor of the House, a very thorough investigation of this entire subject is now under process of being made by the proper bureau of the Government. The report will be forthcoming in a very few weeks, and it seems to me it is entirely inadvisable for the House to take action in a large way on a big subject until we have before us exact and proper information that will soon be

My next objection, Mr. Chairman, is even stronger and greater than that. I have taken occasion as opportunity has presented itself to investigate several bands and Indian tribes, to see what effect the Medical Corps on the part of the Government is having in respect to the diseases among those Indians. I have found a remarkable situation. I am no physician nor a particular judge of physicians, but I am somewhat of a judge of a man when he is trying to work. I have been appalled by the ignorance, the incapacity, and the slovenly way that most of the physicians now attending Indian bands are performing their work. I spent half a day talking this over with the Indian Commissioner, and I arrived at this conclusion: In certain places, like the physician suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who are of high standing in their practice, physicians are performing their work at a sacrifice. That class of men can be paid by the Indian Office, under the law as it now stands, no more than $700 a year, although they may be performing a service worth $7,000. That class of physicians is exceedingly in the minority. A great bulk of the work being done under this paragraph is performed by men who are selected through the civil service, most of them being paid about $1,000 or $1,200 a year. One of the elements that goes into the proposition is composed of young men out of college, who have had no experience, but are trying to get it. The other element in that class consists of physicians who have made a failure, and are out of a job. Neither of those elements should be trusted with a work of this kind. I think we should wait until we have a report from the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and I am sure when that is before us we will take action in a large way, and we will intrust this great and important work—and its importance is fully as great as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall]-to trained men, capable men, who will perform the work not only from a scientific and professional standpoint, but in the interests of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, purely for my own information.

I have a distinct recollection of the promises that were made and the statements that were given to the country and to the House with reference to irrigation projects and how the money would return to the Treasury some time in the dim and distant future, from the purchase of rights and use of water, and so footh. I would like to know if there is any money; and if so, about how much in this bill that will be used to pay for water from those original irrigation schemes and be credited to the profit on those transactions? Are we paying for the use of water by the Indians on any of the original irrigation schemes for which we have expended one hundred or two hundred million dollars, or somewhere in that neighborhood? Is there anything in this bill that covers that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. These are independent projects, so far as I know.

Mr. HILL. The small projects I refer to are independent projects, but does not the language authorize the payment under contract by the irrigation commissioners with the Indian Commissioner for the use of water from the other larger projects?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In a very few cases that is true, where there is large amount.

Mr. HILL. About how much?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, I do not suppose there would be one-fourth of the projects that would fall under that class; very few of them.

Mr. HILL. Then, as a matter of fact, they are taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other and showing a profit from the irrigation schemes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. We are correcting that as fast as we can. We have two different systems here—the Indian irrigation system and the white man's irrigation

Mr. HILL. I understand that; but are we appropriating anything here under this Indian bill that will look toward a profit to the white man's system?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is very hard to distinguish between them. I am in favor of putting the Indian lands under the United States irrigation service and under the United States engineers. I think that will be done.

Mr. HILL. I wanted to understand the situation. posed that it would work out that way when the irrigation projects were begun, and I wanted to know if we had reached that condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mc-CALL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question now is on agreeing to the The CHAIRMAN. amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The committee divided; and there were-ayes 16, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,420,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood, whose parents are citizens of the United States and the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood.

now to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by in-serting the report named. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from South Dakota please call up the Indian Office and have them furnish the names of those designated as "professional guardians"? I think they ought to go in as part of this report

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There are 2,000 of them. Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will put them in with it, so that it will be complete.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are not in my possession, and I can not consent to do that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit me to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if he thinks that when the committee rises this afternoon it will be possible to reach an agreement beforehand that when we come back into the House we recess until 8 o'clock to-night, to proceed to the consideration and final passage of this bill before adjournment to-night, so that we can get to the immigration bill to-morrow?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that we have no means of ascertaining whether that be done. I doubt if any quorum would be had. There is no quorum present now, and I have refrained from making the point in the desire to expedite the consideration of this matter.

I understand that the Committee on Rules has a rule prepared.

Mr. RODDENBERY. They are ready to follow, when they can get recognition, on the immigration bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that am in sympathy with him, but I demand the regular order. Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the gentleman from Texas is not willing to rise and then let us go on and take up the immigration bill? I have not heard the question of no quorum raised all day.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota.

are in many instances used by others connected with the administration.

I suggest, further, in this connection, that in a great many instances in the class of professional guardians the guardians are attorneys, licensed to practice in the courts, and that the extravagance and waste in the administration, which will also be later referred to, is not due to incompetency of guardians, because men qualified to practice law, as a rule, would not be incompetent, and in cases where they are guardians the cost of administration is as high on an average or a little higher than in other cases.

This report is not intended to include the management of the estates of the minors apart from the cost of administration as set forth above, because I have had neither time nor facilities to fully report upon the former question, but sufficient investigation has been made to warrant me in saying that in a great number of instances bad management and great waste have been the rule. Extravagant and totally unwarranted allowances for maintenance and personal expenses of wards have been made, all of which can be verified by the probate records, and where the allowances are aggravatedly large and unnecessary the presumption is that some one other than the ward is getting the benefit of the excessive amount. Again, in addition to the above, Mr. D. H. Bynum, former chief clerk to the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and recently probate attorney for the district agents, has reported to me after extensive investigation that in a great number of instances large sums of money of minors have been loaned by the guardians on totally inadequate securities, many loans being made to guardians themselves and members of their families, etc., and that in many instances the bondsmen of the guardians are totally insolvent.

I also call attention here to the fact that in the eight counties of the Creek Nation there are 4,839 cases of guardianships in which the guardian has made no report, or the papers and court files are in the hands of attorneys or guardians and therefore inaccessible, and in all of these cases it has been impossible to make a report because of these facts; and I think it is quite probable that in many of these cases the administration of the affairs of the minor has been so extravagantly and wastefully conducted that the parties responsible therefor have a personal interest in withholding the facts from public record and in spection as long as possible.

To my mind this report in connection with the data upon which it is based reveals an appalling state of affairs with reference to the administration of the affairs of the minor members of the tribe. As pointed out above, in the administration of the estates of Indian minors amounts to Oklahoma. The facts speak for themselves and show a most unjust and destructive discrimination against the Indian minor. I have made this classification to answer in advance any suggestion or argument th

It will thus be seen that these methods and practices apply generally throughout the Creek Nation, and while they may exist in a greater degree in one county than another, the general situation is substantially the same. It is reasonable to presume also that in that large number of cases, as above pointed out, to wit, 4,339, where no reports of guardians have been made and where files are out, equally bad or even worse conditions prevail.

While the enormity of this extravagance and waste seems to me to be self-evident, I was not satisfied to submit the report without a showling of the comparative cost of the administration of such matters in letters to the courts exercising probate jurisdictions sed as scrience of letters to the courts exercising probate jurisdictions sed as scrience of letters to the courts exercising probate jurisdictions sed as scrience of states throughout the Union, and my responses to these inquiries furnish data upon the cost of administration in 30 different States, to wit, Arkanasa, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Illinois, Kanasa, Kentucky, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, North Carolina, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. I have bound together in a separate volume the reports from these different States, which is marked "Exhibit I" and submitted herewith, and will say in a general way that these reports show that the average cost of administration in kindred matters in those jurisdictions does not exceed 3 per cent, and it is not improper to note in this connection that the administration in kindred matters in those jurisdictions does not exceed 3 per cent, and it is not improper to make the subject but upon the ground that a great injustice and wrong is being suffered by the minors o other cases.

The amount allowed as fees for attorneys for guardians in the Creek Tribe since statehood in the various counties in the cases reported is in the aggregate $367,857.80. In Muskogee County alone the allowance for this purpose amounts to $124,638.90. There are eight counties in the Creek Nation. One properly equipped attorney could render all necessary and proper legal services for all the guardians of Indian minors in any two counties, and four such attorneys could perform such duty for all the guardians of that class of persons in the Creek Nation. This could be done on an annual expenditure, including all expenses, of $25,000; this to include the salary of the attorney, office, traveling, and stenographic expense necessary.

With a force of this kind properly equipped and authorized and traveling, and stenographic expense necessary.

With a force of this kind properly equipped and authorized and with full notice and publication of the fact to all courts and all guardians there would remain no excuse, much less any reason, for guardians not availing themselves of the privilege of this legal advice without expense to their wards; nor would there be any reason why the courts would refuse to cooperate, for it is to be assumed that the courts would be interested in the economical administration of the estates of wards under their jurisdiction and would recommend that they take advantage of the services of counsel thus provided without expense to their wards and would refuse to make allowances for the unnecessary payment of other attorneys. Among the duties of these attorneys would be those: To aid in the selection of proper guardians in the first instance, to bring about the removal of incompetent guardians, to prepare all legal papers on the appointment of guardians and the making of reports, etc., to see that delinquent reports are made as to past transactions, and to cause regular and proper reports to be made in all cases in the future, and, on the whole, to perform any and all legal services that might be required by any guardian of any Indian minor in the proper administration of the matters in his charge.

I say that four competent men, working under the direction of the tribal attorney, with proper facilities can transact all this business upon the theory that to the extent that the guardians are competent and proper persons for such a position that the work required of an attorney is minimized, and that in many instances, as a matter of course, very little or no service would be required of the attorney except a formal inspection of matters.

In the case of competent guardians the chief work of the attorney would be services in cases of the sale of land and four attorneys would be serviced in cases of the sale of land and four attorneys would be serviced and would not encourage unnecessary and improvident sales of the minors' lands, of which there have been many. It will be seen from the foregoing that much of the larger part of the allowances for mattorneys' services is for such services in connection with the sale of minors' land. In the entire record there are not a half dozen instances where the fees allowed were based upon services rendered in contests over the property rights of the ward where such fees might be justified. After giving this whole subject much consideration I am thoroughly of the opinion that the plan here suggested presents the only feasible and practical solution of the present deplorable situation, and it is quite probable that the operation of such a plan for a couple of years would be sufficient to break up the present system and being about healthy conditions, after which there would be little danger of the old system being reestablished.

Now, the next question is, How should the expense of this plan be provided? Should it be paid out of the General Government or borney the tribes? I have given that matter considerable reflection, and will here submit my observations: There are approximately 7,905 adul attorneys. Therefore the administration of these affairs in this manner is in the interest and to the benefit of practically all the members of the tribe, and that it could with much accuracy be said to be a tribal matter.

While this report is dealing particularly with the administration of minor Indian probate affairs, it is, nevertheless, apparent that it throws much light upon the Indian situation as a whole in this State, and therefore may afford some guide to the department and Congress in their dealings with Indian matters now still remaining under the control of the Government. The same persistent clamor will be heard for the removal of restrictions from the full bloods and other Indians still under restrictions which was heard in favor of the removal of restrictions from the surplus and homesteads of other members of the tribes. Whenever heretofore the question of the removal of restrictions from the surplus and homesteads of other members of the tribes. Whenever heretofore the question of the removal of restrictions has been under consideration the claim was tenaciously advanced that the Indian was competent to manage his own affairs, and that his best interest demanded that he be given an opportunity so to do; but the deplorable condition of that large number of adults from whose lands restrictions have been removed, as pointed out above, is a complete answer to that fallacy. In considering any future policy regarding these matters two questions naturally present themselves, because of the fact that there are two interests involved. To the extent that the interests of the white people will be best subserved by the removal of all restrictions from the Indian lands, and even by the sale of all Indian lands and the abandonment of the country by the Indians. As a commercial and sociological question, this is undeniable; but, on the other hand, if the Indian's interest is to be considered, that interest in this State of which the Government is the considered, that interest in this State of which the Gover

PANAMA CANAL TRAFFIC AND TOLLS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Prof. Emory R. Johnson, the special expert on Panama Canal traffic and tolls, which I will send to the desk and would like to have the Secretary read, and then I will offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

(Maj. F. C. Boggs, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, chief of office.)

> ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION WASHINGTON OFFICE, December 13, 1912.

Senator Frank B. Brandegee,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dean Senator Brandegee: The report which I prepared by direction of the President upon Panama Canal traffic and tolls is now complete, and the tolls have been fixed by the President upon the basis of the data contained in this report. A limited edition of the report has been issued by the Isthmian Canal Commission. It may possibly be the desire of Congress to have this report printed as a public document.

There is a very general public interest in the question of Panama tolls, and it is certain that the request for the report will exceed the supply which the Canal Commission thought justified in having printed. It will not be expensive to issue this report as a public document, because the printing office now has the electrotype plates from which the Canal Commission's edition was printed. Moreover, the lithograph plates from which the maps accompanying the report were printed can also be used in printing the maps for the report when printed as a public document.

Very truly, yours,

Emorr R. Johnson.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have the report of which Mr. Johnson speaks in my hand. I have looked it through. I think it is of more than temporary value; I think it will be of permanent value to many industries and commercial bodies and legislators all through the country. I have spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Printing in relation to the matter, who has had some estimate of the cost made. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing together with the report which I have sent to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound in cloth, with accompanying maps, 6,000 copies of the Report upon Panama Canal Traffic and Tolls prepared for the President by Emory R. Johnson, special commissioner on traffic and tolls; that the copies here ordered shall be printed from plates recently prepared for the Isthmian Canal Commission and now in the possession of the Government Printing Office; and that of the copies printed 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 shall be delivered to the superintendent of the House document room for distribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing, together with the document presented by the Senator from Connecticut.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to make a motion that the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock on Monday. I do this because a very important bill has been made the special order for Monday, and it will take some time for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 27062) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENBOLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3436) granting to Phillips County, Ark., certain lots in the city of Helena for a site for a county courthouse, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following order, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That Jacob H. Gallinger, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including December 16, 1912, to and including January 4, 1913; that Augustus O. Bacon, a Senator from the State of Georgia, be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 5, 1913, to and including January 18, 1913; that Jacob H. Gallinger be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 19, 1913, to and including February 1, 1913; that Augustus O. Bacon be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including February 2, 1913, to and including February 15, 1913; and that Jacob H. Gallinger be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including February 16, 1913, to and including March 3, 1913.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the order go over, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the order go over, Mr. President, Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator desire to have the order considered Monday, or shall I withdraw it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to consider it somewhat. object to the order Monday, but I do want to consider it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I ask that the order go over and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks that the order lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The following bill of the House of Representatives was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 27062. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the Senate resume consideration of House bill 19115, known as the omnibus claims bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and

March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Claims has examined the amendment which I presented a few days ago for the payment to the widow of Charles G. Eddy, and is satisfied that the Committee on Claims has passed upon it and that it is a proper amendment to be admitted. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amby the Senator from New York will be read. The amendment submitted

The Secretary. On page 268, after line 9, insert:

To Elizabeth B. Eddy, widow of Charles G. Eddy, deceased, $602.92. Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the other day after the Senator from New York brought this matter up I referred it to the clerk of my committee and found that the Senator's statement was correct, that the bill had been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims and had passed the Senate, so that the Senate committee and the Senate are committed to the bill. I have no authority from the committee to accept it except as it may be found in a statement of that kind; but I am willing that the expression of the Senate should be taken

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understood from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] that he was going to present his amendment this morning.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I propose the amendment to the bill which I send to the desk, to come in on page 267, at the end of line 16, after the words "this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair) The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 267, at the end of line 16, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

And section 3480 of the Revised Statutes, so far as applicable to these claims, is hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, that amendment comes in at the conclusion of the following proviso:

Comes in at the conclusion of the following proviso:

Provided, That in the settlement of claims for longevity pay and allowances on account of services of officers in the Regular Army arising under section 15 of an act approved July 5, 1838, entitled "An act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," and subsequent acts affecting longevity pay and allowances, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall credit as service in the Army of the United States, within the meaning of said acts, all services rendered as a cadet at the United States Military Academy and as an enlisted man or commissioned officer in the Regular and Volunteer Armies, and no settlement heretofore made shall preclude a settlement under the terms of this act.

Mr. President, this proviso was offered because the accounting officers of the Treasury had refused a large number of officers this pay, amounting, as I am informed, to a million dollars. My amendment provides for the repeal of section 3480, so far as this pay for longevity allowance shall apply to officers who resigned from the Regular Army and afterwards joined the Confederate Army. The amendment is exactly in line with the amendment brought in by the committee. It applies to the same subject, and to that alone. It applies to officers who resigned from the Regular Army and afterwards joined the Confederate Some of them resigned before the commencement of the war and not for the purpose of joining the Confederate Army, but afterwards did join it. I remember one case, that of Gen. D. H. Hill, who had resigned one or two or three years before the war commenced and afterwards took service in the Confederate Army.

This amendment makes no sort of provision for the payment of these claims, but it is simply for the accounting to be allowed, notwithstanding section 3480 of the Revised Statutes. That section has been twice modified in regard to other claims.

I want to say that the amount involved in the amendment, so far as I am informed, is a little over $100,000, to pay small sums to the children and grandchildren of the officers of the Confederate Army who were graduates of West Point or who were in the Army before the war commenced.

I think it is time that such discriminations as this should cease. I read here as amongst a few officers who would get some small stipend or whose descendants would get it Archibald Gracie, who was a brigadier general in the Confederate Army and the father of the man who came near losing his life on the Titanic. He would get $60.60. The descendants of Stonewall Jackson would get $292; the descendants of Fitzhugh Lee would get $438; and those of Joseph Wheeler would get $219.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that as to some of these gentlemen it is a curious time, because of their participation in the so-called rebellion, to make objection to the payment of sums that were actually due them from the United States, when they afterwards bore arms in behalf of the United States, as was the case with Gen. Fitzhugh Lee and Gen. Joseph Wheeler.

It seems to me also that it is time that this prohibition which was raised by this statute passed immediately after the war, when the feelings of all were aroused and when the passions had not cooled down, should be finally settled and a just claim against the United States should not be denied to the descendants of these men who served their country faithfully while they were in the Regular Army of the United States. I therefore want to see this amendment prevail.

There is no appropriation provided for in the amendmentnone at all. It simply permits the accounting officers to audit these claims. The question of whether these men shall be paid or not will arise when their claims shall have been adjusted by the auditors and presented to Congress for payment. I hope, Mr. President, that there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the Senator a question?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?
Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Certainly.
Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the object of the amendment simply to give these men such standing that their claims may be referred to the Court of Claims, audited there, and the amounts found due them ascertained there and returned here, so that their claims may be brought up for consideration in the future?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. It certainly is, sir. It merely puts them on the ground that no charge of disloyalty shall be held up in the face of these just claims which they have against the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me that there would be no sound objection to having them go to the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount that is due to them if they are in the class of these other officers, and let Congress take care of them in the future.

The objection I have to the amendment, as I understand it, is that it is not germane to the purposes of the pending bill—that it is outside of the scope of the bill. It is seeking not to allow and pay claims that have been established, but to repeal a statute for the purpose of having these claims investigated. While I have considerable sympathy with what the Senator from Alabama has said about discriminations against men like Fitzhugh Lee and Gen. Wheeler, my objection to the amendment is that the committee has never considered it; that it is not within the scope of the purposes of this bill; and I do not like to open the door for matters that it seems to me are, as I have said, outside of the legitimate scope of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, this is exactly in line with the proviso of the committee that certain officers whose claims had been adversely adjudicated by the Treasury Department should have the right to have an accounting made of their claims. It is not a question of res adjudicata; and this is a poor time, it seems to me, for the Senate of the United States to say that these men who rendered services before the war commenced, and to whom the Government of the United States was greatly indebted, shall not have an accounting and an ascertainment of their claims, and then have the question of their payment considered when that accounting comes in. I hope that there is no Senator here who will object to such a just provision as the one which I have proposed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand, this amendment will have the effect of putting the claims which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] has described on the same footing as all other claims which are covered by the proviso offered by the committee on page 267.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Precisely.

Mr. LODGE. That is, when proved, they shall be paid. I understood that the committee had brought in a general provision here, as I read the provise, in order to prevent these claims being brought forward one by one, as they have been, on this bill, and to make a general law which shall cover them all as they are liquidated by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Alabama proposes repeals a statute. That statute now prevents the class of claims for longevity pay which he has described from being treated by the accounting officers of the Treasury. It seems to me that the question involved goes beyond any mere matter of claims or of the payment of money. The amount of money involved is not large, but the question of feeling involved is very large indeed. The statute which the Senator seeks to repeal is a statute which was passed in war times, or immediately after the war. I think we can all say now that at that time it was a natural statute to be passed, but it was distinctly a punitive statute; and it seems to me that now the time has come when we can remove from our statutes all that were of a punitive nature.

There have been one or two propositions offered here with a most admirable purpose, directed toward the obliteration, if they are not already obliterated, of the old feelings of Civil War I have thought sometimes that some of those propositions might have the very opposite effect; that they might tend to do the very thing that they were intended to prevent; that they might reawaken old feelings which ought to slumber and renew the remembrance of a bitterness which we all desire to forget; that they might revive the memory of the old, unhappy, far-off things and the battles of long ago, which we had rather not remember except as history.

No such objection can possibly apply in this case. This is, as I have said, a punitive statute-it is half a century now since the war-and I think we had better efface it from the statute book, not for the purpose of giving these small sums of money—that is not, to my mind, the real object to be attained—but to remove that result of the old war-time feeling from the statute

The men or the descendants of the men who will be benefited by this action—and the benefit is not large in any individual case-would appreciate, I think, the feeling that was manifested a great deal more than the triffing sum of money which they would receive.

Some of those men, as the Senator from Alabama has said, wore the uniform of the United States in the War with Spain. Fitzhugh Lee and Joseph Wheeler were generals of the United States. They were glad to put on the old uniform again, and we were glad to have them do it; and I should be glad to have the statute in question removed, so that their descendants may receive the trifling amount of money which would come to them. I think that after those men-I take those two as exampleshave worn the uniform of the United States, the time has come to wipe from the statute book any statute which reflects in any way upon their conduct in an earlier day. There are sons of some of these men, if I am not mistaken, who are now in the Army of the United States; there were others, younger men, descendants of the men who are affected by this statute, who certainly were in the Spanish War to my knowledge, in addition to the two very distinguished men whom I have mentioned.

I think under those circumstances, Mr. President, that it is a good thing for us as a country to remove that particular clause from the statutes of the United States. I am not concerned with the money, but I am concerned with obliterating something which now, 50 years afterwards, still embodies in the cold lines of the statute a feeling which, however natural at the time, we all want to feel, and we do feel, is now dead forever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, Mr. President, with the exception of an amendment about which the Senator from Nevada spokeand he is not present to-day and was not yesterday—the French spoliation amendment is the only one pending not disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota to the French spoliation claims amendment has now been printed in proper form, and I suppose the amendment ought to be read. I ask that the amendment be read as proposed. It amounts in substance to a substitute.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Sen-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to say to the Senator that we have just now discovered that the amendment is not printed It is in worse shape than it was yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am amazed to find that an amendment like this can not be brought back here in a form somewhere near like the way in which it was submitted. Whole paragraphs are divided, and parts of items that belong under one ship are in a clause under another ship. I insist that we have this amendment brought back here in proper form. I did not leave it in an unintelligible condition when I handed it up. We went over it carefully to determine how it should be printed and brought back here, but it is in worse condition this morning than it was yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, of course when I referred to the amendment as being in proper form I had not examined it, but I assumed that it was in proper form. If, however, it is all in confusion-

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is in confusion.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how we can possibly undertake to deal with it new.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that I will send immediately for the printing clerk and have the original copy of this amendment returned from the Printing Office, and ask the Senator to call attention to where the mistakes are. I suppose we might get the copy back-it will probably be impossible to get it back by 1.30 o'clock-but we could get it some time later this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. I think we ought to have the amendment in proper form if we are going to deal with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Entirely so. Mr. LODGE. Then, the amendment will have to go over for the present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will call the Senator's attention to an item here. Here is the vessel ship Six Sisters, Daniel Baker, master.

Mr. SMOOT. On what page is it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Page 96. Now, there is only one ship Six Sisters, with Daniel Baker, master. That we all know. That is on page 96. On page 99 is the item, "the vessel ship Six Sisters, Daniel Baker, master," again; and when the items of loss in that vessel are given they are different items from those on page 96.

Mr. LODGE That is a repetition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a repetition of the name of the vessel, but not a repetition of the items under the name.

Mr. LODGE. It is a repetition of the items without the Senator's amendment, and it ought not to be in both places.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a repetition? Mr. LODGE. It is a repetition. It is a repetition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Page 98 is all in error. Mr. LODGE. Of course, we can not deal with the amendment in that shape.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be impossible to do so, and it will have to go over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not seem to me that because of the errors in printing the amendment it is necessary to delay the discussion, unless we are going to discuss individual items. Mr. LODGE. I confess I for one would like to know the Senator's reason in some of these cases, at all events,

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can give it now.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator has given a great deal of attention to the matter. In fact, I have seen his pamphlet on it. Mr. CRAWFORD. I can do that in general and in reference to the purposes of my amendment. It is not necessary to wait until it is reprinted in order to do that.

Mr. LODGE. I should be very glad to have the Senator explain some of the items.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I call attention, in the first place, to the difference in the character of some of these claims, even for I call attention to one of the cases which I property losses. think presents the strongest sort of case that is found in the whole list, the vessel schooner Betsey, which is No. 50 in the list reported by the committee, and which is included in the

Mr. TOWNSEND. On what page?
Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 70 of the separate pamphlet, and it is No. 50 in the division of the report which deals with French spoliations, page 309 of the committee report. Here was a vessel that was on a peaceful commercial voyage from Boston to Cape Français, in the West Indies. Upon her arrival at Cape Français she was confiscated by order of the French administration there. After this vessel-sailing from Boston, Mass., to Cape Francais, and carrying a cargo of pork, hogs' lard, butter, bacon, cheese, soap, candles, fish, beef, flour, and pine boards—arrived at Cape Francais, one of the West Indies Islands, she was seized by the French Government on that island, and they took the cargo and confiscated it.

They did it for the purpose of relieving the French garrison, which was without provisions and destitute. They did not do it as a hostile act. They did it as an act of necessity to prevent the garrison from actually starving for want of food. The commander of the garrison promised the captain of this vessel that the cargo would be paid for by the French Government at current prices. It was never paid for. The commander of that ship was an American citizen. That vessel was a registered American vessel sailing out of Boston, Mass. The records show that and show its value, and that apparently was agreed upon between the parties.

The owner of the vessel was Samuel Dowse, an American citizen. The owners of the cargo were American citizens.

That claim comes down to us. It has no insurance risks involved in it. It has no question of freight earnings involved in it. It has no great sum paid as a premium upon insurance on It is a clean-cut case of these people depriving the Americans of this property, and there is no indication that it was done in time of war.

Now, I call attention to that as a type of claim which you will find in this bill. I want to call attention to another one of a good deal the same character, and that is the sloop Farmer, which is No. 60 in this report. You will find this in regard to the sloop Farmer on page 325 of the report.

This sloop was on a peaceful commercial voyage from Boston, Mass., to Trinidad. She was seized by a French privateer and taken to Guadaloupe, and there the vessel and cargo were condemned by a French prize tribunal sitting at Bassaterre. No grounds whatever are shown. The examination by the French authorities of the master and supercargo shows that the vessel had not violated her obligations of neutrality. are matters of record, because these prize tribunal proceedings were matters of record and the records are in existence, and so there can not be any dispute in regard to it. No grounds are given for the seizure. The vessel had not violated her obligations of neutrality. Her voyage was peaceful. No part of her cargo was contraband. None of her papers were thrown The owners of both vessel and cargo overboard or concealed. were American citizens.

The report of the prize master of the privateer shows that the Farmer did not resist search or try to escape and that she carried a register, sea letter or passport, agreement with the crew, invoice of her cargo, and a certificate of clearance from the customhouse at Boston and Charlestown.

Mr. LODGE. From what page is the Senator reading? Mr. CRAWFORD. Page 325 of the committee's report.

This was a registered American vessel, built in the State of Connecticut in 1791 and owned by American citizens. Her cargo consisted of beef, bacon, lard, flour, tobacco, rice, gin, hams, butter, salmon, biscuit, shingles, boards, wine, staves, hoops, soap, and plank, all owned by William Marshall, jr., an American citizen.

William Marshall, jr., had a half interest, as I understand, in the vessel. They found the value of the vessel and the value of the cargo to be $6,940.57. Now, that man got insurance on that cargo and one-half interest in the vessel amounting to $6,500. His loss was simply the difference between $6,940.57 and $6,500. That was his actual property loss—$440.57. But the court found that he had a half interest in the freight earnings of that ship. It is not clear whether value found on the cargo was the value at the place of shipment or the value at the place of seizure or at the place of destination. He owned a half interest in the vessel, and he owned this interest in the cargo, which was his property.

But now, in addition to allowing him his actual property loss, which I think is clearly established, they allow him one-half of the freight earnings of that vessel, and then they find in his favor the amount that he paid as premium on this insurance, which was a premium paid at the rate of 17 per cent. Mr. Marshall, in order to get that insurance upon his cargo, paid the underwriters 17 per cent, and the premium which he paid amounted in the aggregate $1,105.

I am opposed to giving back to the estate of Mr. Marshall $1,105. If that vessel had been destroyed in a tornado and these insurers had reimbursed him under the policy, they would have paid him his property loss. They might under some rule, perhaps, have paid him freight earnings, or a certain portion of them, but they would not have paid him the $1,105 premium which he had given to them. He paid that for his protection. He paid that for his policy under which he recovered for his property loss and freight earnings. He could not have recovered it under any other circumstances in the world; and I am opposed, even in a good, clear case, as I think this is, if we opposed, even in a good, clear case, as I think this is, if we eliminate the question upon which my friend from Kansas and I differ about there being an actual state of war, to the repayment of the premium. I insist that he has no equity and no right to claim, in addition to being absolutely restored and repaid the loss he sustained, to be repaid the amount he paid to the insurance company for protection which he received. So my amendment strikes out that item of $1,105.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.
Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator to say that he would be willing to pay $950 freight earnings?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I would strike that out. I give him the actual property loss. I think in this case the honor of the country will be vindicated and the rights of these people, which they are entitled to have recognized, will be sufficiently recognized if at this late day we pay them back their actual property That is my own view of that.

Now, I want to call attention to another case. There is some curious and interesting reading here.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to be interrupted too much, because if I am we will get into a discussion that will be unduly

Mr. SMOOT. This will not take very long. It is not a discussion as to these claims, but refers to the printing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well.
Mr. SMOOT. I have here the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, and I notice that the Public Printer has printed the original amendment exactly as it is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me see it.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I speak of it is that I should like to ask the Senator if he has somebody whom he would like to go over this with the printed amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. My clerk understands it thoroughly, and can go over it and check it up. It would have been better, perhaps, to have brought the proofs to us.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the original here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then the clerk will go over it.

Mr. SMOOT. The other amendment here, on page 3, I find is also correct. If the clerk of the committee will, with the printing clerk, run over them hurriedly, as to the errors, per-haps we can have them fixed without reprinting. I do not think there will be very many.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; any way so that we can get it fixed up. But it is annoying to have this confusion in the amendment.

Mr. President, I wished to call attention to a case, but I can not turn to it just now.

A vessel went from one of our Ameri-Here is another case. can ports to French Guinea. At Guinea the French seized the vessel, seized the cargo, and sold both of them. It did not even divide the money among the prize crew, but put it into the treasury of the Provincial Government and reported it to the French Government. A letter was received from Talleyrand himself saying that this was an act of embargo and sequestration. "There is no war existing between France and tration. "There is no war existing between France and America." That was the declaration of the French minister. tration. That money was never turned over to those owners, and so far as the record discloses is still in possession of that Government, if that Government is still in existence. It was a cold-blooded case of seizing the property.

There is no question about its being a vessel of American registry or about the shipowners being American citizens and of the owners of the cargo being American citizens. the letter from Talleyrand that there was no existing war between the two countries, and that fund, which was not even given to the prize crew, was paid into their treasury, and they have got it yet.

That is another type of case in this bill. I call those good cases, but I want to call attention to some that I think are wholly unwarranted cases. For instance, No. 23. I think my amendment strikes out this claim entirely. Here was the Chaco going from Boston to Norfolk and arrived at Norfolk. Disposing of her cargo there, she reloaded with tobacco, which was carried to Havre de Grace, France, by way of Falmouth, England. Disposing of her tobacco at Havre de Grace, she then solicited freight carriage to and from ports in France, Spain, and England, and made trips to Bremen and Portugal; she carried cargoes of freight, but not contraband, back and forth between ports in these countries. She left Boston July 29, 1794, and started from Lisbon for Baltimore September 20, 1797. On January 17, 1798, while steering for the harbor of Bassa-terre, island of Guadaloupe, for water and provisions, she was seized by a French privateer, and a French prize tribunal at Bassaterre condemned both vessel and cargo, which became a total loss to the owners. The alleged grounds for condemnation were that she did not go to her place of destination and had altered her course, and was suspected of being in connivance with the enemies of the French Republic in France and elsewhere; also that her master did not have a sea letter. At the time of seizure her cargo was salt and mats. The names of the owners of her cargo are not given, and it does not appear whether they were American citizens or not. No claim is made in their behalf.

Now, with reference to the ownership of the vessel, there is not any satisfactory proof. It is not shown that the cargo belonged to American citizens, and when it comes to the ownership of the vessel the Court of Claims finds:

V. It is alleged that one Joseph Blake and David Greene effected insurance in the office of Peter C. Brooks in the sum of $10,000 on said vessel and $4,000 on her freight for the voyage from Lisbon to Baltimore, paying therefor a premium of 6 per cent, by policies underwritten by sundry persons, citizens of the United States, and were afterwards paid by said underwriters the sum of $14,000 as and for a total loss by reason of the premises. It does not appear that David Greene and Joseph Blake had any interest in said vessel or the freight; neither does it appear that they acted as agents for the owners of the

These men were paid insurance, and it is not shown they had any interest in the vessel or in the freight. It is not shown that the owners of the freight were American citizens. They come in here and ask to have their losses repaid to them. I think there is a total failure to prove the essential facts in that case. They prove the value of the vessel; they prove the insurance paid by these men, but they do not prove ownership either of the vessel or cargo.

Now, here is another one, No. 40. It involves one of these insurance premiums I am citing these as types. case in which the owner of the cargo and vessel was a man named Matthew Bridge. Matthew Bridge was an American citizen; the vessel was a registered American vessel; and apparently the confiscation was absolutely without any justification. The loss of the cargo and all that is proved by the records from the prize court. But Matthew Bridge, who owned this vessel and a part of the cargo, himself had insurance. It was covered by insurance. Let me read:

So that the total value of his holdings there was $19,373.56. He had freight earnings, he claims—and it is always a doubtful question whether they enter into the value which is found or whether they do not. That is never made clear here. But he had freight earnings, he claims, of $2,520. Now, Briggs paid as premium on insurance on the cargo $2,880. There was a rescue of this vessel by an English vessel after she had been captured by the French, and then there was the salvage rule, which applies in that case, and the insurance companies paid the expenses in that proceeding. Here is what they paid him altegether. They paid him $16,000 as insurance. That overaltogether. They paid him $16,000 as insurance. That over-paid his property loss and his freight earnings both added to It overpaid both those items to the amount of $433.27. He got that much of his insurance premium back; and he has an item in this bill to give him the rest of the insurance premium which he paid.

I can not believe that this country is obliged, or that any country would be obliged, after Mr. Briggs had received from the insurance companies the value of the vessel, the value of the cargo, of his freight earnings, and $433 out of what he paid for premium, that they should give him about $1,500 in addition to that to reimburse him for his premium. So my amendment here is to strike out that claim for premium.

Now, with reference to underwriters. These underwriters frequently charge as high as 60 per cent. It was a time of great risk when these vessels were being preyed upon, and in a good many instances they charged as premium 60 per cent; very often they charged 30, more often they charged 25, and as a general rule the premiums would run from 15 to 171 and 20 per cent.

Now, in a clear case where the underwriter paid these losses and it was a clear case of spoliation without justification, I for one believe they ought to be repaid their actual loss, but they ought not to be allowed, in addition to their actual loss, to keep in their pocket 60 per cent of profit. I do not believe it is either moral or legal; and we can not discuss mere technical questions of international law in dealing with a question over 100 years old; we should discuss it as a question of simply preserving the good name of our country and acting honorably toward these people. I think we ought to deal in a spirit of substantial justice, but when it comes to paying men all their actual losses and then, in addition to that, allowing them to keep the premiums, amounting to 60 per cent and 30 per cent and 25 per cent and 171 per cent and 15 per cent, I do not believe in that. So I move to strike it out.

Now, here is another instance. Here was an old slaver in 1798 that went over to the Gold Coast of Africa and got, I think, 160 negroes aboard-stole them, of course-and was bringing that cargo to Savannah, Ga., when they put in at one of the West India ports to get water, and the privateers seized the vessel and took the negroes and turned them over to the governor of the Province, and he used them on their plantations.

Now, this man's children come up here in the twentieth century, when we look back upon that period as one of horror, and they ask that he be reimbursed his freight earnings on those negroes from the West Coast of Africa and for his losses in a business of that kind. It is true that there was a statute which legalized the slave trade in that period, but I do not think we are under any obligations in preserving the good name and honor of the United States to pay the descendants of the owner of that ship for what he lost because the Frenchmen stole his negroes away from him when he had stolen those negroes from their native land on the coast of Africa and was bringing them to this country for profit. I would strike that Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me to interrupt him, that I am not in favor of any claims of a slaver.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I knew the Senator would not be. I do not say this in any vaunting spirit at all, but I believe I am the first Member of the Senate who has ever sat down and taken those reports from the Court of Claims and gone through each case carefully to see actually what it contains. I am inclined to think that is true. At least I think if it had been done before items like this old slave trader's claim would not be in this bill. Now, I strike that out.

I strike out of the amendment all the claims that are for nothing but insurance premiums that the man paid for the protection which he got, and I strike out when I come to reimburse

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is true, is it not, that if there had not been any seizure of the ship in such a case, the man would have paid the insurance premium?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly. Mr. POINDEXTER. It made no difference whatever; the premium must be paid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It made none whatever. I called attention to that. I am not willing to allow the children of these underwriters to keep 60 per cent profit and restore to them what they paid in adjusting the loss. I want to deal with this matter in a broad spirit of justice to these people, and I think we do it when we repay their actual property losses. So I have proposed in my amendment to strike out insurance premiums, to strike out freight earnings, and to reimburse them in the claims. In only two or three cases have I stricken out the entire claim. That is the principle I would apply in this case.

I want to be honest with myself and honest with the Senate. I believe profoundly that those old sailors have never been justly treated as to their actual property losses; I do not believe their descendants have been justly treated; but I stood with the other members of the committee in considering the whole question as to whether or not it was wise to put this amendment on the bill. Considering the decided difference in views in regard to it, the intense hostility to it in the House of Representatives, as we wanted to dispose of many of these claims and get some provisions in the statute which seem to be demanded, I accepted the judgment of the committee that it was not advisable to put the French spoliation claims amendment on this bill, and I am going to remain loyal to the committee on that proposition. But I think before the Senate commits itself on an amendment like that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts it should adopt my amendment to it cutting out those excesses which I do not believe have any foundation in justice here. I have given these instances to show the general purpose of my amendment, and that is all I desire to say at this time in regard to it.

Mr. I.ODGE. Mr. President, if I had the time and opportunity to go over each one of these claims and examine them with the Senator from South Dakota I have no doubt we could agree on a good many of them. I certainly would agree about the slaver. I do not know whether there is any other slaver case or not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is only one slaver claim.

Mr. LODGE. There is only one. It ought to be stricken out, of course. There is, however, something to be said on the general proposition. I have looked into the law of the matter somewhat. These claims are carefully examined by the Court of Claims. All the points the Senator speaks about-freight earnings, insurance premiums, and insurance—have been elaborately argued. The Government of late years, through the Department of Justice, has resisted these claims in the court. It has carried on a very strenuous opposition there, and had one case after another most elaborately argued. Those arguments have not been made before the Committee on Claims. They have no knowledge beyond the bare findings as to just the reasons of the Court of Claims for reaching their decisions on all these points.

Moreover, the Court of Claims has shut out a great many claims that were made of different kinds—for personal injuries and things of that sort. Of course, if we are going to reopen all the decisions of the Court of Claims and review them here we reopen them for the claims which they have ruled out as well as for the claims they have admitted. I do not suppose, perhaps, there is much danger of that in these cases, but this would make a precedent for other cases.

Now, I desire to call attention to what the Court of Claims have excluded and to what the Court of Claims have admitted and why they have admitted them. I am speaking now of some of those items of claims that the Senator from South Dakota has been speaking about and which he thinks ought to be stricken from the bill.

I will take, first, some of the claims which were thrown out and which the claimants, at least, believed should have been allowed on every ground of equity and morals. Take, first, the claims for vessels and cargoes captured between September 30, 1800, and July 31, 1801. The title of the jurisdictional act of January 20, 1885, which is now the Twenty-third Statute at Large, page 283, is "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliation committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801." The date given in the title of the act is repeated in the first section of the act. There was a reason for fixing that date of July 31, 1801, and not some previous date. It was based upon the fact that the commission which distributed the French indemnity of 1831, which was in payment for spoliations committed by the French subsequent to the date of those which were released as against France by the treaty concluded in 1800 and ratified in 1801, excluded from consideration all claims for spoliations committed prior to the 31st day of July, 1801. This was done on the ground that France had been by the treaty of 1801 released and discharged from the payment of all claims for spoliations arising previous to that date.

Yet, in the face of this fact and in the face of the intention of Congress, shown in the jurisdictional act, to bring in all claims down to the 31st day of July, 1801, the Court of Claims decided in the case of the schooner Jane, Israel Snow, master (23 Ct. Cls., 226), that France was obligated by the treaty of 1800 and 1801 to restore or pay for all property captured after September 30, 1800, and that therefore these claims were not among those released to France by the treaty of those years. The owners of ships who had their cargoes captured between September 30, 1800, and July 31, 1801, were thus unable to obtain redress from France under the treaty of 1831, because the commission had held that France was not liable for their

They have equally been unable under the act of 1885 to obtain payment from the United States for the reason, as it is held by the Court of Claims, that France was liable under the treaty of 1800-1801, and that the United States was not liable under the act of 1885. Thus these claims, and claims which rest on substantially the same ground as the others, were left out without any possible means of redress to the claimants.

In my judgment, those people are certainly entitled, if anyone is entitled-and we have already paid $4,000,000 to settle such claims-to claim that they were unfairly dealt with by reason of the way in which they have been shut out of the Court of Claims under the act and then shut out by the commission of 1831 under the old treaty. That is one of the decisions of the Court of Claims which has shut out a whole class of these claims; and if we are going to reopen them here and pay no attention to the decisions of the Court of Claims, except when they are adverse to the claimants, we run the risk of reopening all those claims again, and they probably will be reopened.

Now, I take another class. I am doing this, Mr. President, to show that the Court of Claims has not put these cases through without discrimination or without the sense of duty toward the Government. I am going to show that they have excluded large classes of claims; then I am going to show the grounds on which they have supported the claims for freight earnings and premiums.

The second class of claims relates to land seizures. claims described in section 1 of the act of 1885 are those "arising out of illegal captures, detentions, seizures, con-demnations, and confiscations." These words, as the Senate will see, make no distinction between captures on land and those on sea. Neither is there a single word in the act which has any reference to the sea any more than to the land. France did not pay for seizures on land any more than she did for those at sea.

Claims for land seizures were abandoned as against France for a valuable national consideration by the treaty of 1800-1801. The claimants for seizures on land lost their redress against France just as completely as those whose property was captured on the high seas. Under the terms of the treaty they were entitled to redress just as much as for losses by sea, and under the terms of the act there was no discrimination, yet the Court of Claims, in the case of the Leghorn Seizures Clark, Wyo.

(27 Ct. Cls., 224), decided that where American property was deposited on neutral soil, to wit, in Italy, after having been safely carried across the ocean, and was then arbitrarily seized by the French Government and used by it for its own purposes, there could be no recovery under the French spoliation act of 1885. The court said:

The claimants' cases are exceedingly hard cases.

Not a reason can be given, in my judgment, why these claims for seizures on land should not receive satisfaction; but the court, for reasons of their own, shut them out; and if the Court of Claims exists for any purpose, it is that their decisions in a measure should be final certainly, and that we should follow the decisions of the court as nearly as possible.

If claims allowed by the Court of Claims should be reopened, certainly those land claims for the seizure of our goods in neutral territory by the French ought also to be reopened.

The third class of claims which the court also excluded are claims for personal injuries. I quoted at the beginning of what I was saying the language of the statute of 1885, which conferred jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, in order to show that it made no distinction between land and sea captures. It is also true that the terms of that act make no distinction between claims for damages to property and those for injury to persons. On no subject have nations been more jealous, or more properly so, than in regard to the personal treatment of their citizens or subjects. On the face of the treaty and under the jurisdiction conferred by the act of 1885 there was no more distinction made in regard to personal injuries under what I have read than there is a distinction drawn between seizures on land and seizures at sea.

The records of the Court of Claims are full of evidence of maltreatment of American citizens. I have had some of them copied, because I think they are not without interest. We need not indeed go further than this very report for evidence of it.

In the case of the brig Kitty, William Waters, master, No. 113, page 398, it is stated:

The master and his men were frequently insulted and badly treated by

And so forth.

In the case of the schooner Rebecca, John Hall, master, No. 85, page 359, it is found:

She was seized by a French privateer and taken to the island of St. Martin. They took away her captain and supercargo, carried them to Basseterre, and threw them into prison. On the way from St. Martin to Basseterre, the French kept the captain and supercargo in irons, fed them on bread only without water, kept them on deck exposed to the sun and to the waves rolling over the vessel.

In the case of the schooner Juno, William Burgess, master, No. 77, pages 346 and 347, the master of the vessel was abused so badly by the French that he died.

Yet in the face of evidence of personal injuries of the most serious character which formed one of the principal subjects of diplomatic complaint at the time, the Court of Claims has decided in the case of the briggs Fanny and Hope (46 Ct. Cls., 214) that no claim for personal injuries can be maintained under the French spoliation claims act.

I think that is rather a severe decision; but I quote it in order to show that, in addition to shutting out land seizures, the Court of Claims have also shut out the personal injuries.

Mr. President, having shown that the Court of Claims has shut out three classes—I mentioned only two, the claims between the dates of September, 1800, and July 31, 1801—a large class of land seizures and of personal injuries, showing that they have protected the Government in the case in regard to certain claims which are very large in amount and which on their face are as good claims as could possibly be made, I am going to show the reason, if I can, why they have made the allowances, to some of which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Craw-FORDI objects.

As there are only two minutes before the meeting of the Court of Impeachment, if the Senator has no objection, I should like to stop here before going on with the remainder of the argument.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Bacon Bailey Brandegee Bristow Bryan Burnham

Clarke, Ark. Crane Crawford Cullom Curtis du Pont Fletcher

Gallinger

Gardner Gronna Jackson Johnston, Ala. Kenyon La Foliette Lea Lodge McCumber

McLean Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Myers Nelson O'Gorman Oliver Page Perkins

Wetmore Works

Mr. PAGE. I am compelled to report that the continued illness of my colleague [Mr. Dillingham] prevents his presence at the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 53 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest a correction found in the serial of Senate impeachment proceedings on page 741 and on page 552 of the Congressional Record. The question:

Q. You are president of the Reading Coal & Iron Co.?

Should read:

You are president of the Reading Co.?

Eliminating the words "Coal & Iron."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made as suggested.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I find on page 545 a verbal inaccuracy. On that page, in column 1, about the middle of the column, where the witness answered:

A. He said that as the judge was assisting him in the matter he felt that he ought to compensated.

The word "be" is omitted before the word "compensated." It is clearly an omission, and in order to make sense and to let the answer be as the witness said it, I want it corrected so that the word "be" will come in before the word "compensated" and right after the word "to."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made as suggested.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I also suggest a correction, Mr. President. It is in reference to the testimony of Mr. Meyer, and I make it in justice to him. I find that on page 540 of the RECORD, on the left-hand column, about one-third of the way from the bottom, I asked this question:

Q. Was Mr. Boland in an excited condition about it?

The answer here is:

A. I think he was,

What he said was "I do not think he was." That is my understanding. I say that in justice to Mr. Meyer. I rather expected the answer that is here, but I am quite satisfied that it was not the answer I got.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think counsel is right about it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Senator from Wisconsin The Senator from Wisconsin says that I am right about that.

Very well. I have no recollection Mr. Manager CLAYTON.

of it, but I will be quite content to take the statement.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would be more than content to have it stand as it is here, but I am quite sure that the answer was as I have indicated, and, in justice to Mr. Meyer, I make the correction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The answer will be corrected as indicated. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeachment.

The Secretary read the Journal of Friday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any inaccuracies

in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We would like to call C. Larue Munson. We have called this witness at his request, so that he may get away. He has sickness in his family, I understand. His testimony will not relate to the particular articles upon which we were offering testimony, but will in due time be connected with other testimony in relation to the articles about which we have not yet offered any evidence.

TESTIMONY OF C. LARUE MUNSON.

C. Larue Munson, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Munson, where do you reside?—A. Williamsport, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. I am a lawyer,

Q. How long have you resided in Williamsport and how long have you been a practicing attorney?-A. I have lived there 41 I have been a lawyer 37 years. years.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. I do know him very well.

Q. You were a resident of Williamsport in the spring of 1910?—A. I was.

Q. And Judge Archbald at that time was United States district judge in Scranton?—A. He was.
Q. Do you know, Mr. Munson, anything about a contribution that was raised by attorneys practicing in that court about that time to give to Judge Archbald upon the occasion of his taking a trip to Europe?—A. I do not know it in just that way, but I do know this much and this much only, that some time in the month of April or May, 1910, I was called on the tele-phone and asked if I would subscribe to a purse or a fund to be presented to Judge Archbald when he went abroad, which fund was being raised without his knowledge, and I declined.

Q. Who was it called you on the telephone?-A. Mr. Searle. Q. Who is Mr. Searle?—A. Mr. Searle at that time was the clerk of the district court of the United States.

Q. The district court of the United States?-A. And also the circuit court of the United States.

Q. Did you say you declined to contribute?-A. I did.

Q. Mr. Munson, do you know whether that communication was by telephone or by letter?—A. It was by telephone. Q. You are satisfied of that, are you?—A. When you inquired of me the same question in my examination before the Judiciary Committee of the House, I could not answer definitely. Since then I have examined my files and I find no letter either to me from him or from him to me, so I am sure it was by telephone.

Q. So you concluded it was by telephone?—A. Yes. Q. Was there any specific amount asked for by the clerk?—A. My impression is that it was $50, but I do not think anything was definitely suggested.

Q. Mr. Munson, I will be glad if you will tell exactly what Mr. Searle said to you in that conversation over the telephone.— A. As near as I can recollect, he stated to me he was raising, or possibly there was being raised, a fund or a purse to be presented to Judge Archbald when he sailed for Europe on a trip, and that it was being raised entirely unknown to Judge Arch-That is my recollection of the substance of what he said. bald.

Q. Now, can you tell us just what you said in reply?said I did not care to subscribe to that fund, or I declined.

Q. And that was all of it?-A. That was all, to my recollec-

Q. How far is Williamsport, where you live, from Scranton, where the judge lives?—A. By rail, I should say, about 130 miles. Q. It is in Judge Archbald's judicial district, or was then?-

A. My county? Q. Yes.—A. Yes.

Q. Were you a practitioner in the judge's court?—A. I was.

Q. And had been for some time?—A. Since its creation.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think you may inquire, gentlemen. Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Did you have any cases pending in that court at that time?—A. I had not. Oh, I beg your pardon, I have had cases pending, at issue all the time for 10 years, but I had no cases on the then pending trial list.

Q. I find on reading your testimony given before the Judiciary Committee that you said this in answer to a question by Mr.

Norms [reading]:

Mr. Norris. Was there any amount stipulated he wanted you to pay? Mr. Munson. No, sir; no amount.

A. That is probably correct, because my recollection would be more distinct some months ago than now.

Q. Will you tell us why you declined to pay the money?—A. I had then, and I still have, a high respect and admiration for Judge Archbald, and I did not care to embarrass him to either accept or refuse it. That was my reason.

Q. You thought that no matter which course was taken he would be embarrassed in either aspect of it?-A. I thought so; that he would be very much embarrassed. I want to say, if I may be allowed to say it, as I said before, that I have tried many cases before Judge Archbald, both when he was a State judge and when he was a Federal judge. He was always absolutely impartial and fair, and I have never tried a case before a more honorable, upright judge than he. I have regarded him as my friend. I knew him when he was a lawyer. He was my correspondent in Scranton. I have tried cases before him for 25 years. He came to Williamsport twice a year to hold district or circuit court, and in going from his hotel—

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not object to a reasonable amount of that kind of testimony, but we have not inquired on this point, and it is not material at all in this case. There must be a limit somewhere to the witness explaining his opinion of Judge Archbald.

Mr. SIMPSON. I shall not ask him to go any further. I understood he was explaining, sir, why from his knowledge of the judge he thought, no matter whether he refused or accepted the contribution that Mr. Searle was gathering, it would be embarrassing

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel will recognize the fact that the rules of law are very clear as to the manner in which proof of character must be made.

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; and I did not ask the question that brought out that answer. It was the suggestion of the witness. Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is true; counsel did not ask it.

The witness volunteered it.

The WITNESS. I volunteered it.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. If it is agreeable to the respondent, this witness may be excused. Have you any further use for

Mr. SIMPSON. None at all. I am very sorry you have to go. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, we have other witnesses, of course, on this point, but we want to revert now to where we were yesterday when we adjourned.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. We will call Mr. Swingle.

TESTIMONY OF SAMUEL H. SWINGLE.

Samuel H. Swingle, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your occupation?-A. Real estate and builder, and in the coal business on the side a little.

Q. Are you one of the stockholders of the Premier Coal Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are associated with you in that enterprise?—A. W. L. Schlager, Frederic Warnke, and A. F. Kizer.

Q. What official position do you hold, if any, in the corporation?-A. I am treasurer.

Q. When was the corporation organized?—A. April, 1912.

Q. What property did it take over?—A. We took over a fill known as the Big Fill, in Corey Hollow, Lackawanna County.

Q. What was the name of the former owner?—A. The Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.

Q. Do you know Judge Robert W. Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he participate in the negotiations you had about that coal fill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did your corporation, to your knowledge, ever execute to him a note for $500 or $510?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the note in your possession?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you produce it?

(The witness produced the note referred to.)

Mr. Manager DAVIS. Will the Secretary please read it? The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 87.]

SCRANTON, PA., April 6, 1912. Four months after date we promise to pay to the order of A. F. Kizer, S. H. Swingle, W. L. Schlager, and Fred Warnke $510 at the Lackawanna Trust & Safe Deposit Co., without defalcation, for value received.

PREMIER COAL CO., By Fred'K. WARNKE, Pres. S. H. SWINGLE, Treasurer.

No. - Due -[Indorsed.]

A. F. Kizer, S. H. Swingle, Fred'k. Warnke, W. L. Schlager, R. W. Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Has that note been paid, Mr. Swingle?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it paid?—A. At maturity.

Q. And paid to whom?-A. To the Third National Bank of Scranton.

Q. Had it been discounted at that bank by the judge?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who delivered that note to Judge Archbald, if you know?—A. I delivered the note to Judge Archbald.

Q. Please explain where and under what circumstances you delivered the note to him.-A. He came to our office regarding his commission on the bank, and wanted the money, and I told him that we were not prepared to pay the money at that time; that we had understood that we were to give him the first earnings out of the company. He said he did not understand it that way. I said: "Well, it does not make any difference; we are going to pay you, anyway. If the other boys are satisfled to go along on a note, I am satisfied, and I will talk it over with them and let you know in a day or so." He said: "All right." I spoke to Mr. Kizer and Mr. Schlager and Mr. Warnke, and we made the note up, and the judge, I think, came in in about two days and got the note.

Q. Did you personally make the arrangement with the judge by virtue of which he was to receive this note?-A. No; it was preliminary. It was made before I went into the company, with Mr. Warnke, I think, although I understood that the bank had to be bought through Judge Archbald, and that he would get a commission for selling it.

Q. From whom did you understand that?-A. From Mr.

Warnke, after our first audience with the judge.

Q. You say after your first audience with the judge?-A.

Yes, sir.

Q. Where and when did that audience occur?-A. February 12, 1912, at the judge's office; and after we went out the judge and Warnke had a conversation, and the latter came out-we originally thought the bank was to be $7,500-and said: "I did not tell you that the judge has to have a commission of $500 for selling it." I said, "I did not understand that." He says: "Yes. I did not tell you, though." I said: "Is there any other $500 to be paid on this?" He said: "No; that is the only one." I said, "Well, I am satisfied to go along on that basis," and we accordingly went along, and there was nothing more said about the judge's fee other than I wanted it paid in that way at that time. I did not want to put any more money in cash into the proposition than I had to.

Q. Then you heard nothing more of it until the judge came to your office to collect the sum?—A. I took it up later with Kizer and Schlager. I was talking at that time for myself, but when we decided to form a corporation, and all go in, then we talked it over, and it was satisfactory to all.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. You may inquire.

Cross-examination.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Was there any connection whatsoever between the payment of this commission by the note of $510 and an interview that Judge Archbald had for Mr. Warnke with Mr. Baer or with Mr. Richards, of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co.?—A. None whatever.
Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, sir.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) You say none whatever, of your own knowledge?—A. No; none whatever.

Q. How do you know?—A. Well, of my own knowledge.
That is all I know. Was not that the way the question was put-how did I know? It was never discussed in any way, either pro or con, regarding the railroad companies. In fact, I did not know at that time that Warnke had taken up anything of that kind with the judge.

Q. You do not yourself know what the arrangement was between the judge and Mr. Warnke, made in your absence?—

Q. It was made in your absence?—A. Yes.
Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all, I believe. This witness may be discharged, as far as the managers are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF FRED W. JONES.

Fred W. Jones appeared, and having been duly sworn, was exar ined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Where do you live, Mr.

-A. Scranton.

Q. What is your occupation?-A. Colliery clerk for the Delaware & Hudson Coal Co.

Q. How long have you been so engaged?-A. For about a year and a half.

Q. Do you know a man named John Henry Jones ?- A. Yes,

Q. Do you know Judge Robert W. Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time have anything to do with a coal dump or culm dump known as the Lacoe & Shiffer fill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What connection had you with it?-A. I think it was in the months of February, March, and April I was working for the county commissioners

Q. What year?-A. 1911. John Henry Jones was working there at the same time. I happened to hear him tell of dealing in lumber and different things and I drew his attention to this culm fill. I told him I would have to show him where it was. He was very anxious to know in the meantime where it was. I told him as soon as we got through I would take him down and show it to him. We got through in about a week and I took him down and told him the people who owned it and the people he had to go see about it and who were looking after this deal, Lacoe & Shiffer.

Q. Whom did you tell him he would have to see about it?—
A. Mr. Berry. I told him several parties were looking after that and they would have a hard time to get it. He said he knew a party who had an option on it, but he did not tell me who the party was at the time. Then after an inquiry in Courthouse Square, Scranton, I met him and he said the judge had an option on it.

Q. What judge did he say had an option on it?-A. Judge

Archbald.

Q. At the time you talked with John Henry Jones was anything said about the way of getting to and from this dump?

A. Not at that time.

- Q. After he told you that Judge Archbald had an option on it, what did you do?—A. He took me over to the judge's office, just right there adjoining, in Courthouse Square. We talked it over there that I had to get some compensation for the information I gave them, and talked over what I should get, and it was agreed that we should have some papers drawn up to that effect
- Q. Who was present at that time?—A. Judge Archbald, myself, and John Henry.

Q. That was in Judge Archbald's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What discussion did you have about what you were to get out of it?-A. They agreed to give me that, and I agreed to take it.

Q. Was there a written contract drawn?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When and where?-A. In City Solicitor Davis's office, Municipal Building.

Q. Was it drawn the same day?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Who was there with you at the time it was prepared?-A. The city solicitor, Davis, and the stenographer and myself and John Henry.

Q. Had you agreed in Judge Archbald's office upon the terms of that contract?-A. Before we went up there; yes, sir.

Q. Why did John Henry Jones take you to Judge Archbald's office to discuss the amount you were to receive?-A. I suppose on account of the judge getting the option. He told me the judge was getting the option on the culm bank.

Q. Look at the paper I hand you [presenting paper], bearing date the 25th day of April, 1911, and state if that is the contract you refer to.—A. (Examining.) It is.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. I offer that in evidence, and ask the Secretary to read it into the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 88.]

Whereas Fred W. Jones, of Scranton, Pa., has on divers occasions rendered valuable services to me in the matter of locating and securing a culm dump, located in the borough of Moosic, Pa., between Plains Nos. 4 and 5; and Whereas in consideration of said services it was agreed that upon the sale and disposal of said dump said Fred W. Jones was to be componented.

sele and disposal of said dump said Fred W. Jones was to be compensated:

Now, therefore, I hereby agree in the event of said dump being sold by me for a sum in excess of $12,000 to pay said Fred W. Jones 6 per cent of the amount of the price, and in the event of said dump being sold for the sum of $12,000, or any portion thereof, I agree to pay to said Fred W. Jones 5 per cent of the price or sum so received.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 25th day of April, A. D. 1911.

J. HENRY JONES. FRED W. JONES.

Witness: R. M. SPEICH.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) After that agreement had been made, did you have any further dealings about it?-A. What is that question again?

Q. After that agreement had been made and delivered to you, what further connection, if any, did you have with the transaction?—A. Only I told him I knew a party who might buy this culm dump. He wanted to know who it was, and I told him Charles Stone, and he called him up several times on the telephone at his home, and they met at Judge Archbald's office and talked the matter over there.

Q. Did you have any conversation with John Henry Jones and Stone other than in Judge Archbald's office?-A. Only in Judge Archbald's office.

Q. What conversation, if any, did you have in Judge Archbald's office on the subject?—A. Well, in regard to the price of the dump and the right of way to haul from the ground over the land to the Sauquoit, who wanted to sell the fuel-that is, in case we bought the dump.

Q. What was said about the right of way for the shipment?—A. He thought at the point it started it was the D. & H. Co., and naturally he thought the D. & H. might stop hauling over their ground.

Q. What is the D. & H.?-A. The Delaware & Hudson Coal Co.

Q. Or the Delaware & Hudson Railway Co.?-A. The usual term is the Delaware & Hudson on the inside and the Hudson Coal Co. on the outside.

- Q. What was said about it?-A. He spoke about it to the judge, and the judge thought it was not an easy matter to settle that and draw over the right of way. He thought he could fix it.
- Q. With whom did the judge say he could fix it?-A. Well, he would have it to fix with the D. & H. Co. That is what we talked about.

Q. Who is at the head of that company?-A. C. C. Rose,

Q. Is that company controlled by the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had John Henry Jones said anything to you before you went to Judge Archbald's office about this Delaware & Hudson right of way?-A. Not then; but he did after we come out of Judge Archbald's office.

Q. What did he say about it?-A. Stone looked at the prospects of buying, him and John Henry and me. I said there will be a little trouble about the right of way. Oh, he said, the judge is in a position he thought he could fix that all right.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What do you mean by right of way?—A. I suppose going over another party's land.

Q. Then you do not mean by right of way what everyone else means by it; that is, the roadway of a railroad company?—A. A wagon road, if you have to come over the D. & H. Co.'s land.

Q. It is not the trackway of any railroad company that you are talking about?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know that the Delaware & Hudson Co. had no interest whatever in the surface of that land but only mining rights under it?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know that?—A. No, sir.
Q. You do not know that there is a wagon way which was there for many years, more years than you are old, and is used by anybody who chooses to use it?—A. Not that I know.

Q. That you do not know?-A. No, sir. Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) One question, Mr. Jones. Did you ever receive any compensation when this property was sold?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have realized nothing under this agreement up to this time?—A. No, sir.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) There was nothing said in the judge's presence at all about this agreement, after it was made, was there?-A. He come back and it was read over to the judge. John Henry and me come back and read it over to the judge, and it was satisfactory to him.

Q. Did you not testify precisely the reverse of that?—A. No,

Q. Let us see whether you did or not. I am reading from page 1172, gentlemen:

Mr. Jones. John Henry said that he would give me something. Mr. Webb. Was anything said in the judge's presence? Mr. Jones. Not in his presence, but to me.

Is that a mistake?—A. Please read that over again.

Q. (Reading):

Mr. JONES-

That is yourself testifying-

John Henry said that he would give me something. Mr. Webb. Was anything said in the judge's presence? Mr. Jones. Not in his presence, but to me.

That is correct?-A. That is right.

Q (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) I object to reading only that portion of the testimony to the witness. You were asked this question following what has just been read:

Mr. WEBB. Then did the judge simply agree that you should have some pay for your part in the transaction?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Did you so answer?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were further asked:

Mr. Webe. Did he know you and John Henry Jones were going to Davis's office to get this contract drawn?
Mr. JONES. John Henry Jones said we were going up to see City. Solicitor Davis.
Mr. Webe. Was that in the presence of the judge?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.
Mr. Webe. Then the judge knew where you had gone?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Did you so answer?-A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] has asked that the witness be interrogated by the following question, which will be propounded to him by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

What price was asked for the dump by Judge Archbald?

The WITNESS. $12,000 in the first place, and I think reduced to about nine or ten thousand. I could not say exactly.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You had nothing to do with its ultimate sale?—A. No, sir; nothing at all to do with it.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. We have nothing further from this witness. He may be discharged so far as the managers are

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And also as far as counsel for the respondent are concerned?

Mr. SIMPSON. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES H. VON STORCH.

Charles H. Von Storch appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Mr. Manager STERLING. I believe this witness is here under an attachment. I suppose he ought to be discharged from it before we examine him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attachment can be vacated. Mr. Manager STERLING. I ask to have the attachment vacated. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the attachment will be vacated at the request of those who moved it.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What is your name?-A.

Charles H. Von Storch. Q. Where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. How long have you lived there?-A. All my life.

What is your business?-A. Attorney at law and president of the Providence Bank.

Q. Where is the Providence Bank?-A. It is in a suburb of Scranton, about 2 miles out from the center of the town.

Q. How long have you been practicing law in Scranton?-Since 1886 or 1887.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. I am.

Q. Do you know John Henry Jones?—A. Very slightly. Q. How long have you known him?—A. The first time I ever saw him to remember was in December, 1909.

Q. Did you have some business transaction with Jones at that time?—A. Indirectly, yes.

Q. Just state the nature of the business.—A. Mr. Jones came into my office in the early part of December, 1909-

Q. Was that at your bank or at your office?—A. At my law office; and began to talk about some Central American timber proposition. I really paid very little attention to what he did say until he produced a note with Judge Archbald's indorsement and asked if it could be discounted at the Providence I doubted a little whether the note was genuine or not, so I called up Judge Archbald to see. He said it was all right, and that he would take it as a favor if it was discounted. So I told Mr. Jones to take the note to the bank. That is about all the business I have had with Mr. Jones. I have met him occasionally on the street since or when here.

Q. Was Jones a depositor or customer at your bank at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was Judge Archbald a depositor or customer of your bank?—A. I think not.

Q. How far from your office is your bank?—A. About 2 miles. Q. Had you been practicing law in Judge Archbald's court?—

A. In the common pleas court when he was common pleas judge. Q. Had you practiced law in his court after he was district judge?-A. No, sir.

Q. Had you had any litigation in his court on your own account?-A. One case.

Q. When was that?-A. Well, that ran from about 1904, I think, when it was started, until finally decided about January, -possibly December, 1908. Q. It was decided, then, in the same year in which this other business transaction occurred?-A. I think it was in January of business transaction occurred?—A. I think it was in January of that year. The note was discounted in December.

Q. Did you see the note yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you describe it?—A. It was John Henry Jones, maker, payable to Judge Archbald, and indorsed by him.

Q. By whom?—A. By R. W. Archbald.

Q. And for what amount?—A. Five hundred.

Q. Have you got the note?—A. No, sir. Oh, the bank has it. It was here yesterday, I believe, with the cashier.

Q. Who is the cashier?—A. Rollin B. Carr.

Q. Who is the cashier?—A. Rollin B. Carr.

Q. It is in evidence then. Has that note been paid?-A. No, It has been reduced slightly.

Q. It has been renewed from time to time?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Every 90 days?—A. Perhaps 60 or 90; I am not sure about

Q. Who has paid the interest?—A. I understand Mr. Jones.

Q. And the installments on the principal?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you received any appointment from Judge Archbald in recent years?-A. I was appointed receiver in bankruptcy in October, 1910.

Q. That was the October following the discounting of this note?-A. Yes, sir; following the discounting of the note.

Q. Was that appointment of the receivership an important appointment?-A. It was probably a fifteen or twenty thousand dollar business failure. It was not particularly important. I was soon after elected by the creditors, when they met, as trustee.

Q. Were you not appointed referee in bankruptcy?-A. No, sir.

Q. Just receiver?—A. Receiver. Mr. Manager STERLING. Take the witness.

Cross-examination:

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are president of the Providence Bank?-A. Yes, sir.

That bank was the principal creditor, was it not, in the bankruptcy proceeding?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it a creditor in that proceeding?—A. No, sir. Yes it was. Yes. No. Well, I will have to explain that. The bank had some notes in which the bankrupt was liable, and those notes are still being carried by the indorsers on them and reduced occasionally.

Q. The bankrupt was the maker of the notes?-A. I think so, in some cases.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

Redirect examination: Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Von Storch, in whose handwriting was the original note?-A. I think in Judge Arch-bald's, or some parts of it.

Q. You know his handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have not the renewals been in his handwriting?-A. I have not seen them all, but I believe so.

Q. All you have seen were in his handwriting?-A. Yes, sir. Q. And all indorsed by him in just the same way?-A. The indorsements were the same.

Q. Going back to the litigation which you had, what was the nature of the case you had in the judge's court?-A. It was the case of the Risden Iron Works against a cousin and myself claiming liability, as directors of a Montana corporation, on a question of filing an annual statement.

Q. It was determined in your favor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you suspect this note when it was brought to you by John Henry Jones?-A. I did not think that a man of John Henry Jones's appearance would be carrying Judge Archbald's note around.

Q. Still you recognized the handwriting?-A. It looked like

Q. The body of the note was written by Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir: I think so.

Q. And it was made payable to him?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Still you suspected it?—A. I did.
Q. Did you inquire what it was given for?—A. I did not inquire; I was told that by John Henry Jones.

Q. What did he say it was given for?—A. To pay his expenses to Europe—London, I believe—on a business expedition to finance some South American timber proposition.

Q. That was the Venezuela proposition?-A. I presume that was it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Recross-examination:
Recross-examination:
Mr. Von Storch, was there any approximation from Works (By Mr. SIMPSON.) peal taken from the final judgment in the Risden Iron Works case?—A. No, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I wish to have a question asked that I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York presents a question which he desires to have propounded to the witness, and the Secretary will read it to him.

The Secretary read as follows:

Why did you not obey the summons of the Senate to appear as a witness without waiting to be attached?

The Witness. I understood that was settled by the withdrawal of the attachment. I will answer the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will answer the question.

The WITNESS. I objeyed the summons as soon as I could after getting the official notice, which was about 11.30 Thursday night. Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You had been summoned long before that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were summoned before this case commenced the 3d of December ?- A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you been excused?—A. It was Mr. Julian, I believe, who served the summons, and I thought I would probably get further notice when they needed me. I have a telegram or two from Gen. FARB, our Congressman, stating to come on further notification. I got your official notice, and I telegraphed Judge

CLAYTON I was coming. I do not know whether he received it

Q. That was Thursday night?—A. Yes, sir; Thursday night. Q. You did not get here until to-day?-A. Last night.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I think this witness ought not to be penalized under the circumstances. The Chair knows the difficulties under which we have labored; he knows the multitude of witnesses, and as Mr. Von Storch says, I think that his Representative in Congress had agreed to notify him when to come. He says that immediately after he received the notifical of the professional decomposition. the notice on Thursday he endeavored to come here. I think that his case does not call for any punishment, and that the order should be vacated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order has already been vacated. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] presents a question which he desires to have propounded to the witness, and the Secretary will read it to him.

The Secretary read as follows:

How much was involved in the Risden Iron Works case?

The WITNESS. About $10,000.

Mr. President, I have a further question to ask. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents a further question to be propounded to the witness, which will be read to him by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Why have you not collected the Archbald note?

The Witness. Oh, we felt no great anxiety about it yet. Instead of collecting it, as long as Mr. Jones is paying moderately on it, we would rather see it go that way and give him an opportunity to pay if he can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] presents a further question, which will be propounded to the witness, and which the Secretary will read to him.

The Secretary read as follows:

Is Jones regarded as financially responsible?

The WITNESS. I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] presents a further question, which will be propounded to the witness by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Who are you then indulging; Archbald or Jones?

The WITNESS. Archbald.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further questions to be propounded to the witness?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We have no further questions. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any on the part of the respondent?

Mr. SIMPSON. We have none.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further need of the witness?

Mr. Manager STERLING. No, sir.
Mr. SIMPSON. There is none.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF W. W. RISSINGER.

W. W. Rissinger appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, the testimony of this witness and the two next witnesses relates to article No. 7. [To the witness.] Where do you live, Mr. Rissinger?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. How long have you lived there?-A. About 30 years.

What is your business?—A. I am in the coal business now. Q. How long have you been in the coal business?-A. Six or eight years.

Q. What did you do before that?—A. I worked for the Lackawanna Railroad in their coal department.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir. Q. How long have you known him?-A. Ever since I have been in Scranton.

Q. Are you connected now with any coal company?-A. Yes,

Q. What company?-A. Rissinger Bros. & Co. (Inc.), the Ridgewood Coal Co., and the Yost Mining Co.

Q. Do you belong to any other coal company or are you connected with any other?—A. Well, I have some stock in the Evans Mining Co.

Q. Did you at one time have connection with other coal companies?-A. I think not-oh, yes; I did with the Old Plymouth Coal Co.; yes, sir.

Q. Now, what was the Old Plymouth Coal Co.?-A. The Old Plymouth Coal Co. was a washery company, washing coal from a culm dump.

Q. What connection had you with that?—A. I was treasurer.

Q. How long were you treasurer?—A. During the whole period, I think.

Q. Did the Old Plymouth Coal Co. have a case in the Federal court at Scranton when Judge Archbald was presiding there as district judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. I do not remember the year.

Q. Well, about what time was it?-A. It was several years ago. Q. What was the nature of that suit?—A. It was for insurance.

Q. For a fire loss?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Against whom was that suit?-A. Well, there were about a dozen companies; I do not remember the names of them.

Q. Who was your attorney in that suit?-A. H. C. Reynolds. Q. Did you have charge of it for the Old Plymouth Coal Co.?-A. Well, I worked with Mr. Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds had other attorneys associated with him; but he was the main attorney.

Q. What connection did John T. Lenahan have with it?-A.

He was associated with Mr. Reynolds.
Q. He was one of your attorneys in that litigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many insurance companies were involved in the suit?—A. About a dozen, I think.

Q. Was it in one suit or was it brought separately against the different companies?—A. I do not remember how that was; but they were all brought together, I think, and they were brought in Luzerne County, and then the insurance company

Q. In what court?-A. In the Luzerne County court, and the insurance company removed some of those suits to the United States court.

Q. Do you know when those cases were removed from the State to the Federal court?-A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. To refresh your recollection, I will ask you if it was not on October 3, 1908, or about that time?-A. I do not remember the time.

Q. Do you know when the suit was tried?-A. I do not know the exact time; no, sir.

Q. Can you tell the month or the year in which it was tried?-A. No; I can not remember the month nor the year.

Q. Well, you did try one of the cases?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, we are quite willing that the manager may put in the docket entries as found in the printed book, if he so desires.

Mr. Manager STERLING. In that connection, I want to prove some of these facts now. [To the witness:] I will ask you if it was on October 3, 1908, that the case went from the Luzerne County court to the Federal court?

The Witness. I do not remember the date.

Q. Do you think it was about that time?-A. I do not remember the date

Q. How did it come to go to the Federal court?-A. The insurance companies had the cases removed to the Federal court.

Q. How long after the removal to the Federal court was it until it came up for trial?-A. I do not remember.

Q. About how long?-A. I do not remember.

Q. Well, was it five years?-A. I do not remember how long it was

Q. You know it was not five years, do you not?-A. I know it was not five years. I know it was within-

Q. Why do you say you do not remember when it was only four years ago the case was tried?—A. Well, if I do not remember, that is the proper thing to say, is it not?

Q. Well, you certainly know something about when it was that this case came up for trial.—A. I suppose these matters are on record. I do not remember the time.

Q. I want your recollection.—A. I do not remember. Q. Can you give the year?—A. No, sir; I can not give the year.

Q. Can you give it within two years of the time?-A. Well, I judge it was about four years ago.

Q. Judge Archbald was sitting in that court when it was tried?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during the trial a settlement was brought about of all the cases, was it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how long did the case pend from the time it was removed to the Federal court until the settlement came?-A. I do not remember how long it was.

Q. About how long was it?-A. A couple of months, I guesstwo or three months.

Q. During that time, while the case was pending in the Federal court, did you have some conversation with Judge Archbald about a gold-mining scheme in Honduras?—A. Why, we had some conversation; yes, sir. I do not know what talk it was, except that-

Q. Well, it was while the case was pending in his court?—A. Well, I do not know whether it was or not.

Q. Was it before that time?—A. It may have been.
Q. It might have been after that time?—A. It might have been after or it might have been before; I do not remember.

Q. Were there any writings developed from those conversa-tions?—A. All that I know is that I had a writing there, a letter from a man in New York that he was coming up.

Q. Coming up to Scranton?-A. Yes.

Q. What for?—A. Well, about this gold-mine proposition. Q. Did you introduce him to Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sin

Q. He talked with Judge Archbald about it?-A. Well, several others; there were more than one-

Q. Well, did he talk with Judge Archbald about it?-A. Q. Did you previously talk with Judge Archbald about it?-

A. I think so; yes, sir.
Q. And you sent for the man in New York, who was the promoter of the scheme, to come up and see the judge, and he did so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present when he talked to the judge about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said?-A. I do not remember what was said. We just talked in a general way; that was all.

Q. Can you state anything that was said?-A. No; I can not remember anything at all.

Q. Can you state the substance of anything that was said?-

A. No, sir.
Q. Did Judge Archbald conclude to take an interest in it at that time?—A. I do not remember whether he did or not.

Q. Well, did you go back and talk to Judge Archbald after the New York man had left?—A. I do not remember that, either.

Q. Do you remember whether Judge Archbald did finally consent to take an interest in it?—A. Well, I do not know whether he consented to take an interest in it or not.

Q. You know he did take an iterest in it, do you not?—A. I know that I had some stock transferred to Judge Archbald;

yes, sir.

- Q. How did you come to transfer stock to Judge Archbald?-A. It was on account of a note that was indorsed by Judge Archbald, a note that was given by myself and indorsed by Mrs. Sophia J. Hutchison and Judge Archbald. I think, as I recollect the matter, I wanted to do something in this promotion or help along with this stock business, of which I was to have a part, and the judge consented to indorse a note, which I was also to have indersed by Mrs. Sophia J. Hutchison.
 Q. What was the amount of that note?—A. Twenty-five hun- dred dollars.

- Q. It was made by you?—A. It was made by me. Q. By whom was it written?—A. I do not remember by whom it was written-it was written by myself, I suppose.
 - Q. Have you got the original note?-A. No. sir. Q. Where is it?—A. I do not know where it is.

Q. Did you pay it off?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you pay the note or just renew it?—A. I paid the note.

Q. Is the note paid now?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When was it paid?—A. It was paid within about a month.
Q. A month ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did renew it a number of times?—A. Yes, sir; I renewed it a number of times.

Q. How often?—A. Well, whenever it came due I renewed it. Q. Every three months for the last four years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you renewed it the first time, what did you do with the original note?-A. I have no recollection about it. Q. Have you looked for it?-A. I do not think I had the original note. Q. You renewed it, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Did you not take up the old note?—A. I think the note was held as a judgment.
- Q. Was it a judgment note?-A. I think it became a judgment note; yes, sir.
- Q. And was filed in the court there and judgment confessed on it?-A. I think so; yes, sir.
- Q. Now, the body of the note was written by Judge Archbald, was it not?—A. Well, I do not know about that, whether it was or whether I wrote it myself.
- Q. To whom was the note payable?—A. It was payable to Mrs. Sophia J. Hutchison and Judge Archbald—R. W. Archbald.

Q. Who is Sophia J. Hutchison?—A. My mother-in-law. Q. Where does she live?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. As I understand it, you gave a note of $2,500 to Judge Archbald and to your mother-in-law?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. About November, 1908?—A. I do not recollect the date of it.
Q. And then Judge Archbald and Mrs. Hutchison, your mother-in-law, indorsed the note. What did you do with it then?-A. I had the note discounted.

Q. At the bank?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by paying the note you mean that you went to the bank and paid it off there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give Judge Archbald any money for that note?-A. No, sir.

Q. Or did any money pass from him to you for it?-A. No, sir.

Q. How, then, did that note pass as a consideration for any interest in the gold-mining project?—A. Well, he was an indorser on the note, and that I considered some consideration afterwards.

Q. Well, he did not pay any of it?—A. No, sir.
Q. You paid it all yourself?—A. I paid it all myself.
Q. But you did give him some stock, did you not, in that Honduras mining scheme?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Well, I do not remember how much it was. The secretary of the company is here, and he can state.

Q. Have you a recollection of about how much?-A. No, sir. Q. How much did you agree to give him?-A. I do not remember anything about the agreement.

Q. Do you remember anything that was said at the time you talked with him, or at the time you and the New York man talked to him, about how much stock he was to take?-A. No, sir; I do not remember.

Q. What was the face value of the stock?-A. The face value of the stock was $20 a share.

Q. Do you remember how many shares were given to Judge Archbald?-A. No, sir.

Q. Was there more than one kind of stock?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Preferred and common ?-A. Common and preferred stock;

yes, sir.

Q. Do you know which kind Judge Archbald took?-A. No; I do not remember.

Q. Did he take some of both kinds?-A. I do not remember that, either.

Q. Now, give us your best recollection as to the number of shares that Judge Archbald was to get in this arrangement you had with him?-A. I have not got any recollection about it

Q. How is that?-A. I have not got any recollection about how much it was at all.

Q. You testified before the Judiciary Committee, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified there that there was issued to Judge Archbald about $800 worth of stock at its face value, did you not?--A. I testified there from my memory, and it might not have been right.

Q. Did you not testify then that about 40 shares had been issued to him?—A. I do not know. Whatever I testified may not have been right.

Q. You remember you were questioned about it?-A. Yes; I know.

Q. And after you were questioned about it, did you look the matter up in the stock book?-A. I have got my own certificates, and I believe the secretary of the company is here and he can tell how much has been issued to Judge Archbald, but I do not remember.

Q. Have you looked to see how much it was?-A. No, sir.

Q. Well, you are the president of this company, are you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the title of the company ?-A. The Scranton Honduras Mining Co.

Q. Is it incorporated?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are the president?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shares of this stock have you in it?-A. Here are my certificates.

Q. Well, how many shares have you?-A. There are 371 shares of the common in one certificate, 458 common in another certificate, and 33 shares of preferred in another certificate.

Q. That is all the stock you have?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Something like 500 shares?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you paid any money for that stock at all?—A. Yes,

Q. How much?—A. I do not remember how much it was. Mr. REED. We can not hear, Mr. President. The WITNESS. I do not remember just how much it was.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Have you paid any money on that stock outside of what you got on this $2,500 note that the judge indorsed?—A. I think I did; yes, sir.

Q. Well, how much?-A. Well, I do not remember how much that was, either.

Q. Have you got any idea?—A. No, sir.
Q. Not the remotest idea?—A. No, sir.
Q. Was it $50,000?—A. I know it was not $50,000.
Q. Was it $20,000?—A. I know it was not $20,000.

Q. Was it $5,000?-A. No, sir.

What did you do with the $2,500 when you discounted this note at the bank?-A. The bulk of that went to pay for the stock.

Q. The bulk of it-how much is "the bulk" of it?-A. I do not remember just how much.

Q. About how much?—A. Well, probably about $2,000 of it. Q. Now, that went altogether on your stock?—A. It went to pay for the stock I held at that time.

Q. Did it go to pay anything on the shares that were issued to Judge Archbald?—A. Well, I do not know how that was. I think they were issued to Judge Archbald afterwards.

Q. How is that?—A. I think what was issued to Judge Archbald I issued to Judge Archbald afterwards.

Q. Yes; I think they were issued afterwards, but where did you send this money that you got on the note?-A. It went to New York

Q. To this man whom you had come to Scranton?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his name?—A. Russell.

- Q. And you do not know just how much you sent? Was it as much as $2,000?—A. Well, I would not swear to that, but I - think it probably was; yes, sir.
 Q. Do you say none of that was to be applied on the stock that was issued to Judge Archbald?-A. Well, it was applied on the stock that I held.

Q. That you held?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Is the stock which Judge Archbald received a part of the stock which had been issued to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, after he indorsed this note for $2,500, you issued to him, under date of February 27, 1909, certificate No. 6, for 42 shares of preferred stock, did you not?—A. I do not remember what it was or how much, but it was issued.

Q. Would you say that was about the time?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Did Judge Archbald give you any money at the time the stock was delivered?-A. No, sir.

Q. Then, again, on certificate No. 9, you transferred 42 shares of the common stock on February 27, 1909, the same date as the other, did you not?—A. It probably was September 27, because that is the date of my certificate.

Q. February 27, you mean?—A. February 27, and they were probably split on that day.

Q. So on that date you issued to him 84 shares of stock altogether?—A. I do not remember how much it was. Q. Did you deliver it to him in person?—A. I do not remember that either.

Q. Did he pay you any money for it?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did he give you a note for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And has he paid you any money or given you any note for it since that time?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did he tell you he would pay you for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you expect him to pay you for it?—A. No, sir. Q. And this note of $2,500 which he indorsed, you paid all of that yourself?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. He never paid any part of the principal or the interest?-No, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I submit the question which I send to the desk.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) When was this corporation formed?—A. I do not remember when it was formed.

Q. Well, was it formed about the time that you had this conversation with Judge Archbald?-A. The secretary of the company has the books, and he can tell you the time it was formed.

Q. Let me refresh your recollection. Was it not organized November 10, 1908?—A. I do not remember.

Q. And was it not just about that time that the man from New York came up there and had the conference with you and Judge Archbald?-A. I think it was before that that the man came up.

Q. Before the corporation was organized?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. It was probably in October that he was up there?—A. In September.

Q. You think it was as early as September?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And this note for $2,500, which was made payable to Judge Archbald and your mother-in-law and indorsed by them, was dated November 28, 1908, was it not?—A. I do not remember the date.

Q. Would you think about that time?-A. I think the banker has the date of the note.

Q. Well, we will prove that by him. That note you took to the Providence Bank?—A. No, sir.
Q. What bank was it?—A. The County Savings Bank.
Q. The County Savings Bank. Did they discount it right away?-A. I do not remember whether they did or not.

Q. Do you not remember that they inquired who Mrs. Hutchison was?-A. I do not remember.

Q. Did you not write to some real estate men down at-where does she live?—A. She lives in Scranton.

Q. Did you write a letter to some real estate men inquiring as to her financial standing, which you presented to the bank?-A. I think there was an inquiry; yes, sir.

Q. Well, who made the inquiry?—A. I do not know.
Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, is there pending question submitted by a Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] presented a question, which will be read to the witness by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the question, as follows:

Q. At the time of the trial of the case of the Old Plymouth Coal Co. v. The Equitable Fire & Marine Insurance Co. did the defendant, or its officers or attorneys, know that you and Judge Archbald were engaged in the gold-mining enterprise in Honduras?

The WITNESS. I do not think that any of the others concerned had anything to do with it but myself.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Now, I will ask you did you not yourself write a letter to Crisman & Myers, dated December 4, 1908?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will repeat his answer. He was not heard.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not think the witness answered the question as it was asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be again propounded and the witness will answer the question. Mr. Witness, if you do not understand it, read it again. Answer the question as propounded.

The Witness (after examining the question). Only myself knew about that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, please have the question stated again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the question, and the answer of the witness will then be read by the Reporter.

The Secretary again read the question, as follows:

Q. At the time of the trial of the case of the Old Plymouth Coal Co. v. The Equitable Fire & Marine Insurance Co., did the defendant or its officers or attorneys know that you and Judge Archbald were engaged in the gold-mining enterprise in Honduras?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the Reporter will read the reply which the witness made.

The Reporter read as follows:

A. Only myself knew about that.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Now, Mr. Rissinger, does not the letter which I hand you refresh your recollection that the bank refused to discount the note at first until they had made inquiry about Mrs. Hutchison's financial standing?-A. I recollect about an inquiry, since you speak of it.

Q. Just look at the letter and state if it is not a copy of the letter which that real estate firm wrote you on the subject.—
A. (After examining letter.) Well, it may be a copy of the letter, but I do not know whether it is or not.

Q. It is addressed to you, is it not?—A. Yes, sir, Q. Signed by Crisman & Myers?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And dated December 4, and it states that the property which your mother-in-law owns up in that town is worth about $18,000, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will ask that the letter be read,
Mr. President. [To counsel for the respondent.] Do you wish to see it, gentlemen? Mr. SIMPSON. No.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will have the Secretary read the letter.

The Secretary read the letter, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit 89," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 89.] [Crisman & Myers, real estate, fire, plate-glass, and boiler insurance; collections and loans. Renting a specialty. New telephone 1533. Residence, No. 266 Chestnut Avenue; No. 313 Rutter Avenue, Kingston, Pa. Rooms 44 and 45 Wells Building.]

WILKES-BARRE, PA., December 4, 1908.

Mr. W. W. RISSINGER.

DEAR SIR: We estimate [that] the properties of Mrs. Sophia J. Hutchison, located in the boroughs of Kingston and Donanciton, Luzerne County, Pa., to be worth at least $18,000.

Very truly, yours,

CRISMAN & MYERS.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You do remember getting that letter?-A. I remember of some such letter. I do not know whether that is a copy of it or not.

Q. I will ask you if this note which you took to the bank was not a plain promissory note, and they refused to accept it?—A.

I do not remember whether it was or not.

- Q. And when they refused to accept it, did they not say that if you would bring a judgment note and the report with reference to Mrs. Hutchison was satisfactory they would discount it for you?-A. I do not remember, except that they got a judgment note I know.
- Q. They gave you a judgment note and put it in judgment? A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Against whom?—A. Against myself and Mrs. Hutchison. Q. Was the judgment confessed against Judge Archbald?-A. No. sir.
- Q. Although he had indorsed the note with you and Mrs.
- Hutchison?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Why was not judgment taken against Judge Archbald also?—A. Well, I do not know; they did not ask for it in that
- Q. Could they have taken it against Judge Archbald on that note?-A. I do not know.
- Q. Did you have any conference with the bank about not taking the judgment against the judge?-A. Well, I do not remember that I asked them questions about it, except that I gave it the way they asked for it.

Q. How is that?-A. I do not remember that I asked any questions about it, except that I gave it to them the way they asked for it.

Q. So you do remember now that you changed the form of the note from a plain note to a judgment note?-A. I do not know whether I changed it or whether that is the way it was.

- Q. You say John T. Lenahan was one of your attorneys in the Old Plymouth Coal Co. case in that suit pending before the judge?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you present this $2,500 note to anybody else for discount before you took it to the savings bank?-A. I did not present it to John T. Lenahan, but I think I asked him about it. Q. You did what?—A. I think I asked John T. Lenahan about it.

Q. What did you ask him about it?—A. I asked him if he could have his bank at Wilkes-Barre discount the note.

Q. You told him what it was?—A. I think I told him what indorsers I would get on it, or something.

Q. Were they not already on it?—A. I do not think that I had any note. I simply asked him about it.

- Q. And did you not show him the note?-A. I do not think so. Q. And tell him that Judge Archbald was an indorser?-A. I do not think so.
- Q. Did you tell him the amount?—A. I do not remember. Q. Did you tell him what the note was given for?-A. I do - not remember that either. Q. Did he not ask you then why you did not discount the note in your town, and did you not tell him that you had tried to do so and could not?-A. I do not remember,
- Cross-examination: Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Rissinger, the Scranton Hon-
- duras Mining Co. was a subcompany, was it not?—A. Yes, sir. Q. The original concession granted by the legislative authority of Honduras was to an entirely different company?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you got a subconcession from this original company?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did this Scranton Honduras Mining Co. hold any meetings?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Where did it hold its meetings?—A. It held them in the - office of John R. Wilson.
- Q. Did it have any bank account?-A. Well, it transacted some business.
- Q. Answer my question, please. Did it have any bank account?—A. (After a pause.) Well, money went through the bank. I do not recollect about the bank account, but money went through the bank.
- Q. Money went through the bank. Whose bank account was it that it went through?-A. I think the money was paid to New York.

Q. Paid to New York?-A. Yes.

- Q. You said you do not think you paid the whole $2,500 to New York? Did any part of that $2,500 come back to Judge Archbald at all?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Who kept the balance of it, whatever it was?—A. I did. Q. Have there been any profits made by that company?—A. No, sir.

Q. In point of fact, is it not true that a party was sent down to investigate the matter in Honduras, and he found the title was defective?-A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. So that, so far as concerns anything coming out of the matter, there is simply outstanding a company called the Scranton-Honduras Mining Co., that has issued a lot of stock and as to which there is nothing in it. Is not that correct?-A. It issued some stock.

Q. It issued some stock?—A. Yes. I do not know how much was issued.

Q. The balance of the stock which you got, a part of which you gave to Judge Archbald and part of which Mr. Russell got, was kept in the company's treasury as treasury stock, was it not?—A. I do not remember as to that. Probably that is so.

Q. The proceeds of that note and the moneys of your own, whatever amount it was that was paid, was paid by you directly to this man Russell, that you speak of, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What connection, if any, was there between the trial of the old Plymouth Coal Co. case against those various insurance companies and the Honduras matter?-A. Nothing at all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) The corporation is still in existence, is it not?-A. Which corporation?

Q. This coal-mining corporation.-A. No, sir.

Q. When did it dissolve?-A. I do not believe that it has ever formally dissolved, but-

Q. They just stopped mining gold-A. Do you mean the gold-mining company?

Q. Yes; the gold-mining company .- A. The corporation is in existence, but there has never been anything done with it. It is formally in existence, but in reality it is not.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF WALLACE M. RUTH.

Mr. Wallace M. Ruth appeared.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I think this witness also is here on an attachment. So far as we know, we have no objection to his being discharged from the attachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the suggestion of the managers the attachment will be vacated.

Wallace M. Ruth, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What is your full name?—A. Wallace M. Ruth.

- Q. Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Pa.
 Q. What is your business?—A. Cashier County Savings Bank.
 Q. How long have you been cashier of that bank?—A. Since last May.
- Q. Were you connected with the bank in November and December, 1908?-A. I was.

Q. In what capacity?-A. Assistant cashier.

Q. Have you here the records of the bank during that timethe discount records?—A. I have a copy.
Q. I wish you would look and see whether or not a $2,500

- note was discounted, the note being made by W. W. Rissinger to Judge Robert W. Archbald and Mrs. Hutchison.—A. The records of the bank show that on December 12, 1908, we discounted a $2,500 note made by W. W. Rissinger and indersed by R. W. Archbald and Sophia Hutchison. The date of the note was November 28, 1908.
- Q. What was the date of the note?-A. November 28, 1908. Q. When the note was first presented to the bank for discount, in what form was it?—A. Just as I have read it off to vou.

Q. Was it a judgment note at that time?-A. No, sir; an ordinary promissory note.

Q. What was done with reference to the form of the note after that, and why?—A. Mr. Rissinger offered—or possibly I asked him, not knowing Mrs. Hutchison very well, she being a woman-he offered, I think, her judgment note to be entered of record in Luzerne County, where her property was.

Q. Was that in addition to the plain promissory note?—

That was additional security.

Q. The note which was discounted?—A. Yes.

Was that done?-A. It was done.

Q. Was that done?—A. It was done.
Q. What was done with the judgment note?—A. It was entered on the records of Luzerne County.
Q. Against whom?—A. Against Mrs. Hutchison and W. W. Rissinger, I think. I have a copy of it here.
Q. When the note was first presented to you did you cause inquiry to be made as to the financial standing of Mrs. Hutchison?-A. I believe I did. I asked Mr. Rissinger.

Q. I wish you would look at Exhibit No. 89 and state if that is a copy of the letter which you presented to the Judiciary Committee as a copy of the letter which Mr. Rissinger gave you on that subject .- A. It is. I have the letter.

Q. You have the original letter?-A. Yes, sir; I have the original letter.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I guess there will be no dispute about this being a true copy?
Mr. SIMPSON. None at all.

Q. (Mr. Manager STERLING.) Look at Exhibit No. 90 and state if that is a copy of the original note.-A. (After examining.) No, sir; this is a copy of a renewal.

Q. What renewal?—A. A renewal dated March 1, 1912. The original note was dated back in 1908 and was renewed every three or four months, possibly.

Q. Is that the note which was standing as a renewal when you were before the Judiciary Committee?-A. This is the note that was in force when I was here in May.

Q. Look at Exhibit No. 91 and state what that is. I think you presented it to the committee .- A. This is a copy of the transcript of judgment entered against Mrs. Hutchison and Mr. Rissinger in Luzerne County.

Q. In what court?—A. In the court of common pleas.

Q. Why was judgment not taken against Judge Archbald?-We knew the judge. We did not think it necessary. The judge's name on a note was good.

Q. Could you have taken judgment on the judgment note which was given you, or did he sign the judgment note?—A.

Who? Judge Archbald sign the judgment note?

Q. Yes .- A. No. Mrs. Hutchison and Mr. Rissinger signed the judgment note. The judge was merely an indorser on the promissory note.

- Q. If you regarded Judge Archbald's indorsement good on the $2,500 note, why did you go to the trouble to inquire about Mrs. Hutchison's standing and why did you require a judgment note from her?—A. Well, a bank never hesitates about strengthen-ing a paper that they take, and this was an offer, as I remember-
- Q. Then there was a little doubt in your mind about it being good ?-A. I do not think so.

Q. It was not quite strong enough? Is the note paid? Is the debt paid?—A. The note was paid the 30th of November this year.

Q. Who paid it?—A. Mr. Rissinger.

Q. Who kept the interest paid during these renewals?-A. Mr. Rissinger.

Q. Has Judge Archbald ever paid anything on the note?—A. He never has. I never saw him in connection with it.

- Q. You have never seen him?-A. I have never talked with
- Q. In whose handwriting were the original note and the renewals?-A. Mr. Rissinger's.

Q. Always?-A. I think so.

Q. But Judge Archbald was always an indorser?-A. Just as an indorser; yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you again, as it is not clear, who was the payee on all the notes?—A. The note was drawn payable to R. W. Archbald and Sophia J. Hutchison.

Q. And signed by Mr. Rissinger?-A. Signed by Mr. Ris-

- Q. And indorsed by all three?-A. Indorsed by two-Mrs. Hutchison and Judge Archbald. I do not know whether Rissinger was an indorser on it or not.
 - Q. Was Mrs. Hutchison an inderser?—A. Yes. Q. And Judge Archbald?—A. Judge Archbald.

Q. And Rissinger?—A. And Rissinger.
Mr. SIMPSON. We have no questions.
Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. Swingle, who presented a note in evidence, desires to withdraw it, leaving a copy with the Secretary

Mr. SIMPSON. That is entirely satisfactory to us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, by consent of the parties.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN R. WILSON.

John R. Wilson, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What is your full name?—A. John R. Wilson.

Q. Where do you live ?- A. Scranton, Pa. Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

- Q. How long have you practiced law there?—A. Since 1898.
 Q. Were you connected in any way with the Scranton-Honduras Mining Co.?—A. I am the secretary of it.
- Q. You are still the secretary of it?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Have you been secretary of the corporation since it was organized?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it organized?—A. November 10, 1908.

- Q. You issued the stock that was issued, did you not?-A.
- Q. What connection did Mr. Rissinger have with that company 2—A. He was the president.
 Q. Was there a vice president?—A. There was not.

- Who was treasurer?—A. Mr. Harry S. Day. Who were the directors?—A. Mr. Rissinger, Mr. Day, and
- Q. Was Mr. Russell, of New York, a director ?- A. No, sir.
- Q. I will ask you if you have your stock book with you?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. State whether or not any stock was issued to Judge Arckbald .- A. Yes, sir; there was.

Q. How many kinds of stock are there?-A. There are two kinds-preferred and common.

Q. Was any of the preferred stock issued to the judge?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the number of the certificate?-A. Certificate No. 6.

- Q. For how many shares?—A. Forty-two. Q. What was the date?—A. February 27, 1909. Q. What was the face value of the stock?—A. Twenty dellars per share.
- Q. And that would amount to $840, would it not?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Did Judge Archbald pay that into the company?-A. I do not know.

Q. Did he ever pay it to you?—A. No, sir. Q. Was any other stock issued to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much and when?-A. Certificate No. 9, for 42 shares of the common stock, issued February 27, 1909.

Q. Did Judge Archbald pay anything for that, so far as you know?-A. No, sir.

Q. You know, as a matter of fact, he did not?-A. I do not know.

Q. As secretary of the company, you never understood that he paid any money?—A. I did not handle any money.
Q. But you understood he did not pay anything for the stock, did you not?—A. That was my understanding at the time.

Q. For either the preferred or common stock?—A. No, sir;

he paid nothing.

Q. You understand that he did not give a note for either of those certificates, do you not?—A. I do not know; I never saw any note passed.

Q. But you understood from your connection with the company that there never was any note passed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you understand that there is an agreement that he never shall pay anything for it, do you not?-A. I do not know. No agreement is on file with the company to that effect.

Q. And from your connection with the company you understand there is no obligation on his part to pay any part of it?-A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I think that is all.

Cross-examination: Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) In point of fact, these shares were a part of the shares belonging to Mr. Rissinger and were issued in Judge Archbald's name at Mr. Rissinger's request, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did this company ever do any business?—A. No.

Redirect examination:

- (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Look at Exhibit No. 92.
- and state if you made that.—A. (After examination.) Yes, sir. Q. And you presented it to the Judiciary Committee when you were here last summer?-A. No, sir; I gave it to Mr. Webb the former part of this week.

Q. What is it?-A. It is a memorandum of stock outstanding of the Scranton Honduras Mining Co.

Q. You took it from your books?-A. Yes; it is a copy from the stock book.

Q. And it is correct?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will offer that. I do not care to have it read.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let us see it, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Hand it to the counsel for the respondent.

The papers were handed to Mr. Worthington.

The paper referred to is as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] desires that a question be propounded to the witness. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows: Q. Why was this stock given to Judge Archbald?

The Witness. The stock was transferred or ordered to be transferred by William W. Rissinger to Judge Archbald, for what purpose I know not. I know nothing about why it was

Mr. Manager STERLING. Is that all?

I have no questions.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have no questions. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all we care for from this witness

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally discharged.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to offer in evidence, as Exhibit No. 93, a certified copy of the orders taken in the several cases of the Old Plymouth Rock Coal Co. against the insurance companies; also in the case of the Risdon Iron & Locomotive Works against T. C. Von Storch. I do not care to have them read,

Mr. SIMPSON. Will you allow us to see them, please? Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We want them printed. Mr. Manager STERLING. I desire to have them printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In reference to the transcript in the case against Mr. Von Storch, with respect to which it has been stated that the judgment was rendered in his favor, it appears at the end of the transcript that there was a judgment rendered against the defendant for eight hundred and some odd dollars.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I think there are two cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the introduction of the paper?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I think if counsel will examine the papers he will find that there are quite a number of judgments.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I looked at the last one. Mr. SIMPSON. The Risdon case.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Do you object? Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers are as follows:

G. C. SCHEUER, Clerk United States District Court.

EDWARD R. W. SEARLE.

Edward R. W. Searle, being duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Where do you reside now?—A. In the city of Scranton, Pa.

Q. How long have you resided there?-A. About 11 years.

What is your business?-A. Attorney at law.

Q. How long have you been an attorney at law?-A. Since June, 1879.

Q. Have you been practicing law at Scranton during all that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. What portion of the time have you been in Scranton?-A. I came to Scranton in May, 1901.

Q. And have been there ever since?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What official position did you occupy in the United States district court there?-A. Clerk.

Q. When were you appointed clerk?-A. At the organization of the court.

Q. That was at the time that Judge Archbald was appointed as judge?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you occupy that position all the time he was the district judge?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Searle, what do you know about a present or a fund that was raised as a present on the part of the bar, which was given to Judge Archbald at the time of his trip to Europe, in the spring of 1910?-A. I was one of the contributors to that fund, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the gathering together of the fund?—A. Somewhat; yes.

Q. Tell us just what you did in connection with it.—A. As I understand it now more fully than I did in my examination before your committee in August last, after consulting with several of the contributors to that fund, a number of attorneys, personal friends of Judge Archbald, thought that they would give Judge Archbald a dinner on his going abroad. I think that was in the early spring of 1910. Subsequently a number of the attorneys could not attend when they came to give the dinner, and it dwindled down to about nine or ten, and then they thought it would be very nice to make up a purse of practically the amount that the banquet or the dinner would cost them. The first I knew of that was that they came to me and asked me whether I thought the judge, under the circumstances that they were going to give it to him, would accept that money, and from that time on I was more or less active in completing the fund—that is, in this way: Not as a solicitor, in that light, but more in gathering it together, because they had already agreed upon what they would give; but to get it together, so that it would be given to the judge upon his sailing for Europe, and that was all I had to do with it.

Q. You spoke of "they." Whom of Whom do you mean?-A. I mean those who contributed to the fund.

those who contributed to the rund.

Q. Tell me who they were.—A. As well as I can remember, the firm of O'Brien & Kelley, Welles & Torry, Willard, Warren & Knapp, Watson, Diehl & Watson, Mr. Samuel Price, Mr. Rymer Mr. Martin. Merritt Dimmick, Gov. Watres, Wheaton, Darling & Woodward, and C. S. Sprout. That is all that I can recall at this moment.

Q. Have you any idea that there were others besides those you have mentioned?-A. There might have been.

Q. You have not mentioned Mr. Lenahan?-A. No. sir. Q. Did he contribute?-A. He did through Wheaton, Darling & Woodward.

Q. Did he do that through the firm or some member of the firm?-A. When I was here before it was my impression I had nothing to do with Mr. Lenahan in any shape or form and knew nothing about his contribution until his contribution came in at the close of the affair. I called Mr. Woodward on the telephone last Wednesday, when it was intimated that I was to come here, to see whether I was right or not in my recollection of the affair. Mr. Woodward declared to me that he did not send me Mr. Lenahan's check and had nothing to do with it. I said to Mr. Woodward, "You go and look at your check book." I told him it was either April or May when he issued that check. "Then," I said, "refer to your letter of that date and you will find you are mistaken. I will hold the phone." He did so, and he came back and said, "Ed, you are absolutely right"; that he wrote the letter to me; that he inclosed Judge Wheaton's check and his check, and also a check of $25 for Mr.

Q. That was Mr. Woodward?-A. That was Mr. Woodward. That is all I know of Mr. Lenahan having any connection with that fund in any shape or form.

Q. Mr. Searle, who is Mr. Woodward?-A. He is an attorney of Wilkes-Barre, of the firm of Wheaton, Darling & Woodward. Q. Is that in the judicial district over which Judge Archbald has presided?—A. Yes, sir; the middle district of Pennsylvania.

Q. What official position in that court did Mr. Woodward hold at that time?—A. He was jury commissioner from the organization of the court down until Judge Archbald left.

Q. At the time you were here before the Judiciary Committee you could not remember any of these names which you have given me to-day, could you?—A. I think you refer to my testimony.

Q. To your testimony.-A. I gave a large number that I have given to-day; but I could not remember, and told you so, that I could not call it to my mind. Since I went home I took pains to inquire and I find I left out a few names.

Q. As a matter of fact, you gave us practically no names at that time, except Mr. Woodward and Mr. Lenahan.—A. I gave you Gov. Watres's name; I gave you Mr. Dimmick's name; I gave you Watson, Diehl & Watson's name; I gave you Mr. Price's name; I gave you Mr. Martin's name; I gave you Mr.

Rymer's name; and I gave you O'Brien & Kelley's name, Q. In fact, most of those names were asked you in the form of questions as to whther they did not contribute?-A. No, sir; not that I recall it, sir.

Q. How much did each one of those men contribute?—A. I can not recall the amount; but no one gave over $50, and none gave less than $25.

Q. Give us the first attorney's name you mentioned who did contribute?-A. Who was that?

Q. Take up any of them. I do not care about the order. Who was some one who contributed through you?-A. Mr.

Q. How much did Mr. Price contribute?—A. I could not say whether it was twenty-five or fifty.
Q. Do you know how he happened to contribute?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk with him about it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He gave the money to you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, take up some other man.—A. O'Brien & Kelley.
Q. They are in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Did they contribute to you?-A. I think they did.
- Q. Did they give you a check?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. For how much?—A. $50.
- Q. Do you know anybody in Williamsport by the name of
- Munson?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you solicit a contribution from him?-A. I have no recollection of having any conversation with Mr. Munson what-ever in relation to this fund. He and I talked the question over right out here less than two hours ago. I pointed out to him how easy it was to be mistaken. I called his attention, for instance, to Mr. Lenahan's mistake, as I read it in his testimony in the Congressional Record, and told him how easy it was to be mistaken. I am as firm in my statement that I had nothing to say to Mr. Munson as I know I had nothing to say to Mr. Lenahan.
- Q. Now, Mr. Searle, from the very nature of things, you might have forgotten your conversation over the phone, and if he had been asked to contribute and had refused he certainly, if he remembered it at all, could not be mistaken about it.—A. Whom do you have reference to?
- Q. Mr. Munson.—A. The reason I am so firm in that, Mr. C. S. Sprout, of Williamsport, looked after that entirely, as I understood it, and I paid no attention to anybody in Williamsport, neither did I pay attention to anybody in Luzerne County.
 - Q. Did Mr. Sprout contribute?-A. He did, sir.
 - Q. Did he pay to you?—A. Yes, sir. Q. How much?—A. $25.
- Q. Now, give the amount paid by these other attorneys.-I can not give you the exact amount. It is my impression that the firms that I speak of gave $50.
 - Q. How much did you get altogether?-A. $500.
- Q. Just exactly $500?—A. I am not sure about that. It was either $500 or $525.
- Q. Did you contribute, Mr. Searle?—A. I did.
- Q. How much did you contribute?-A. $25.
- Q. Did you get a letter of acknowledgment afterwards from
- Judge Archbald?-A. I did.
- Q. After he had arrived in Europe?-A. Not strictly an acknowledgment of the $25; but I was the clerk of his court, and he wrote me I should say once or twice a week while abroad, and in the first letter I received from him he mentioned what a nice thing his friends did in that matter. Do you want me to tell what else was in that letter?
- Q. I do not care for it. Have you the letter?-A. I have not the letter.
- You remember all those things now and you did not know anything about those when you testified before the Judiciary - Committee ?- A. The question was not asked me, sir. Q. Did you testify before the Judiciary Committee as to the - amount that these various attorneys had contributed?-A. I think I did, sir, as far as I could remember.
- Q. Mr. Searle, do you know who contributed or who paid the expenses of Judge Archbald's trip when he went abroad?-A.
- Q. Who was it?-A. Mr. Cannon, a cousin of Judge Archbald's wife.
 - Q. Henry W. Cannon?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Of New York City?-A. Yes, sir. I should like to say in that regard that when the first letter came to Judge Archbald, inviting him to go to Mr. Cannon's villa in Florence
 - Q. Did you see the letter?-A. I saw the letter.
 - Q. Was the letter written to you?-A. No, sir.
- Q. To whom was it written?-A. It was written to Judge Archbald.
 - Q. Do you know where it is now?-A. I do not.
- Q. When did you see it?—A. It must have been along in February prior to his going.
- Q. When did he go, as a matter of fact?-A. I can not give the month. It was either April or May, 1910.
- Q. Do you know what ship it was?-A. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, I think.
- Q. The letter came in February, inviting him to go with Mr. Cannon?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Written to Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir. He showed the letter to me and asked me what I thought of it. I said, "Judge, go by all means." He hesitated. He said he had no means of his own, and he was afraid to accept that invitation for fear that the people he owed would misconstrue it; that he ought
- Q. He did not owe anybody?-A. Yes, sir; my understanding is that Judge Archbald has been financially bad for 30 yearsthat is, he had no surplus money.
- Q. As a matter of fact, do you not know his name is good on a $2,500 note in bank in Scranton?-A. Judge Archbald's

- name is always good in our community, sir, not only prior to this investigation but to date.
- Q. Always good?—A. Always good, sir. Q. Why was he afraid, if that was the case, that somebody would criticize him for going abroad; do you know?-A. I told you the reason for it. He was afraid some people he might owe would misconstrue it and say the money he used for a trip abroad should be applied upon his indebtedness.
- Q. He did not owe anybody he could not pay and he did not owe anybody who was crowding him for money, did he?—A. I could not say as to that.
- Q. If he did, his name was not so good on a note?-A. I say I have never seen the time yet but what his name was good.
- Q. If his name was good and nobody was complaining about his name being bad--A. I could not tell you what other people were thinking of or what other people were saying.
- Q. Very well. I am asking you, if they were complaining, then his name was not good, was it?—A. It does not necessarily destroy a man's credit if A, B, and C might complain
- Q. But I understand you there were no such instances.-A. I did not say that. I said I did not know whether there were or not.
- Q. I thought you did know that his name was absolutely
- good.—A. I do say that, sir, unhesitatingly.
 Q. You do not know, however, but what A, B, and C and a good many other fellows are complaining about his not paying his debts?—A. That might be, sir.
- Q. Notwithstanding that you do know that his name is absolutely good on a note in any of the banks of Scranton?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Is it true that the judge hesitated about accepting the money from Mr. Cannon to make his trip because he was afraid his creditors would complain?-A. That was what the judge talked with me in discussing whether he ought to go under the circumstances.
 - Q. Did he tell you who his creditors were?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you know who they were?—A. Some of them.
 Q. Just in a general way, did he owe a great deal of money?— A. Yes; I think there is a mortgage on his house for some
- thirteen-Q. That was not due, was it?—A. I could not say whether it was due or past due.
- Q. Do you know that there was any note or any claim that - was crowding him at that time?—A. No, sir; I do not.
 Q. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that there were no claims crowding him then?-A. I could not say that, because I had no means of knowing it.
- Q. I suppose you would if you knew about his credit being so good. How much did Mr. Cannon pay him to make this - trip, if you know?—A. I could not tell you anything about that. Q. You do not know how much he paid?—A. I have no knowledge whatever, sir.
- Q. Do you know when Mr. Woodward was appointed jury commissioner?—A. I told you, sir, at the organization of the court.
- Q. He was appointed by Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. He was an attorney, of course?-A. Yes, sir; and his father before him.
- Q. Of what railroad company was Mr. Woodward general attorney?—A. I could not say, only what I know transpired in our court. He is attorney, as I understand, for the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., and also for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

 Q. The Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. owns the Lehigh Valley
- Coal Co.?-A. It is supposed to.
- Q. It is really one and the same, is it not?-A. I can not say that, but that is the general impression of people who live in the coal country.
- Q. How long has he been attorney for this railroad company?—A. I should say Mr. Woodward is the third. His grandfather represented them in bygone days, and his father until he went on the bench. I should say all the time he has been admitted to the bar.
- Q. He was such attorney at the time he was appointed jury commissioner?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. He has been such attorney ever since?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether he represented any other railroad company as attorney?-A. I could not say that, sir; that is, to be sure of it.
- Q. Do you know anything about it?-A. I was told after Judge Wheaton resigned from the common pleas bench and came back to this firm—before he went on the bench he was a member of the old firm of Woodward, Darling & Woodward, but after he retired from the common pleas bench he went back to this firm, and after he went into private practice again the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. had removed, on account of ill health, Gen. Palmer, who was general counsel for a great many years, and appointed Judge Wheaton.

Q. About when was that, Mr. Searle?—A. I could not tell you. It would be only a guess. I should say three years ago, or such a matter. It was when Mr. Palmer left Congress. It was at that time his health broke down.

Q. Mr. Searle, referring again to these attorneys with whom you consulted and who contributed this money, all of the money contributed to this fund was contributed by attorneys?—A.

Absolutely, sir.
Q. They were all practitioners at the court over which Judge Archbald presided?-A. No, sir.

Q. Where they not?—A. No, sir. Q. Who were not?—A. Well, there was Mr. Dimmick.

Q. Who is Mr. Dimmick?—A. Mr. Dimmick is a member of our bar.

Q. Where?-A. Scranton.

Q. He is a practicing attorney, is he not?—A. Not for the last 12 or 15 years. He is in the banking business.

Q. He is a banker?—A. Yes, sir; he is president of the Lackawanna Trust Co., Scranton.

Q. Give us another one.—A. Gov. Watres. Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives in Scranton—ex-lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania.

Q. Has he quit the active practice?-A. Yes, sir; some 15 or 16 years.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is president of the Spring Brook Water Co.

Q. What is the Spring Brook Water Co.?-A. It is the water company that furnishes water for Wilkes-Barre and Pittston and all the cities below Scranton-small mining towns. He is president of the Title Guarantee & Surety Co. of Scranton, and a number of other companies of that character, all of which I can not recall at this moment.

Q. He is connected with a number of corporations there?—A.

Yes, sir.
Q. What other attorney contributed to this fund?—A. I do not recall any just now.

Q. All the balance of them were practitioners in Judge Arch-bald's court?—A. More or less, sir.

Q. These men, you say, at first decided to have a dinner?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a meeting?—A. I could not tell you about that. Mr. Sprout, of Williamsport, could tell you more about that than I.

Q. Most of those attorneys were in Scranton, were they -A. No, sir.

Q. They had a meeting in Scranton to talk about the dinner?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Did you attend any meeting in regard to a dinner?—A.

No, sir. I knew nothing about it.
Q. You never heard of such a meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, while you were clerk and lived there in Scranton and were associated in an official capacity with all the attorneys who did business in the court, whether they lived in Scranton or otherwise, you never heard of any meeting of any attorneys making arrangements to give a dinner in honor of Judge Archbald instead of making a contribution of money direct?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Where?—A. I heard the lawyers talking about it. I think the first I heard about it-

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I submit the witness has not attempted to answer the question.

The WITNESS. You Lopped me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will complete his answer now.

The Witness, As I understand your question, the first intimation I had of what they were doing at all was talk—Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is not an answer to my question. I want an answer to my question. The question is, Where was this meeting? The witness said he knew of a meeting, and my question is, Where was it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will answer the question, and then he can explain.

The Witness. I never knew where there was any meeting, but I overheard a conversation of attorneys while at Williamsport talking about a banquet for the judge, and my understanding of the talk of the attorneys was that this whole affair was originated not in Scranton but by the members of the bar who were attending the supreme court at Philadelphia, and there is where they first talked about this banquet.

Q. Where did you get that understanding, and from whom did you get it?—A. I got it from the man who started it, Mr.

Sprout, of Williamsport.

Q. Of Williamsport?-A. Yes, sir; he told me.

Q. How many men did Mr. Sprout see in getting these contributions?-A. I can not tell you.

Q. Do you know whether he saw anybody?-A. I do not know whether he saw anyone.

Q. Is it not true that Mr. Sprout's activity was entirely with regard to the dinner and had nothing to do with the collection of the cash contributions?-A. I could not say that, sir. that I recall of it is that he did send me his check for his contribution for the purse.

Q. That is all you know of his doing?-A. So far as the money end is concerned.

Q. That is what I mean.—A. Because I do not live there and had no means of knowing.

Q. As a matter of fact there was no dinner given?-A. No, sir.

Q. You said in your testimony a while ago that these men thought they might as well contribute this money; that it would be about the same they would pay if they had a dinner.—A. That was my understanding of it.

ner.—A. That was my understanding of it.

Q. Was the judge notified as to who had made these contributions?—A. Well, now, when do you mean?

Q. At any time.—A. At any time?

Q. Yes.—A. My understanding was this money was turned over to Judge Searle and he put it in an envelope and sealed it and delivered it to Judge Archbald on board the boat in Jerson City, and in the envelope there was a letter transmitten. City, and in the envelope there was a letter, typewritten, wishing him bon voyage, with the names of the contributors, with no amount signed opposite the names at all. That is my understanding of it. And on the outside of the letter was written, "Hon. R. W. Archbald. Sailing orders: Not to be opened until two days at sea."

Q. Then the idea was that he should not know who the contributors were until he had gotten away from land?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then he was able to tell exactly who it was who contributed the money?-A. If he read the letter he would.

Q. Do you know Thomas Darling?-A. I do, sir.

Q. Is he a practicing lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Wilkes-Barre.

Q. Was he one of the contributors to this fund?-A. I could not say, unless he was included in the firm's check.

Q. As soon as the fellows up at Wilkes-Barre contributed to Mr. Woodward, as I understand, he sent the money down to you?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And the man up at Williamsport sent his money down to you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any other attorneys coming from other towns outside of Scranton who contributed to the fund?-A. All that I recall are those I have named. Q. They sent their contributions to you, did they not?-A.

Yes, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, you had in your possession all of the contributions that were made, did you not?-A. Before it was turned over to Judge Searle, I think I did, with the exception of probably there might be one or two. I know I did not have Judge Searle's contribution.

Q. Now, Mr. Darling is in partnership with Mr. Woodward, the jury commissioner, is he not?-A. I could not tell you that.

The firm is Wheaton, Darling & Woodward.

Q. Is not Thomas Darling a member of the firm?-A. I think his name is there, but whether he is an active partner or not I can not say.

Q. I want to ask you if this man, Mr. Darling, the partner of Mr. Woodward, is not attorney for a railroad company other than the railroad company for which Mr. Woodward is an attorney?—A. I never knew Mr. Darling representing any corporation while I have been in Scranton.

Q. Is he not attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. I could not say.

Q. You do not know whether he is or not?-A. I do not know.

Q. When did this talk first begin about getting a dinner for the judge?-A. Of course, I am unable to state when it started.

Q. I should like to get, if I can, about the length of time that elapsed from the beginning of the agitation of this subject until the judge finally sailed?-A. I can not give you that, but it was a short time before he sailed. I do not think it was over three weeks before that. I have no recollection of it.

Q. The judge did not know anything about the talk about the dinner, either?-A. Absolutely none.

Q. He never knew anything about this work that was going on, gathering together this money to contribute to him?-A. As far as I know, never.

Q. You never told him of that?-A. Never.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida presents a question to be propounded to the witness, which the Secretary will read to him.

The Secretary read as follows:

What are the duties of a jury commissioner, how many are there, and for what term are they appointed to serve?

The WITNESS. The duty of a jury commissioner of the United States court is to gather a certain percentage of names from each county in the district and put them in the wheel as the venire of the court is called for. Their appointment is for no stated term. It is for life or until removed. At each term of the United States court the court issues a venire calling for a certain number of grand jurors and a certain number of petit jurors. The clerk certifies that to the jury commissioners, of which the clerk is one. They notify the marshal, and at the drawing of the jury the number of names commanded by the venire is placed into the wheel and the wheel closed and shaken up, and the number drawn out according to the mandate of the venire.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) As a matter of fact, there is only one jury commissioner in the judicial district?—A.

- Two, sir.

 Q. The clerk is one, is he not?—A. Yes, sir. The law provides that there shall be two jury commissioners in each Federal district, and the court shall appoint the second jury commissioner.
- Q. I mean besides the clerk.—A. There is only one besides the clerk, sir.

Q. That is what I mean. The clerk is ex officio one of those commissioners?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the law provides that the judge shall appoint some one of the opposite political faith from the clerk as another jury commissioner?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, then, in this judicial district you as clerk and Mr.

Woodward as the other jury commisioner selected all the names of all the jurors in that judicial district, did you not?-A.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think that is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) That is to say, you selected the names that were put in the wheel?-A. Certainly.

Q. And then, after a revolution, they were drawn out, and by the chances thus evolved they became jurors?—A. Yes, sir. Q. The marshal was the man who drew out the names from the wheel, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your politics?—A. Republican. Q. And Mr. Woodward's?—A. Democrat.

Q. And he belongs to a Democratic family of Pennsylvania running back for generations, does he not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. His grandfather was chief justice for many years of the supreme court?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I submit that is exceeding anything we brought out on the direct examination. It all may be very interesting to have the family history of Mr. Woodward, but it is consuming the time of the Senate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I might say it has been very interesting to listen to all that was brought out by the witness, but not a word has been brought out that there has been any attempt to connect Judge Archbald with.

- Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That will be determined later. Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You spoke of the firm of Watson, Diehl & Watson. Is Mr. George M. Watson a member of that firm?-A. No, sir; he has no connection with it; he is no rela-
- Q. In the beginning of your examination you were asked if the judge would accept money if it was given to him. What did you say in response to that question?—A. As near as I can recall it, I told them that I thought under the circumstances, the fund emanating from lifelong friends, men who were pure in character, and the manner in which it was to be given, I could see no harm in his taking it and I thought he would.

Q. In point of fact the difficulty was in so getting it into his hands that he could not turn it back?-A. That is all we apprehended, that he would throw it back on the boat.

Q. Is that the reason why it was put in an envelope with the indorsement on it as stated, "Sailing orders, not to be opened until two days at sea"?—A. Absolutely; and Judge Searle was selected to do that. They thought that coming from a man of his character he would accept it.

Q. Judge Searle is judge of what court?-A. He is the present judge of the common pleas court of Wayne County, Pa.

Q. So far as you are aware, did Judge Archbald have any knowledge or intimation whatsoever that this money was to be given to him?—A. None, absolutely.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

(By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) I have a question to ask. You stated, in answer to a question, that these contributions came from men who were pure in character. Did you make any investigation, when a contribution was offered, as to the purity of the character of the man who contributed it?-A. I have known them all for over 40 years personally.

Q. They were all of that kind of men, were they?-A. Every one of them.

Q. Did anybody offer to contribute to the fund who did not get an opportunity to do it?-A. I could not say as to that, sir.

Q. You did not refuse anybody's money, did you?-A. No, I have had some lawyers complain that they did not have a chance to contribute to this fund.

Q. That is very natural; I should think they would .- A. And I will tell you the reason why I did not ask them: So far as I am concerned personally, it was because they were all young men and had not any more money than their own families needed.

Q. And even the men, then, who did not have enough, or at least not more than enough to supply their families, were anxious to contribute to this fund?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any idea that the anxiety of any of these attorneys to contribute to the fund was moved in any degree by their desire to have the court hold a friendly opinion of them?—A. Not in the least, sir.

Q. It seems, though, that there were men who did not get an opportunity to contribute, who were quite poor, and whom you thought could not afford to pay, who complained because they did not have an opportunity to pay?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will be finally discharged.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I wanted to question Mr. Lenahan next, but I have just been told by the Sergeant at Arms that he was discharged. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. Lenahan was examined touching this matter.

HENRY W. CANNON.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Under article 10 we had a witness subpœnaed—Mr. Henry W. Cannon. We are in receipt of a telegram from the United States marshal in New York City, stating that he is not able to serve Mr. Cannon; that he is informed by his secretary at his office in New York City that Mr. Cannon is now on his house-boat somewhere in Florida. The only testimony we wanted to show by Mr. Cannon was along the line of this one article 10, but we will not ask to delay the Senate by hunting further for Mr. Cannon. We will not call him.

J. B. WOODWARD, JURY COMMISSIONER.

I want now to offer in evidence, Mr. President, a certified copy of the appointment, and his oath, of Mr. J. B. Woodward as jury commissioner.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We do not care anything about it.

Mr. SIMPSON. We do not object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to Mr. Manager Norris). Do you desire the paper read?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I should like to have the appointment read. I do not care to have the certificate read.

The Secretary read the paper, which was marked "U. S. S. Exhibit No. 94," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 94.]

Per S. W. HOFFOED, Deputy Clerk.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We have another witness, Mr. President, but I do not believe it is necessary to wait for him. Mr. Woodward is not here.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I should like to have Mr. T. F. Farrell called as a witness.

TESTIMONY OF THOMAS F. FARRELL.

Thomas F. Farrell, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) What is your name, Mr. Far-rell?—A. Thomas F. Farrell. Q. Where do you live?—A. New York City.

Q. What is your city address?-A. 147 West Ninety-third

Q. It has been shown in evidence in this proceeding that application was made to the Girard estate for Packer No. 3, being a culm bank in Shenandoah, Pa. I wish you would state to the Senate what your connection with that transaction was as to the formation of this company and the securing of this culm bank, Packer No. 3?-A. I had no connection whatever with the securing of that culm bank nor with the formation of that company. I was interested in that company to the extent that I agreed to loan to the company about to be formed or thereafter to be formed enough money to build and equip a washery on that culm bank Packer No. 3.

Q. What was your first negotiation with reference to this furnishing of money, and with whom was that negotiation—when and where?—A. In my office in New York City with Mr. Jones-Mr. T. H. Jones. He came to my office with a man from New York; he was introduced to me by a man from New York City in the coal business, he having heard that I was interested in such property, I being in the coal business. I asked I where the property was, and he told me in Shenandoah. I asked him where the property was, and he told me in Shenandoah. I asked him about how much coal, and he did not know how much coal. I asked who was in the company, or who was to be in the company, and he mentioned to me that Judge Archbald, of Scranton, was to be in the company. I said to him, "Is that the Judge Archbald before whom I sat as a grand juror in New York City here last July?" He said, "I guess it is." "Well," I said, "if that is the same Judge Archbald that I served before, and he is interested in the company, I would be willing to go along, but I would like to see the men"—I was willing to go along, but I would like to see the men"—I was a little bit skeptical about some people in Scranton. A meeting was arranged, and I went to Scranton, if my memory serves me rightly, about this time last year-just before the Christmas holidays.

Q. How far is it from New York to Scranton?-A. Oh, about 150 miles, I guess.

Q. All right, sir, proceed.—A. I called at Judge Archbald's office.

Q. With whom?—A. With my friend from New York, who was interested, Mr. Hellbut, my son, and I do not remember whether Mr. Jones was with us or whether we met him there, but he was there.

Q. Where was this meeting—in Judge Archbald's office, you say?—A. In Judge Archbald's office.
Q. Who was present when the conference began?—A. Judge

Archbald-

Q. Was V. L. Petersen there?-A. Judge Archbald, Mr. V. L. Petersen, Mr. Jones, Mr. Hellbut, my son, and myself.

Q. Now, proceed and tell us what took place at that meeting when Judge Archbald was present.—A. At that meeting I said that I thought I was in the right place, because the judge was the man that I thought he was. I recalled to the judge my having served under him, and he remembered that he had been sitting in that court at that time. I said that I was looking for a proposition of this kind, and I was quite willing to advance the money necessary to put the plan in operation.

Q. How much was that?—A. Well, about $20,000, possibly a little more than that; not over $25,000—about $20,000.

Q. The application to the Girard estate states that it was $25,000. Would that be correct?—A. Well, it may have been $25,000, but my memory is that it was about $20,000, or a trifle over that-whatever money was required or would be required to build this washery. For putting in that money I was to have an interest in the profits of the company and I was to be rean interest in the profits of the company and I was to be repaid my money. We discussed there that night how I would be repaid and how much profit I should get. I asked, I think, at first about half the profit. I finally agreed—I do not remember whether it was that night or at a subsequent meeting to take 20 per cent of the profit, and to have my money repaid with interest at 20 cents per ton as the coal came out, so that at any time the company was not operating it would not be handicapped by meeting my payments. I was not to be interested in the company in any way, however. I was to take the entire stock of the company as collateral security for my loan. • Q. Was Petersen to put up any money?—A. I do not know. I think I was to put up all the money.

Q. Was Judge Archbald to put up any money?—A. I do not know. As I said before, I think that I was to furnish all the funds to build the washery.

Q. You do know what agreement was had at this particular time you are talking of, do you not?—A. I do know the agreement that was had between these people representing this company and myself.

Q. Well, was Judge Archbald expected to put up any money at the time that you had the conference with him in his office at Scranton?-A. At that time it was not stated that anybody was to put up any money but myself.

Q. Well, tell me what Judge Archbald was to do-what was agreed or suggested or stated that Judge Archbald was to do?-A. Well, we talked in a general way. The talk was quite general. We talked over the royalties that were to be paid and over the leases that were to be made; and, as I understood it then and remember it now, we were to receive a lease from the Girard estate.

Q. Who was to get that lease?—A. I think Judge Archbald. The company was to get it.

Q. I understand that, but who was to secure it?—A. I think Judge Archbald was to secure it.

Q. Was there any other lease or consent?-A. Well, I do not know whether we had to have a consent from the Lehigh Valley Railroad or not; that is not clear to me; but Judge Archbald was to see Mr. Warriner. Just what for, whether it was to fix a royalty, or just what, I do not know.

Q. Did you know at that time that Mr. Warriner was the vice president and general manager of the Lehigh Coal Co.?— A. I did not know what Mr. Warriner's position was. I never heard his name mentioned before that time, but I gathered from our talk that night that he was an officer in that railroad.
Q. Did you know that Col. James Archbald, engineer of the Girard estate at that time, was a nephew of Judge Archbald?—A. I incidentally heard that that night; I never knew it before.

Q. How did you come into possession of that information? Well, naturally the Girard estate was spoken about, and we did not know going to that meeting exactly where the culm dump was, and our idea was to see the dump for ourselves, which we did the following morning. We were then told—and I do not remember who in the conference said it—that it belonged to the Girard estate; but incidentally it was mentioned that Col. Archbald was the engineer for the Girard estate. I inquired who Col. Archbald was, and was informed-I do not remember whether it was by Judge Archbald or by somebody else present—that he was Judge Archbald's nephew. I had never heard of him before that night.

Q. Did you visit Packer No. 3 the next day?—A. I did.
Q. Who was with you?—A. Mr. Hellbut, my boy, and myself visited there, accompanied by or directed by this man Jones.

Q. Did the judge go with you?—A. No, sir.
Q. At that time had the name of the company been fixed upon as the Jones Coal Co.?—A. No, sir; the first I heard of the Jones Coal Co. was when I read of this case in the paper.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is with the respondent.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Farrell, I should like to have the date of that meeting if you can give it to us—the meeting at Scranton, when Judge Archbald was present.—A.

Well, as nearly as I can remember, it was just a few days before the Christmas holidays; I could not give you the date.

Q. The question was put to you as to whether Judge Archbald was to see Mr. Warriner. As a matter of fact, were you not informed that he had already seen him?-A. Well, I do not know whether I had been informed that he would see him or that he had already seen him.

Q. Was the agreement that you arrived at at that meeting reduced to writing at all?—A. No, sir.
Q. Why not? What became of the matter?—A. Well, we were not sure about it.

Q. Well, you learned not long after that, did you not, that the matter had to await the termination of the existing lease of the Lehigh Valley?—A. Oh, yes; I telephoned Judge Archbald at Scranton and asked him what was new. I was anxious for this coal. I had at that time other things in view if I could not reach this. What I was after was coal. I telephoned to Judge Archbald, and he told me that we would have to wait, for the reason that the Girard estate would not make a lease with us until the lease about to expire with the Lehigh Valley Railroad for the Packer mine had been renewed.

Q. Well, now, if I understand what that verbal agreement reached there was, you were to get your money back, of course, in the way you have described?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But outside of that you were to have a one-fifth interest in the company?-A. No; I was to have no interest in the company. Q. But you were to have 20 per cent of all the profits?-A.

Q. And the other parties were to have the other four-fifths, or 80 per cent, of the profits?-A. The company itself.

Q. Yes; the company itself. Now, did you understand who all were to be in the company?—A. I did not.

Q. You understood that Judge Archbald was one?-A. What is that?

Q. You understood Judge Archbald was one?—A. Yes. Q. And Mr. Petersen one?—A. It is not clear to me whether I was told he was to be one or that he was to manage; but I was told that he was to manage the operation.

Q. You do not recollect that he was to manage it and that that was to be the consideration for the interest that he was to have in the company?-A. It may have been that way. I do not recall.

Q. Did you understand that Mr. Jones was to have an interest?-A. Yes.

Q. And others, perhaps?—A. Yes.

Q. You understood perfectly well not only that Judge Archbald was not to put up any money that was to be required, but none of the others were?-A. Yes; I was to put up the entire amount of money required to build that operation.

Q. You were to put up all the money that was needed?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were anxious to get the contract?—A. Positively. Q. Why?—A. Because I wanted the coal. Mr. Helbutt and myself had agreed before we went there that his firm, Robinson, Haydon & Co., of New York, would have the entire output of the washery, and I in turn arranged with Robinson, Haydon & Co. that I would have my requirements, whatever they might be, of the output, and I felt that I was fairly secure, for if at any time I could not use all of the coal I could take what I wanted and turn the rest over to Robinson, Haydon & Co., they to look for a market for it.

Q. Was this the only transaction of this kind that you were engaged in where you were to put up the cash or concerned in putting it up?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many others?—A. One other.

Q. About the same time or before or since?—A. I had taken up a matter of that kind on that same basis about the 1st of November.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I do not see what that has to do with the question at issue.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I imagined, Mr. President, that it was supposed to be some reflection upon Judge Archbald that he was to go into a transaction of this kind where another person was putting up the money and he was getting an interest in the company without doing anything. I have already shown that, as to this company, there were a number of others who were in the same relation, and I propose to show that it is the common and usual thing to make arrangements of that kind in dealing with coal properties in the anthracite region. If this witness can tell us of the practice and custom and state that men in New York who have the money are anxious to get a chance to do that very thing-to put up all the money that is required, take some interest in the venture, and let the rest go to the people who have brought the proposition to them, I think it is entirely competent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, that counsel is justified in bringing out the fact that there are such other transactions, but the Chair would hardly consider it proper to go into details.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would not desire to do so at all. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) There was one other transaction you say about the same time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where was the coal property in that case?

Mr. Manager, WERP, Mr. Property.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, counsel is going into details, and I object. I think he has a right to show the general custom or general reputation or general practice, but certainly not to go into details.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Will you tell me, then, whether it is customary in transactions of that kind for one man to put up all the money, or find all of it, and another man to find the coal property and then divide the profits?-A. I have known of it in two cases.

Q. Besides this?—A. Yes, Q. And recently?—A. About that same time.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, counsel is going into details again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that counsel is going too far. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Under the intimation of the Chair, and in the interest of time, I will not go—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the counsel is not going too far.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, I will want to ask about that other transaction. [To the witness:] From what company was the other property in which you said you were immediately concerned obtained?—A. The Pennsylvania Coal Co.

Q. Who was general manager of that company?-A. Well, now, I really do not know.

Q. Do you know Capt. May?-A. I do not; but that is the company.

Q. The Pennsylvania Coal Co.?-A. I do not know any official in that company.

Q. Where was the property?-A. The property was on the railroad fill, the old gravity railroad that runs from Honesdale to Hawley. Our operation is at Hawley. Q. Did that transaction go through?—A. Yes; we are work-

Q. You put up the money, and you are now working at the fill?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) That is one of the old gravity abandoned fills?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Abandoned many, many years ago?-A. I heard that this fill was made about 50 years ago.

Q. And abandoned by the gravity railroad company. Now I will ask you, Mr. Farrell, if you do not know that it was agreed that night in the judge's office-was the conference at night?-A. At night; yes.

Q. I ask you if that night in the judge's office it was not agreed that Thomas Howell Jones should have an interest in this corporation and its profits for finding you or finding the money?—A. No, sir. If that was agreed to, it was not spoken of in my presence.

Q. Mr. Jones, I believe, swore that that was what he was to do .- A. That may be.

Q. I ask you if it was not also agreed in that conference and talk that V. L. Petersen should have an interest in it because he was to supervise it?—A. V. L. Petersen—that is very clear to me—was to supervise it, because I questioned him very thoroughly about his capability for supervising it.

Q. And that Judge Archbald should have an interest in it for securing the leases?—A. No, sir; there was no stipulation as to what any of these men were to have a part in the company for.

Q. Well, did you say awhile ago that all that you heard the judge was to do was to secure the leases, to see Warriner and his nephew, Col. Archbald?—A. The words "secure the leases" were never mentioned. It was not put quite that way.

Q. How was it put?-A. Judge Archbald was to see the Girard estate people and also Mr. Warriner.

Q. The only reason why the judge could see Mr. Warriner or the Girard estate was for the purpose of securing the lease of this bank, was it not?—A. That is my understanding.

Mr. Manager WEBB. You may stand aside.

Recross-examination:
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Was there anything said there about Judge Archbald being a judge and his being a judge of the Commerce Court have anything to do with it, or anything of that kind?-A. At that time I did not know that Judge Archbald was a judge in the Commerce Court.

Q. You did not even know that?—A. There was nothing whatever said about his being a judge of any court, except what I myself said in my introduction to the judge.

Q. That you had been on the jury in his court?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you tell us when you were on the jury in New York before the judge?—A. Yes; the previous July. July and August of the previous year, 1911. I served as grand juror under Judge Archbald in the criminal term of the Federal court in the post-office building in New York City.

Q. He was then acting as circuit court judge, I imagine?

A. I do not know. I thought that Judge Archbald was a Federal district court judge.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The witness may be discharged finally. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is finally dis-

CHARLES B. SQUIRE.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, that completes the examination-in-chief by the managers, with one exception. We had expected at this time to examine Mr. Charles B. Squire. He was duly served with a subpoena on yesterday, to be here immediately, but he is not here. We think, however, Mr. President, that his testimony will be largely, if not altogether, in rebuttal, although we had expected to examine him in the chief examination, in order to be perfectly fair to the respondent in the case. But I do not think it is advisable that we detain the We hope to examine him in rebuttal, and we think that likely all of the questions which we desire to ask of him will be permissible in the rebuttal examination. As he is not here, in order to insure his attendance I shall, as soon as I can prepare it, submit an order to the Senate for an attachment against him.

Now, Mr. President, I ask that Mr. E. J. Williams, Mr. J. R. Dainty, Mr. John W. Berry, Mr. Thomas Darling, and Mrs.

Hutchison be finally discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have subpænaed Mr. Berry, and desire him to be kept here, and also Mr. Darling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to limit it to such subpænas-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witnesses are very apt to misunderstand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to limit it to such subpænas as have been issued at the instance of the managers.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We had expected to examine Mr.

Watson, but he is sick, as we understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not made an announcement as to those other witnesses. As the Chair understands, it is the desire of the managers that the witnesses be discharged from any further attendance under their subpæna.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The understanding of the Chair is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witnesses named, so far as they are under summons in pursuance of subpenas issued at the instance of the managers, will now be discharged from obligation under those particular subpænas. Of course, if they are under subpæna from the respondent they are still under obligation to respond to the same. Now the manager will proceed as to the other matter.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Here is an order, Mr. President, that I desire to submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it. The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That an attachment do issue in accordance with the rules of the Senate of the United States for one Charles B. Squire, a witness heretofore duly subpœnaed in this proceeding on behalf of the managers of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the manager desire that that be immediately returnable, or returnable at such time as he can utilize the witness?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I can only answer upon surmise, Mr. President, and upon that surmise I think that it may not be made returnable before Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will take notice of the fact and act accordingly. The question is upon agreeing to the order proposed by the manager.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. President, that is all the testi-Mr. Manager CLAYTON. mony in the examination in chief the managers desire to offer at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order which has previously been adopted by the Senate the counsel for the respondent will not present their witnesses until Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 16, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, December 14, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the gracious privilege of coming to Thee in prayer. May it be in the spirit of Him who taught us when we pray to Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communi-

Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to advise you that on December 12, 1912, I tendered to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in Congress from said State, the resignation to take effect on the 31st day of December, 1912. With assurances of respect, I have the honor to be,
Yours, very truly,

WM. SULZER.

DECEMBER 12, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. DIX, Albany, N. Y.

My Dear Governor: I hereby resign my seat in the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of New York, to take effect the 31st day of December, 1912.

Very truly, yours,

WM. SULZER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted-To Mr. TUTTLE, for 10 days, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. Knowland, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DAVENPORT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 752.

House resolution 752.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3175, with the amendment reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; that there shall be four hours' general debate to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the measure. At the expiration of said four hours' general debate the same shall be considered under the five-minute rule, as follows: The amendment proposed by the House committee shall be first read for amendment and perfected. After same has been so perfected the vote shall be taken upon the question of the adoption of said amendment. If same shall be adopted then the Senate bill shall not be read, but the committee shall rise and report the measure to the House. If it shall not be adopted then the Senate bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule, and when perfected the committee shall rise and report the same to the House. Immediately upon the perfected measure being reported to the House the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. But a separate vote may be demanded upon any amendment or amendments thereto adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how much time they would like to have for the discussion of the rule. The Committee on Rules has unanimously reported the resolution.

Mr. MANN. There are a number of Members who have made requests to be heard upon the rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I think it would be proper to have a reasonable amount of debate on the rule.

Mr. GARNER. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that 30 minutes on a side be allowed, as that is all the request we have had on this side for time.

Mr. MANN. Make it at least 45 minutes on a side. Mr. HENRY of Texas. That would be an hour and a half. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that there ought to be a little more time than that. Mr. HENRY of Texas. I thought that an hour, half an hour on a side, would be enough.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think it is fair, in view of all the circumstances attending the bill, the work that has been done by this Committee on Immigration, of which I am a member, that we should have a little more time, and I would suggest that it would do no harm if the gentleman from Texas makes it two

Mr. GARNER. You are going to get four hours general debate.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But that is a short time for debate on a bill of this importance.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] that if I have control of 45 minutes of time I shall yield a part of it to him.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I believe an hour and a half is a sufficient time.

Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman from Illinois taken into consideration the fact that I desire a few minutes myself?

Mr. MANN. I have. I appreciate the fact that ordinarily 45 minutes on a side on a rule is considered a liberal allowance of Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will submit the request for an hour and a half to be allowed, 45 minutes on each side, for the discussion of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Who is to control the time?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask that 45 minutes be controlled by myself and 45 minutes be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be limited to one hour and a half, 45 minutes thereof to be controlled by himself and 45 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, in the rule as originally proposed by the gentleman from Texas, I observed that there was a provision with regard to time for general debate, but I did not, during the reading by the Clerk, notice whether there was any such time allowed. I ask the gentleman whether or not there is a provision of that kind in the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There is no limit to time or amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In the original resolution which the gentleman has now amended, or which he proposes to amend, is it provided as to how that time shall be controlled?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is, the general debate?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes. I ask whether that is in the resolution as now read?
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether under this rule any other amendment except that offered by the committee will be in order

Mr HENRY of Texas. Any amendment may be offered. The rule is so drawn that it leaves the bill wide open to amendment.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that is hardly a fair statement.

No other amendment is in order if the committee amendment be agreed to, except amendments to the committee amendent.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That was not the question the gentleman asked. If the committee amendment be agreed to, of course that settles it, and that is the stronger measure in the

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as a number of Members have come in since the resolution was first read, the Chair will direct the Clerk to again report the resolution.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that under that rule if the House committee amendment is adopted, then there will be no opportunity to amend.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If those who are not in favor of the committee amendment are not strong enough to adopt an amendment, of course they are too weak to carry their side of the proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There would be no opportunity, under this rule, to amend the House amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; there would. The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, for the benefit of all concerned, that this House amendment is in the nature of a substitute, and any Member can offer any amendment to it that is germane. It is really a bill.

Mr. MADDEN. It is subject to any kind of amendment until it is adopted in place of the Senate amendment. After that, of course, it is not subject to amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair put my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate upon this rule shall be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes, to be controlled one-half by himself and onehalf by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And that the previous question be ordered at that time.

The SPEAKER. And that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of one hour and a half.

Mr. RODDENBERY rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will give us a chance to vote on a substitute resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I could not agree to lat. This is the usual request. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules

Mr. MANN. I know; but the gentleman ought to be willing to let the House vote on a substitute resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am willing that we shall have an hour and a half in which to discuss the resolution, but I can not agree to that request. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. I can not agree, as far as I am concerned, to a proposition which would prevent the House from amending the rule if it so desired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the gentleman object? Mr. MANN. I am waiting to hear what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] has to say.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman from Georgia rose, and I take it that he has some question that he wishes to ask.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object in order that I may make an inquiry of the chair-While this rule is longer and more liberal than any special rule for the consideration of a single bill that I have seen in the three years I have been a Member of Congress, yet does not the gentleman from Texas think that on the adoption of the rule itself the usual debate is sufficient?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the rule be adopted, then we will proceed to consider the bill. We go into the Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the gentleman think that an hour's debate upon the adoption of the rule is entirely sufficient?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the gentleman mean the bill or the special rule?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I mean the rule. I understand the gentleman has preferred a request for unanimous consent that an hour and 30 minutes be agreed to for debate, pending the adoption of the rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. On the rule, Mr. RODDENBERY. Well, now, is an hour and 30 minutes the usual parliamentary time consumed in debate on the adoption of a rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, 40 minutes is the usual time-20 minutes to a side.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Now, the question I propounded to the gentleman is, although the rule might be somewhat complicated, Now, the question I propounded to the Does the gentleman not think 40 minutes is entirely adequate for the consideration of this rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The committee thought this was about the plainest rule that has been drawn for a good many

Mr. RODDENBERY. It is quite plain, but it is more lengthy than you will find in the Congressional Record in three years for any one bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, evidently the gentleman has not read the rule or heard the rule read.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the statement again, you can not find in the RECORD in three years as long a rule for any one bill-

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the question be put.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I object.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 87, noes 41.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 82, answered "present" 5, not voting 108, as follows:

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, the question presented by this rule is in no sense a party question. The issue is in no sense a partisan issue, and the rule comes here in no partisan manner. It comes as the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules, every Republican as well as every Democrat on that committee voting to report the rule. It comes, Mr. Speaker, I believe, as one of the fairest and most liberal rules that has ever been presented to the House on this or any other question. It opens wide the questions involved in this legislation for debate and for amendment, with the utmost freedom and the utmost liberality. No man can justly cry "gag law" or "gag rule" at any feature of this rule.

But it might be suggested in opposition to the rule that the Committee on Rules has given preference in the order of consideration to the measure reported by the committee of the House rather than to the bill proposed by the Senate. It seems to me that that is not only the custom but that it is proper; that in endeavoring to perfect this measure we should give first consideration to the measure proposed by our own committee, with only five dissenting votes out of the entire Provision is made that when this measure, reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, is considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and perfected by the adoption of such amendments as any Member on either side may desire to offer and that the House will accept, a test vote shall be taken to see whether the measure proposed by the House committee can receive a majority of the votes of this Chamber. If it shall not receive that approval, then the Senate bill shall be taken up and perfected in like manner; so that, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, it seems to me that we could present no fairer proposition, we could give to the various gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber entertaining various views on this great question no fairer opportunity to find expression on this floor and to find expression in the vote of this House. I predict now, as the result of this rule, that the will of the House, of a majority of the Members present and voting, will be absolutely ascertained and carried

It seems to me that when your Committee on Rules has discharged that function you could not ask it to do its duty in a better manner.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one other observation that I desire to submit in reference to this matter. It seems that the ques-tion back of this rule, the question of admitting aliens into our country, is a most important one. It is one of far-reaching importance, and it seems to me that we ought to have on a question of that kind neither party action nor prejudiced action, but free and untrammeled action and free and untrammeled opportunity for each and every Member of this House to express his own views and to stand in his own place, representing his own district, offering what he thinks is best for the common good of all the country. [Applause.] And your Committee on Rules, in carrying out that policy, reported this substitute resolution, which we think frees the House and frees the individual Members of the House, and makes it impossible for this House to adopt by any rule or trick or scheme anything except something that the majority of its Members on a fair test vote shall say is for the best interests of the whole country.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when we shall have done that we shall have discharged our duty to the House, and when it comes to the solution of the great question back of this bill the Members of the House, unshackled by this rule, will have full opportunity for both debate and amendment and will be able to give effect to the will of the American people. And surely in a Democratic House we could wish for no more. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] is recog-

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I favor this bill for the fundamental reason that it is a check on immigration, and while it is fairly subject to criticism, yet none of the critics can point out any other check which is not still more objectionable. Therefore I accept this as the best check which can now be devised. I think the enormous immigration which is inundating us is perilous and must be lessened. I recognize how it has stimulated our growth and been the cause of our greatness. But we all know there is something more vital than size or The spirit of the people is what determines permanent y. We are a Nation of immigrants. But those who first established our Government a hundred and twenty years ago had inbred in them from the struggle of a thousand years the self-reliant and self-restraining spirit essential to successful democracy. They recognized that respect for law is essential to real liberty. They recognized that even for themselves, who were of such a character, that under any form of government they would find essential liberty. They recognized that even for themselves restraints were necessary; that their impulses must not be allowed to run unchecked, and therefore they wrote in constitutions certain clear principles which should restrain even themselves. They recognized their own weaknesses and liability to err and voluntarily fettered themselves by their Constitution against such excesses. That is what a constitution is or should be—a recognition of certain fundamental principles which no temporary gust of passion or self-interest shall be allowed to violate.

But nowadays, with a population which few would maintain was as trustworthy or as fit to follow its impulses as our forefathers, there is an attempt to abolish constitutions and let the momentary will of the people always prevail. I think our vast immigration has made that unsafe. Millions have come to us who had never experienced or inherited any training in self-government or in self-control. The ability to recognize that present individual desires must yield to future general good, that permanent law must prevail over temporary impulse is essential to a successful republic. That spirit is not in-stinctive. It must be cultivated. It is sadly lacking in many of our cities whose population consists largely of recent immigrants. It is lacking in most of the immigrants who are now flocking to us, and we need time to cultivate that spirit in our present population before we dilute it further. Therefore I believe that to check immigration is one of our most pressing duties. I would vote for any reasonable bill which would accomplish that result. I think the pending bill is the best feasible step in that direction, and it has my hearty support.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recognized for 20

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-

FOGLE] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], in asking the adoption of this rule, said, if I remember rightly, that every Member of the House would be afforded a full and fair opportunity to stand in his place and express his opinion fully and voice the sentiments of his district upon this great question. Yet a reading of the rule shows that it will not permit that full, complete, and untrammeled opportunity which the gentleman from Georgia said was to be afforded this House. The rule provides for the consideration, first, of the substitute reported by the House committee, and, if the substitute of the House committee be voted down, then a consideration of all the provisions of the Dillingham bill as it came from the Senate.

There are many provisions in the Senate bill as it came over to the House that were exceedingly obnoxious to the views of those Members of this body who favor the Burnett literacy bill, and these matters ought to receive full attention and consideration. Yet the rule provides for but four hours' general debate, each side to have one-half. Is that the full, free, and untrammeled debate which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARD-WICK] said might be had under the rule in this House? Is that the opportunity which he believes was to be given to every Member—I use his own words, "To every Member of the House"-who, he says, may stand in his place and voice the sentiments of his district.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like to, but I have only a few minutes left.

Mr. BURNETT. I will take only a moment. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. As a general rule I have always been opposed, ever since I have been a Member of this House, to these special rules, and I can see no reason why one should be adopted now. On next Wednesday, in the regular order, the Committee on Immigration will be reached, and this bill can then come up in the usual and regular way and receive fair consideration and proper time can be had to debate its provisions and the various phases that underlie the subject. Nothing has arisen which calls for urgency in this matter. There is no emergency which requires this bill to be rushed through the House.

The Committee on Immigration held many hearings on this bill and a number of men from different sections of the country, representing diverse views, came before that committee, both in favor and in opposition to the measure. come no one, so far as I am aware, from the city of New York, into which city come the largest proportion of the immigrants to this land, who have favored restriction of immigration. the contrary, the sentiments of those who came from the city and appeared before the committee were in vigorous opposition

The rule is drastic in its provisions, and under it we can not have that freedom of debate, that unlimited discussion which could be obtained if in the regular order of things the bill came before the House. Highly important legislation awaits the attention of this body, and yet with undue haste it is proposed that this bill to restrict immigration be hurried through. The rule does not afford, in many respects, the same opportunity for the consideration of the amendments as would be afforded were the bill to come up in the regular order, and—
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, of course there are differences of opinion with respect to immigration legislation, and I do not propose now to discuss that question, but I propose to discuss the rule which is before the House. And I wish especially to refer to some of the remarks made by the gentleman who has york [Mr. Goldforle]. He refers to this as a drastic rule; he refers to this as a rule cutting off amendments; he refers to this as a rule cutting off amendments; he refers to this as a rule cutting off debate. Mr. Speaker, there was never brought into this House from the Committee on Rules since I have been a Member of the House a rule that was simpler or more liberal in its terms than the rule which is presented here for consideration now.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] is mistaken about this rule cutting off amendment. Upon the contrary, the bill is thrown wide open for amendment. The gentleman from New York is mistaken about this rule being drastic. Upon The gentleman from the contrary, the gentleman can not find, either in the special rules that have been brought in or in the general rules of the House, a more liberal policy laid down than is laid down in this particular rule.

The rule has been explained by the gentleman from Texas. It is simple in its terms and it is liberal in its policy. In effect, it merely brings this matter before the House for consideration. It is true it limits general debate. It ought to limit general debate. If it were not limited in that way, the general debate would be limited in some other way. The rule in itself gives every opportunity to every man to offer any amendment that he may see proper that is germane to this legislation. It seems to me that there can be no objection to this rule except from those who do not desire to consider immigration legislation at all. [Applause,]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to use some of his time.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

BARTHOLDT] four minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that even those who are inclined to favor the proposed legislation could well afford to vote against this special rule. As long as I can remember it has been the practice of this House not to bring in special rules except in cases of emergency or when the legislation sought to be enacted could not be reached in any other

Neither of these excuses can be pleaded in justification of the rule now pending. There certainly is no emergency for the further restriction of immigration at a time when American labor is fully employed and when the cry comes up from all American industries for more men; when, in fact, in the very industries which usually give employment to new immigrants the complaint is loudest about the great scarcity of labor exist-ing at the present time, and when the real problem is not how to keep out immigrants but how to get them.

Therefore, unless it is intended to throttle the American industries even more quickly and more effectually than Democratic tariff legislation will accomplish it, there is no need of this rule and no need of this legislation, for I hold that to keep out the willing hands so necessary for the future industrial growth of this country will be a most grievous wrong and an act of the greatest political folly. Will anyone contend that this bill can not be reached in regular order? What is the parliamentary situation? The Committee on Irrigation now has the floor, and, as I understand, it has but one more bill to consider. We would take that up next Wednesday and dispose of it, so that on the very first Wednesday after the holi-days the Committee on Immigration, which is the next com-mittee on the list, will be called and this bill disposed of, and this would be fully two months before the final adjournment of this Congress.

What, then, is the reason for this unseemly haste? Do not the rules as they stand permit the Democratic majority to in-flict punishment swift enough upon the naturalized citizens who, during the last campaign, dared to find fault with some of the writings of the President elect, and could not the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle decently wait at least a few weeks longer before they repudiate the apologies offered to the so-called foreign element by their candidate for the Presidency on account of what he had written on the subject of immigration?

Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor I might ask further, What do our Democratic friends propose to enact into law?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What is it they propose to enact into law? The written opinion of Prof. Wilson on the subject of immigration or the verbal explanations of Candidate Wilson made during the campaign? If the latter, you had better keep hands off this bill, because in that event it would be more consistent for you to appoint a reception committee and send them to Ellis Island to conduct every new immigrant to the Waldorf-Astoria or some other great hotel. But I appreciate that the campaign is now over and the votes of the foreign element are no longer needed, and therefore they are again to be degraded to the level of "the coarse crew," as Mr. Wilson called them, and they are going to have swift punishment meted out to them by legislation of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri who lately addressed himself to this proposition objected to it evidently on the ground that he objects to the legislation to which it relates. The gentleman from New York who preceded him objects to the rule on the ground that it was drastic. Both gentlemen are mistaken. This is not, as the gentleman from Missouri seemed to insinuate when he spoke of what the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle were about to do, partisan legislation in any sense. It is, as the gentleman who preceded me has said, a measure of the greatest public importance, and one in which the members of both parties, Democrat and Republican, and in which the people of this country are immensely interested at this time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I will, but I have only three minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the necessity for haste in this

Mr. DALZELL. Because this is a measure of great public importance, and the session is drawing to an end. It ought to be, as it will be, enacted into law as speedily as possible. [Applause.] So far as the rule itself is concerned, I venture to say that no more liberal method of procedure was ever introduced into this House than is embodied in the provisions of this rule. If I had the time I would call attention to the rule under which, on June 25, 1906, the immigration bill now on the statute book was considered, and also the rule under which the great pure-food bill, on July 20, 1906, was considered. In both instances the consideration of the House was restricted to the measure reported by the House, excluding consideration of the measure reported by the Senate, while in this case the broadest opportunity is afforded to express the preference of the House as between the Senate bill and the House bill. General debate of four hours is liberal, but we all know that general debate means nothing, and, so far as debate under the five-minute rule is concerned, it is unlimited under the provisions of the rule, and will proceed as long as the Members in Committee of the Whole desire to offer amendments and to consider the provi-If, in the first instance, the Committee of the sions of the bill. Whole shall see fit to adopt the measure which has been reported by the House committee, then well and good; it will be reported to the House and passed upon by the House. If, on the other hand, the Committee of the Whole shall see fit to reject the proposition reported by the House committee, then the bill is wide open for discussion of amendments to be offered to the bill sent to us by the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that the House amendment is one amendment?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And is it not true that at any time after 10 minutes have expired it is perfectly competent under the rules of the House to close all debate upon that and all other amendments?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would say, in reply to the gentleman, that the length of time of debate on any proposition is entirely within the control of the Committee of the Whole at any time and at all times, and unless the gentleman assumes that the Committee of the Whole is going to do an injustice there can be no objection to this rule upon that ground.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, with very few exceptions I have at all times voted against special rules, and I see no reason why I should or why we should vote for this rule. member of the Committee on Immigration, I feel satisfied that within the next few days our committee will be reached; and should it not be reached on next Wednesday it will surely be reached immediately after the holidays, and I am positive that ample opportunity will be given our committee to consider this and all other legislation which pertains to immigration. Some of the Members of this House seem to believe that this restrictive legislation is demanded by the people of our country. To these gentlemen I desire to say that they are mistaken. There is no such demand, unless it be on the part of a few misinformed residents of districts where there are now no foreign-born citizens and to which sections immigration does not go. I feel confident that had these gentlemen the same information upon this question that I have and were they so familiar with the existing conditions as I am they would not be here to-day pleading for and demanding this special rule. The people of the country instead of being opposed to immigration are in favor of it, for they know that it is immigration that has built up our country and made it the greatest of them all. Coming as I do from the second largest city in the United States, one which has a population of nearly two and one-half millions, nearly 60 per cent of which population is of foreign birth or foreign parentage, there is no question but what were there any sentiment in favor of imposing restrictions upon immigration that I would be aware of it. Yet I have heard not a single resident of my city express himself as being opposed to the coming of these people into our city or this country, nor have I re-ceived a single communication from the inhabitants of Chicago advocating the passage of legislation tending to prohibit these immigrants from availing themselves of the opportunities offered in our country. However, on the other hand I have received hundreds of resolutions from commercial, professional, educational, and fraternal organizations protesting in the strongest possible terms against the pending restrictive measures and branding the Dillingham and Burnett bills as unfair, unjust, and un-American. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to vote for this rule, for I do not feel that there is a demand for the enactment of legislation of this nature. And aside from that, I do not see the necessity of bringing this bill before the House, at this time, for, undoubtedly, it will be reached in the regular course of business within a very short while.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] has five minutes remaining and the gentleman from Illinois eight minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I should not oppose a rule for the consideration of the immigration bill, under the rules of the House, although under the ordinary rules of the House, without a special rule, the immigration bill could be taken up on next Wednesday for consideration; but when gentlemen, like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], say that this is not a drastic rule it occurs to me that they have not very carefully examined the rule for which they voted in the com-mittee. If the previous question had not been ordered upon the rule, I should have offered for the consideration of this bill, as a substitute, a rule copied from one of those drastic rules reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] in his palmy days in the House, when the Democratic side of the House was accusing him of all sorts of tyranny. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] declined to permit that to be offered, and he insists upon this drastic gag rule that is now pending. The rule which I should have offered would be:

That for the remainder of this session, bill (title, etc., S. 3175) shall have the same privilege for consideration that is enjoyed by bills reported from committees under power to report at any time.

That would have given the House an opportunity to consider this bill upon the same plane and on the same terms as are appropriation bills or bills raising revenue, and would have given the House full power to consider and amend the bill. What is the proposition now pending? That there shall be four hours' general debate and at the end of that time the House committee substitute shall be read for amendment Read for amendment, mind you, under the rules of the House. Under the rules of the House if an amendment be offered to this House committee amendment it must be germane to it. The House committee amendment considers only one subject in the Senate bill. The Senate bill is a bill 58 pages long, containing many provisions which have been asked for by those in favor of restricting immigration. The House amendment contains one proposition.

It is open to amendment. Amendment in what regard? Is it open to amendment on the other subjects contained in the Senate bill or are amendments confined to being germane to the House amendment upon the one subject? When an amendment is offered to the House amendment after it has been discussed for 5 minutes or 10 minutes, one man in favor and one against. the House itself in Committee of the Whole can not extend the time for debate. There will be no such thing as moving to strike out the last word and getting the floor, because that would be an amendment in the third degree and any Member of the House, like my distinguished friend from Georgia, can object to further debate upon the proposition. Talk about debate under the rules of the House! It is a gag rule to prevent debate and prevent amendment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. I have not the time to yield. It was n who limited the time for debate. I asked for liberal debate. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY], who has proved himself the master of the House. Yesterday he applied the lash to the backs of the leaders on the Democratic side of the House, and to-day, with their wounds still open, they bow in submission before the gentleman from Georgia and bring in a rule, as the gentleman from Georgia desires, to prevent debate, to prevent amendment, and prevent consideration. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to congratulation and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to sympathy and condolences. [Applause on the Republican side.] What is the proposition in this? Here is a Senate bill, 58 pages long, containing many provisions not only with reference to the admissions of aliens, but in reference to the administration of the immigration laws. Under the rule, when the House has voted upon the House amendment to the bill, the bill is to go to conference. The bill, the law, is to be written in conference without any opportunity on the part of the House to vote on the propositions in the Senate bill which are not embraced in the House substitute. It is true, as will be suggested by gentlemen who defend the rule, that the House in the committee by voting down the House committee amendment can then proceed to consider the Senate bill. In other words, it is true that if the House on a vote on the House amendment votes against the thing they want then they can proceed to consider That is a false attitude in which to put Memsomething else. bers of the House. Those Members who are in favor of the one proposition embraced in the House substitute have to vote for that or vote against it against their consciences, and when they have voted for it they thereby cut themselves out from the opportunity of considering or amending the many other propositions contained in the Senate bill and turn that over to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and possibly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to settle in conference with the Senate amendment. I would like to call attention now to the proposition that perchance those who are opposed to the immigration bill shall have the right to be represented on the conference committee. Here is a proposition to take the Senate bill, containing many propositions upon many subjects, fixing a head tax, doing many other things which the gentlemen interested in immigration desire to be heard upon, and turning that all over to the conference committee without any opportunity on the part of the House to express its opin-ion upon the subject. Then in the expiring days of this Congress we will be asked to vote up or down the conference report without anyone here knowing anything about the jokers in it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman permit a question\right there?

I will if you will give me the time.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is the second man on the committee, and will no doubt be on the conference committee, so the statement of the gentleman along that line is entirely gratuitous.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboot].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, it is very clear to me that the opposition to this rule comes wholly from the fact that those who are opposed to this rule are opposed to any consideration or action upon this bill at this session of Congress.

As a matter of fact, this rule, as has been said heretofore, is one of the most liberal that has ever been proposed by the Rules Committee since I have been a Member of Congress. It conforms to the practice of the House ever since I have been a Member, namely, it gives preference and precedence to a substi-tute reported by the House committee, and nothing more, and provides that that shall be first considered, throws it wide open for amendment, throws it wide open for consideration, and then provides that that shall first be voted upon, and unless it is rejected the Senate bill shall not be considered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why is it that the opponents of this bill desire consideration of the Senate bill? Not because they desire to see it passed. I am frank to say I would vote against Its provisions are much more drastic than are the provisions of the House bill. But, Mr. Speaker, there are 59 pages of that bill; there are 39 sections in it, and the opponents of this bill know that if they could invoke the rules of the House, using every parliamentary technicality that the rules permit, they could prolong the discussion and consideration of those 59 pages and 39 sections until such time that this House would not have an opportunity to vote upon the question at all during this session of Congress.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made, or attempted to make, some point that, because here was a committee amendment that would be first acted upon, that only one amendment to it could be proposed, and therefore, he inferred, or meant the House to infer, that there would be a curtailing of the right of consideration. But I call the attention of the House to the fact that the very proposition which he himself suggested, that he would simply make this bill privileged, would be subject to the same charge, so that the restriction, whatever it might be, does not grow out of anything that you find in this rule, but in the rules of the House itself.

Now, as I said, Mr. Speaker, if this House desires to consider the substitute bill, the rule gives them an opportunity to do it, and to do it with unlimited power under the rules of the House which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is so solicitous about. If it desires to consider the Senate bill, the rule gives the same opportunity as it does the House bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been one who, ever since I have been a Member of Congress, has stood for liberalization of rules. Where I believed they were too strict my purpose has always been to secure consideration, deliberation, and action. And wherever, Mr. Speaker, any rule of this House, instead of expediting deliberation and action is proposed to be used by the opponents of a bill in a filibuster to prevent action, I am for curtailing such rules to the same extent as I am for liberalizing them where necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired; all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 19.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House will resolve itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which is made a special order, and the Speaker appoints the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to preside.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," with Mr. Hay in the chair.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the substitute be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would suggest that the substitute is very short, and I doubt whether many Members of the House have examined it. Therefore I would like to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the allens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All allens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided,

That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

"Sec. 2. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read or not, the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform silps, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the silp in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

"Sec. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit from one part of the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

"Sec. 4. That an alien refused admission to the United States under the provisions of this act shall be sent back to the country whence he came, in the manner provided by section 19 of "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] whether he intends to have an understanding with regard to the disposition of time, or whether that is wholly in the province of the Chair?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest—and I was just going to ask, for the purpose of having an understanding, Can that understanding be made in Committee of the

The CHAIRMAN. It can not, under the rule. The rule does not provide how the time shall be disposed of. That will have to be controlled by the Chair, although the Chair would be very glad if gentlemen would agree in regard to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inform the Chair, as well as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], that, being the only minority member on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization who is opposed to the bill, I have received several requests for time, and I presume those requests ought to be complied with, if it is possible to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burnett] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] ought to control the time, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] for two hours and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] for two hours.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has not the power to recognize a gentleman for more than two hours except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will designate gentlemen to control it.

Mr. BURNETT. The rule says that there shall be two hours on a side. It was my purpose and desire, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], the ranking member on the committee, should control the time on his side of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule:

That there shall be four hours' general debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the measure—

And the Chair will therefore control the time himself.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, does that mean that when a Member is recognized he will be recognized for an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; under the rule of the House. Mr. MANN. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that under the rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], in opposition to the bill, will be entitled to an hour, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] will be entitled to an hour, and divide the

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the time will be divided in this matter so that the gentleman who favors the bill, Mr. Burnett, of Alabama, the chairman of our committee, will be entitled to half of the time and be recognized for the present for one hour, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and myself, who are opposed to the measure, will be entitled to the other two hours?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], the chairman of the committee, is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To make a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the four hours are to be thus divided-

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am about to put the inquiry. I will put it after I make my statement. The time is to be equally divided. I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur. NETT] to have asked that he have two hours and that the other two hours be controlled by some one in opposition to the measure. I then understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asked that the time be divided in the way indicated If that is so, does the Chair entertain the request of by him. the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that under the rules of the House and under this rule the Chair will recognize gentlemen for two hours on one side and for two hours on the other side; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] under the rules of the House

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Who shall control the time in opposition? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman controls his own hour, and he is recognized for an hour. If the gentleman sits down before the hour is up, he yields the floor. The balance of that time will be given to those who are in favor of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I be indulged for just one moment? I think this matter can be very readily cleared up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is no trouble about . It is a very plain proposition. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think so, too, Mr. Chairman, but there have been requests for more than two hours' time on a side, and the Chair says he will assign the distribution of two hours to one gentleman and two hours to another. Gentlemen seem to be concerned about whether they can speak in opposition to the bill after the first hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Why, of course. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] takes the floor he be authorized to consume two hours, or to have that time under his control; that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] takes the floor he be authorized to control two hours. That is within the power of the committee. extend the time of a Member in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can extend the time; yes. Mr. MANN. That is all I am asking. That arrangement is frequently made in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] be extended to two hours, and that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] be extended to two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

That would not prevent my yielding time to any Member and reserving the remainder of the time, would it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it would not. The Chair will recognize any gentleman indicated by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in what position does that

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will have to secure his time by having it yielded to him by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. SABATH. I am the ranking member of the committee, and I am opposed to this measure.

Mr. MANN. I thought that arrangement was satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sarath].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will comply with any reasonable request of the gentleman from Illinois. I will yield time to him.

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make this statement. I think gentlemen are unduly confused about the matter of time. I have no doubt that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] for one hour, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] for one hour, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] for one hour, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] for one hour, and these gentleman in turn will yield such time as they choose to yield. I have no doubt that is the plan which the Chair will follow. It seems to me we are losing a great deal of time which could be devoted to the debate.

Mr. MANN. It is rather awkward to have to appeal to two gentlemen for time. That is the only trouble about it. I do not want any time myself.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We can not go to two men to get time. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-

NETT] is recognized for two hours.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad if Members will give attention to this question, because I feel that no more important matter has been approached by Congress than this since 1906, when a similar proposition was sidetracked for an investigating immigration commission.

Gentlemen in discussing the rule have inveighed against it because they said that it cut off debate, and that there was undue haste in insisting upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, no gentleman can truthfully say that I have manifested any disposition to precipitate, improperly and unjustly, action upon this bill; but, on the other hand, it comes with poor grace for gentlemen to insist that the bill should take its regular course on call of committees, when those same gentlemen have time and time again tried to prevent its taking just that course.

Last Wednesday week and last Wednesday being Calendar Wednesdays, I sat in my place hour after hour waiting for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to be called. Some gentlemen who have to-day spoken so ardently about its coming on in its regular order were also present then, and upon a little bill involving, I believe, a bridge across the Snake River the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfold], who has been loudest and longest in speaking against this rule, made the point of no quorum and delayed the House for perhaps an hour, so as to prevent the call from reaching my committee. Yet that same gentleman to-day comes up and says that the bill ought to take its regular course on the regular call of the committees and that perhaps my committee will be called next Wednesday.

Mr. Chairman, this committee should have been called last Wednesday, and perhaps but for the action of the gentleman who is so insistent it would have been called at that time. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] undertakes to give this question a political turn by talking about what the Democratic House is seeking to do, and he says now that it proposes to impress on legislation the views of the recently elected Democratic candidate for President of the United States. remember just before adjournment of the last session of Congress the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rodenberg] attempted to arouse the foreign vote of the country against President Wilson by a similar attack on the floor of this House. I have no doubt but that that speech had much to do with reducing the electoral vote of the candidate of the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Illinois to that of two of the least States in the Union. Who knows but that that speech also relegated the gentleman from Illinois to private life and came near sending the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] to furnish him illustrious company?

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that any gentleman should undertake to inject partisan politics into this question, that to my mind is of far more importance than any issue that confronts the American people. But if the gentleman wants to impress that kind of an idea, I refer him to the result of the last election, to meditate whether the declaration of the President elect. in the book to which the gentleman from Missouri referred, did not have something to do with the tremendous majority that he received over the party that elected the gentleman from Mis-

I call attention to the further fact that a Republican Senate six months or more ago passed the bill with this same illiteracy test in it, a bill more drastic than the bill substituted by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, a bill which a distinguished Republican member of the Committee on Rules said was too drastic for most of the Members of the House to support. And yet, in order to hold up this Democratic House to the opposition of those affected by the legislation, the gentleman astutely forgets the fact that the Republican Senate passed that bill by a vote of 58 in favor to 9 in opposition to it. Hence the gentleman may have all the sweet consolation that he desires from the action that is being brought about by reason of the fact that the Democrats control this House. I was glad that one gentleman on the other side rebuked the argument of the gentleman. A gentleman, a Republican, who stated here that it had no political bearing, and a gentleman, a member of the Committee on Rules, on the other side, showed that the rule that was now adopted was much less drastic than the same rule adopted by the Republican House of Representatives some years ago when we wanted to get a fair consideration of a similar bill.

Now, in regard to the bill itself. I do not desire to consume more than 25 minutes, because other gentlemen have asked for time. In 1906 a bill of a similar character was before this House. Under the rules of the House at that time there was a substitute proposed and carried by which a commission was created to investigate the question of immigration and naturalization and report to the House. I opposed the commission, because I knew the purpose of that amendment was to delay legislation and perhaps defeat it. I was a member of that com-mission, and we made our investigations and reported. As a result of the investigations the commission wound up its conclusions by this terse statement:

The commission as a whole recommend restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, furnishes in its report reasons for such restrictions, and points out methods by which Congress can attain the desired result if its judgment coincides with that of the commission.

Even the gentleman from New York, Mr. Bennet, a former Member of this House and a member of the commission, concurred in that statement, although he and he alone of the nine members, dissented from the conclusion of the commission, which is as follows:

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

After citing various methods of restriction, a majority of the commission favored the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

The gentleman, in arguing the rule a few moments ago, said there was no demand for this legislation except in localities where there were none of these foreign immigrants. I want to read you what the leader of the American Federation of Labor has said on that very point. He quotes a resolution of that great body of workingmen as follows:

[From the American Federationist.] IMMIGRATION-UP TO CONGRESS. (By Samuel Gompers.)

THE A. P. OF L. ON IMMIGRATION.

Resolution 77, passed at the annual convention held at Toronto, Ontario, November, 1909:

Whereas the illiteracy test is the most practical means for restricting the present stimulated influx of cheap labor, whose competition is so ruinous to the workers already here, whether native or foreign; and and

"Whereas an increased head tax upon steamships is needed to provide better facilities, to more efficiently enforce our immigration laws, and to restrict immigration; and
"Whereas the requirement of some visible means of support would enable immigrants to find profitable employment; and
"Whereas the effect of the Federal Bureau of Distribution is to stimulate foreign immigration: Therefore be it
"Resolved by the American Federation of Labor in twenty-ninth annual convention assembled, That we demand the enactment of the illiteracy test, the money test, an increased head tax, and the abolition of the Distribution Bureau; and be it further "Resolved, That we favor heavily fining the foreign steamships for bringing debarable aliens where reasons for debarment could have been ascertained at the time of sale of ticket."

The them says:

He then says:

He then says:

The final inning of the tug of war over immigration has now begun. In this contest tremendous forces are engaged. On the side of America are the upholders of two distinctive American sentiments—the maintenance of the American standard of living for our wageworking classes and the maintenance of American institutions as they are, unimpaired through the financial degradation of the working classes. On the proimmigration side is the powerful immigration machine, composed of the transocean combine, with all its thousands of agents and other innumerable parasites, the bankers, padrones, etc., who are coining money out of the millions of immigrants coming in the course of years into this country from Europe.

The center of this tug of war has at last shifted to Congress. No longer is the discussion indefinite, casual, or partisan, or without an immediate object, conducted through the press and other insufficient agencies of information and debate. No longer, either, is it backed up merely by individual impressions or the partial investigation question through scientific means. It set out to ascertain the undeniable facts, and after three full years of research its commission has brought forward no less than 40 volumes on the subject, covering every possible phase. Its recommendations it has brought forward in concise form in a separate pamphlet.

A reading of these recommendations confirms the facts of the case as they have been accepted by the American Federation of Labor after the serious study its members had given the question for decades. The local and then the international unions and finally the annual conventions of the American Federation of Labor after the serious study its membershe had given the question for decades. The local and then the international unions and finally the annual conventions of the American Federation of Labor itself have had immigration up for consideration as one of the principal labor topics on literally thousands of occasions. The membership as a whole, from upho from foreign lands who are accustomed to so low a grade of living that they can underbid the wage earners established in this country and still save money. Whole communities, in fact whole regions, have witnessed a rapid deterioration in the mode of living of their working classes consequent on the incoming of the swarms of lifelong poverty-stricken allens. Entire industries have seen the percentage of newly arrived laborers rising until in certain regions few American men can at present be found among the unskilled.

By the commission's report it is shown that in many communities as high as 50 and even 70 per cent of the children in the public schools are the offspring of foreign fathers. This remarkable change in America, it must be kept in mind, is almost wholly in the wageworking class. It was recognized by our wageworkers in many parts of the country that this radical change in population was taking place, and hence delegates to the trade-union conventions began some years ago to give their testimoly as to the need of restriction of the evidently assisted or artificially promoted immigration. Opposition to those who supported these views brought about a continual sifting and searching for the truth as it affected trade-unionism and the general wage level. At work in advance of the investigators of the Immigration Commission were the representatives of labor as most deeply interested investigators in the cause of labor. Not only in a general way but most strikingly in certain occupations and in certain districts of the country what had been brought home to trade-unionists as going on through immigration was the rapid change in the membership of the unions as well as in population. In no country on the face of the globe do such rapid transitions in industry and in population take place as in ours. Therefore in time the general opinion among union men on immigration had come to be such as was expressed in the resolution passed at the Toronto convention.

The United States Immigration Commission, after its pro

The United States Immigration Commission, after its profracted studies, perfectly agrees with this opinion. The commission as a whole, in its own words, "recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, furnishes in its report reasons for such restriction, and points out methods by which Congress can attain the desired result if its judgment coincides with that of the commission."

Further:

Further:

On behalf of American labor it is to be said that the action of the trade-unions in this country on this most delicate international question involves a step that touches the heart of every man contemplating it. That step, the advocacy of exclusion, is not prompted by any assumption of superior virtue over our foreign brothers. We disavow for American organized labor the holding of any vulgar or unworthy prejudices against the foreigner. We recognize the noble possibilities in the poorest of the children of the earth who come to us from European lands. We know that their civilization is sufficiently near our own to bring their descendants in one generation up to the general level of the best American citizenship. It is not on account of their assumed inferiority, or through any pusillanimous contempt for their abject poverty that most reluctantly the lines have been drawn by America's workingmen against the indiscriminate admission of aliens to this country. It is simply a case of the self-preservation of the American working classes. working class

That would seem to refute the idea that distinguished gentlemen have that this cry originates from among those where there is none of that class of immigration. All over the country the demand comes up. From the great patriotic organizations that are perhaps more numerous in the North it comes. From the granges, the representatives of the farmers' organizations all over the North, it comes. From some 3,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor, expressing themselves through Mr. Gompers, and by positive resolutions the declaration is made that it has come to be a question of life and death between the American workingman and the man who is imported here for the purpose of beating down the price of American wages and beating down the standard of living of his wife and children. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. For a question.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that to-day the wages of unskilled laboring men are higher than ever before in the history of our country? [Applause.]
Mr. BURNETT. 'That may be true, and why not? What the wage earner has to pay for the necessaries of life is more than double what the increase of wages has been. [Applause.] Mr. SABATH. Is the immigrant responsible for the high cost of living

Mr. BURNETT. Is the immigrant responsible? Mr. SABATH. Or the laboring man? Is not that due to the trusts and combinations?

Mr. BURNETT. That is going into a field of politics that I would like to eschew, and I shall not follow the example of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri in undertaking to go into that. But one thing I desire to say, and that is, that no man denies that the wages of the wage earner of the country are too low; and I have no doubt, as is said by Mr. Gompers and representatives of labor, that that influx of undesirable labor from southern Europe has been to a great extent responsible for keeping those wages down. I had an experience myself lately which I desire to relate.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURNETT. In one moment. A mine operator near Birmingham said to me not long since that he was using labor from different nationalities. I said: "What is the best?" He said: "The Welsh, the Irish, the English, the Scotch, the American, the German, and the Scandinavian." I said: "Who is your poorest laborer?" He replied: "The south Italian." I said: "Worse than the negro?" He said: "Infinitely worse." I said: "Why, then, do you employ him?" His answer was: "For the purpose of regulating the price of labor." And it is that demand for the pauper labor of Europe, Mr. Chairman, And it is that is coming up from all over this country by the great

Mr. POWERS rose.

Mr. BURNETT, First I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to understand that I am for his bill, but I want some information. Does the Committee on Immigration find that the same situation exists now as existed at the time of the report of the Immigration Committee, namely, that there is an oversupply of unskilled labor in this country'

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that in this I was at Ellis Island just last spring. The commissioner of immigration there told me that a family had come over in which some members represented themselves as being car-The question was whether they ought not to be deported because of their liability to become a public charge. He said he thought he had a right to take into consideration among other things the condition of the labor market. He went out into the city of New York and found that last spring there were 3,000 carpenters in that city who were absolutely unemployed.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. That is not unskilled labor.
Mr. BURNETT. It is the lower class of carpenter's labor he had reference to.

Mr. CURLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURNETT. To the gentleman from New York [Mr.

GOLDFOGLE

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, it would enlighten the members of this committee if the gentleman from Alabama would answer the question put by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. As I recall it, as a member of that committee going there

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, I will ask the gentleman not to make a speech.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There was no investigation.
Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman has his own time, and he should make his speech in his own time and not try to make a speech in my time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like the gentleman from Alabama to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as it will avoid another question by me.

Mr. BURNETT. I think undoubtedly there is an oversupply of unskilled labor, and I illustrate it by the fact that these men who were coming to work as carpenters were not skilled; they were underlings working in the lower strata of the carpenter's trade. That is illustrated, I believe, all over this country. I must decline to yield further, because gentlemen will have time of their own and I will not have enough time to answer all these questions that are injected into this discussion.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURNETT. I can not yield. Here is the further statement that Mr. Gompers made:

ment that Mr. Gompers made:

The illiteracy test advocated by the American Federation of Labor was added to the bill and passed by the Senate. The head tax for immigrants was increased from $4$ to $5$. The bill was then referred to the House Committee on Immigration where, after prolonged consideration, it was decided, on June 6, to strike out several important features. Many conflicting opinions developed in the House on the advisability of giving the amended measure consideration during the session. Many futile efforts were made to have the bill called up in the House, the general cause given being that other committees held the calendar ahead of the Immigration Committee. Efforts were made to obtain a special rule from the Rules Committee so that the bill could be then brought before the House. Hon, John L. Burnett, chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, made vigorous endeavors to obtain action, and in response to his request before the Committee on Rules, he finally secured the positive proposition that a special rule would be reported early in December of the next session of Congress.

Earnestly I urge our organizations to bring the subject matter of this bill to the attention of their Representatives and emphasize the request for an early passage of this reasonable regulation or restriction of immigration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire for just a few moments to call

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire for just a few moments to call attention to what the propositions of the bill are. The Dillingham bill, as has been stated by gentlemen, was composed of about 58 pages, 39 sections. We had first the Burnett bill before the committee and after lengthy hearings before the Dillingham bill ever came to the committee that bill was ordered reported. The Dillingham bill came and we gave hearings of two or three days on the Dillingham bill, and after careful consideration the friends of restriction, the friends of the illiteracy test decided that all after the enacting clause of the Dillingham bill ought to be stricken out and what is known as the Burnett bill should be substituted in its place. For the information of gentlemen who perhaps have not done us the honor of reading that bill, I want to call your attention to what it proposed. It reads:

Proposed. It reads:

That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dielect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

Now I will read section 3:

Sec. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit: (a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States; (c) all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a very short question?

Mr. BURNETT. All right, sir. Mr. BATHRICK. In the first paragraph, referring to those who will be permitted to enter, should not the daughter not widowed or the son left on the other side be permitted to land?

Mr. BURNETT. Those under 16 years of age do not have the illiteracy test applied, whether it be a son or a daughter. The idea is that a son over 16 years old is able to take care of himself, whereas an unmarried or widowed daughter should be allowed to come in on account of the fact of their dependence. Mr. Chairman, this is a conservative bill. The records at our ports show-I will not state it accurately, but I am going to give you just about the ratio in which they will be excluded. Those who come here without their families will, as a rule—many of them—be excluded. Take, for instance, the south Italian. About 56 per cent of those over 16 years of age who come to our ports are unable to read a word of their own language; of the north Italian, however, who is a Caucasian, less than 7 per cent of them would be excluded. Of the Sicilians, whom we class with the south Italians, about the same number will be excluded. Of the Poles and the Greeks and the Syrians perhaps something like 40 per cent will be excluded. It is that class of people, Mr. Chairman, along the borders of the Mediterranean Sea, whom the illiteracy test will keep out. Now, how about those who are my ancestors and yours? Less than 1 per cent of the Irish, Scotch, English, and Welch would be kept out; less than 2 per cent of our splendid German citizenship of this country would be kept out; less than 1 per cent of the Bohemians will be kept out; less than one-half of 1 per cent of the Scandinavians, who have built up and made to blossom as a rose our great northwest territory, will be excluded under this bill. Of the Jewish people the greater number will come in, because this very paragraph says those who can read the Yiddish and Jewish may come in, and Jewish gentlemen before our committee stated that almost every Jew of over 16 years of age could read his Yiddish Bible or Hebrew Bible.

Hence, my friends, they would be let in. For fear that there might be some who would be excluded by chance that ought not to be we make provision that those who were shown to be fleeing from religious persecutions should not be subject to that test. Now, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts?

BURNETT] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURNETT. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, personally I feel that the Burnett bill is simply a sugar-coated pill, and that in conference the Dillingham bill will be substituted. Is there any provision in the Dillingham bill that provides for the admission of a person who can read the Hebrew or Yiddish dialect?

Mr. BURNETT. There is no doubt of its being the desire of the framers of the Dillingham bill to permit such people to be admitted. I have not read the Dillingham bill in quite a while, but I think so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question; yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In view of the fact that "illiterates" and "unskilled laborers" have been used here as interchangeable terms, I wanted to ask the gentleman if he contends that literacy is necessary in the making of a skilled, and a very efficiently skilled, laborer?

Mr. BURNETT. Not absolutely. That is not the proposition, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman overlooks the proposition that this strikes not at the particular individual on account of his illiteracy. Many of the best men of my southern country and yours, Mr. Chairman, are illiterates because of the titanic struggle, the fratricidal war from 1861 to 1865, from which we have not yet recovered. But the proposition here is that those who are the unskilled laborers, those who know nothing of our standards of morals, those who are the undesirables, those that come from that section of Europe, are, many of them, plying the black hand; and those that are not become the victims, and they will be the ones that will be excluded.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further now, because I must yield finally in a few moments to other gentlemen.

Another reason why this bill ought to pass is that it is certain and definite. We have propositions in our laws as they exist for turning back those who are liable to become a public The people on the other side do not know when they leave what interpretation will be put upon that. They come under the invitation of our laws, and when they come here they are turned back, and some of the most deplorable cases are those where the Commissioner of Immigration has had to execute that law and has turned back thousands of those people in one year. But, Mr. Chairman, we have here a test that is definite and fair to the immigrant and fair to the American wage earner and the American citizens, who do not desire to see the standards of living in this country broken down by those whom one great German characterized as the "spittoons spittoons of Europe that were being emptied upon this country."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman-Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on the other side know that they are going to have time, and it is unfair to undertake to consume more of my time by questions when they have two hours. No doubt the gentleman from New York [Mr. Golffogle] will have his share. I wanted to get the bill up last Wednesday in order that he might have unlimited debate, but he did not want it to come that way. The man on the other side of the ocean knows whether he can read or not. This bill does not call for the writing test, because it was a matter of record that nearly all those who can read can write. We thought this was enough to strike at the evil. Only yesterday I received a resolution from some of the labor leaders in this city, the Knights of Labor.

In the South we have the Farmers' Union, composed of some 3,000,000 people; the Federation of Labor, also composed of some 3,000,000 people. We have them all over the country, my friends, and they are asking for the passage of this bill, and it is not only fair to them, but it is fair to the man who is coming to this country to know before he ever leaves his shores whether he can be admitted to American shores. And this will bring that about. It is definite; it is certain; it strikes down the very class that we believe to be undesirable, and at the same time it continues to open wide our ports to the splendid civilization from northwestern Europe that none of us desires to keep out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 min-

Mr. BURNETT. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield? Mr. BURNETT. There is one statement, Mr. Chairman, that I forgot to make, and I am afraid it will slip me. A number of amendments may be offered to this bill. Some Members state that it does not go far enough, and some members of the committee think it does not go far enough. I wish to say before I take my seat that I hope there will be no amendments offered by a friend of this bill. Let the bill go through as it is. It is a step in the right direction, Mr. Chairman, and let us pass it and get it over to the Senate. I hope no very drastic amendment will be put upon it by the conferees; and if I am one of them, I will try to prevent the adoption of drastic amendments in conference that may endanger the passage of

There are some propositions in the Dillingham bill-propositions such as the Root amendment—that I am not in favor of. I am not in favor of loading this bill down with amendments that might endanger its passage in the House. It is results that I am after, more than anything else, and if there are amendments offered here, either by friends or foes, I hope the friends of this measure, from beginning to end, every time a vote is taken, even if it takes all summer or all winter, will vote them down and stand here and insist on getting a measure such as the people of this country are demanding at our hands.

The Christmas holiday vacation is coming in a few days, and it looks to me as though opponents of the bill were endeavoring to lay over the consideration of this measure until next Wednesday, as was suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], hoping that Members will leave the city for their holiday vacation, and in that way to defeat this bill. I hope they will be voted down, whether we feel in our hearts that such amendments ought to be accepted or not, in the interest of passing this bill and securing legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield? Mr. BURNETT. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. So far as the gentleman as chairman is able to speak of the policy of the committee, the policy of the committee will be to vote against the amendments, in the interest of getting legislation?

Mr. BURNETT. That is my desire, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And will the gentleman allow me to say, so far as I can speak of the minority membership of the committee, that our policy will be exactly the same? And speaking for myself, who believe in far greater restrictions than this bill carries, I shall vote against every amendment that is more drastic than the bill, because I do not want to see the bill defeated by being overweighted.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the rest of my time. Mr. Chairman, the committee has had before it several times the question to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred. There is legislation pending at the present time which will be passed, I have no doubt. A bill has passed the House and has gone over to the Senate which will no doubt be enacted into law. I think that bill will cover every imaginary trouble, and it is unnecessary to adopt this amendment at this time. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be notified at the expiration of 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be notified.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my opposition to this bill is based upon grounds of patriotism equal to those of any of the patriotic or labor associations that have advo-cated its passage, and upon the higher ground of humanity itself. I want no better authority to quote to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr], who has advocated this new restriction of immigration, than the great leader of the Demo-cratic Party, Thomas Jefferson, who, in that immortal docu-ment, the Declaration of Independence, drafted in my city, set out, among other grievances against the existing King George, that-

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration bither; and rais-ing the conditions of new appropriations of land.

We have, all and every one, whether our blood be as blue as that of the very oldest family in the land, descended in some degree from those who came to these shores as foreigners under conditions similar to those whom you propose to forbid to-day. In this bill, substituted for the so-called Dillingham bill, the committee proposes to do what, boiled down in the crucible, is just this: To exclude from the United States, from the opportunities presented here to all of our forefathers and to us-

All aliens over 16 years of age physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew and Yiddish.

Do you propose to bar the anarchist? No. His case is covered by existing law. Do you propose to exclude the criminal? No. He is forbidden by existing law. Do you propose to keep out any who are morally undesirable? No. That is all covered by existing law. But in order to make good the report of the expensive commission that went to Europe to investigate this question, and in order to have something to hinge your case upon, you propose to exclude from the United States those not morally unfit, those who have committed no crime, those whose offense has been no greater than that of your ancestors, and whose only fault and misfortune, downtrodden as they are, is that they can not read or write. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have but 10 minutes, I am sorry to say, and I can not yield just now.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Speak to me of patriotism, and I quote to you the Declaration of Independence, upon which most of the patriotism of this country to-day is founded. Speak to me of humanity, and I speak of that uplift which you preach, but which in this instance you do not intend to practice, since you propose to shut the door of hope and opportunity to the downtrodden.

You intend to bar all those over 16 years of age for no crime except that they can not read. My friends, you may protect your State lines; you may protect your national lines, but you can not protect your consciences against an act of barbarism, against men of the same race, who ask the same right under God to exist and prosper which you and your for-bears have had.

And what penalty do you propose to inflict upon these unfortunates? They are asking for help, for opportunity, for life, for education, and you say, "Back, back to the land of oppres-for education, and you say, "Back, back to the land of oppression; back to the conditions which are so deplorable. There is no hope for those who attempt to enter here."

But to the crook who is educated, to the schemer, the anarchist, and the special pleader; to the man who can write an essay; to the fellow with a college education whose character will not stand the test, you say, "You may come in, because we need you in this country. We are in need of learned men, even if they have disturbed the order and the peace of other countries." tries.

You propose to turn down the willing and the plodding laborer who will be an efficient workman in the United States and who will carry on that toilsome grind with which you will not stain your hands, while you open the door to him who will meet the test you impose and who will then start in on the work of undermining you and your Government. You are going to extend the hand of welcome to the Black Hand, for, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], that the business of the Black Hand is the writing of letters, and the Black Hander can read and write and meet every condition imposed by this bill. You do not stop him. You stop only the innocent poor who can not read and write, who are incapable of concocting a Black Hand letter, but who become the victims of the Black Hander the moment they undertake to live honestly and to prosper in the United States. [Applause.]
Patriotism to the winds, humanity overthrown; this is the proposition. I am patriotic when the line is drawn against the morally undesirable, but I would rather stand with my conscience and my God with those who are asking light and help, even as they did when following the Master 2,000 years I would not bar the door of hope against the worthy or shut the gate of opportunity on mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, if I thought immigration was detrimental to our country or to any class of people in this country, I would not raise my voice against the passage of this bill. but I firmly believe that all those who have come to these shores as immigrants, from 1620 down to the present time, have aided in the development of our country. The same hue and cry in the development of our country. The same hue and cry that we hear to-day against immigration and the immigrant was raised nearly a century ago. I have here a book containing reports of commissions investigating the subject of immigration as early as 1819, nearly 100 years ago. I am not going to take up your time by reading all of the reports of the various commissions, wherein at that early period it was asserted that it was high time our doors were closed to the undesirable immigrants; but I wish to call my colleague's attention to the statement therein appearing, taken from the Second Annual Report of the Managers of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism in New York City, 1819, and which is, in part, as follows:

in New York City, 1819, and which is, in part, as follows:

First, as to the emigrants from foreign countries, the managers are compelled to speak of them in the language of astonishment and apprehension. Through this inlet pauperism threatens us with the most overwhelming consequences * *.

This country is the resort of vast numbers of those needy and wretched beings. Thousands are continually resting their hopes on the refuge which she offers, filled with delusive visions of plenty and luxury. They seize the earliest opportunity to cross the Atlantic and land upon our shores. * * What has been the destination of this immense accession to our population, and where is it now? Many of these foreigners have found employment; some may have passed into the interior, but thousands still remain among us. They are frequently found destitute in our streets; they seek employment at our doors; they are found in our almshouses and in our hospitals; they are found at the bar of criminal tribunals, in our Bridewell, our penitentiary, and our State prison. And we lament to say that they are too often led by want, by vice, and by habit to form a phalanx of plunder and depredations, rendering our city more liable to increase of crime, and our houses of correction more crowded with convicts and felons.

And let me quote an extract from a paper quoted in these

And let me quote an extract from a paper quoted in these reports, entitled "Imminent Dangers to the Institutions of the United States Through Foreign Immigration," and so forth, by "An American," S. F. B. Morse, 1835.

In speaking of the immigration of previous years as compared with that of the day:

Then we were few, feeble, and scattered. Now we are numerous, strong, and concentrated. Then our accessions of immigration were real accessions of strength from the ranks of the learned and the good, from enlightened mechanic and artisan and intelligent husbandman. Now immigration is the accession of weakness, from the ignorant and vicious, or the priest-ridden slaves of Ireland and Germany, or the outcast tenants of the poorhouses and prisons of Europe.

I would be more than pleased if all of you gentlemen could find time to read these reports, in order that you might compare the prophecies which they contain with the actual results of this immigration and see how uncalled for and unwarranted were their fears.

Though it has been proven again and again that the fears of these men were not based upon any actual facts which would warrant their making these statements, and while practically the same conditions exist to-day, yet certain people, who should be informed on the subject but who apparently are not, repeatedly make the unfounded charges that immigration is detrimental to the welfare of our country. To those misguided individuals and the others who genuinely believe this to be a fact I wish to say that their fears are groundless

A few moments ago the chairman of my committee, Mr. Bur-NETT, stated that the large influx of immigration is detrimental to our laboring people; that it keeps the wages down. I will say to him, as I have before, that all who have studied the history of our country and are not blinded by prejudice admit that notwithstanding the large numbers of immigrants who have come to our shores within the past 10 years the wage of all skilled, as well as unskilled, labor is higher in America to-day than ever before. He quotes the report of the late Immigration Commission. Mr. Chairman, that commission made its report on conditions as they existed during the years of 1907 and 1908, and their report does not represent the facts as they exist at the present time. I admit that in 1907 and in 1908 and 1909, during the panic, that there were people without employment, but to day you will not see many men idle in any of the large centers which receive the largest proportion of the immigrants entering this country. At present in practically all of the larger cities and in the industrial centers there is a great demand for labor; in fact, to-day in the city which I have the honor in part to represent we are paying from $2 to $2.75—yes, as high as $3—a day for unskilled labor, and I am informed that there are hundreds of manufacturers and employers of labor that are seeking daily for additional laborers, both skilled and unskilled, and yet are not able to procure them.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the Chicago News, which contains over 1,000 advertisements appearing under the caption "Help wanted." There appeared in the New York Times of May 20 last a dispatch from Pittsburgh stating that "Pittsburgh is experiencing a labor famine so serious that many big industries are advertising far and wide to get men," and a little further on the article said:

The employing agent of one corporation said he could give work to 7,000 laborers.

The report by the commissioner of licenses in New York City on employment agencies, made during the first part of this year, st tes that-the difficulties of the servant problem are increasing, due to the dearth of servants. In New York City more than 100,000 servants could find work, in addition to those already employed.

Would these figures give one the impression that there is an oversupply of labor in America at the present time and that the labor markets are flooded? Most assuredly not.

What, then, would be the result were we to enact this proposed legislation, which its supporters state would bar out at least 250,000 immigrants a year? Where, then, would it be possible to secure people to fill these positions?

As concerns the literacy test incorporated in this bill, let me quote here a portion of an editorial in the New York American with reference to these restrictive measures:

It is doubtful if a more deceptive and unworthy measure ever passed the American Senate than the Dillingham-Burnett immigration bill, with its Root amendment.

It is smooth and harmless upon the surface, as corrupt legislation

And its foolish educational test, which would have kept the mother of Abraham Lincoln out of the country, is designed to keep out of our country millions of honest, earnest, sincere men and women that the country needs.

And the Washington Post had the following to say in its editorial columns regarding this bill:

If the United States made any pretensions to being a country dedicated exclusively to the "upper classes," the erudite, and the fastidious, the immigration bill which has been included in the Democratic program for the present session would be an accurate reflection of such sentiments. If, however, the United States is to remain what it was intended to be—a haven for the oppressed, the lover of liberty and freedom, the toiler, and the ambitious—then the present bill is a step backward toward an exclusiveness which, if exercised 100 years ago, would have paralyzed the growth of the Nation.

The illiteracy test would have robbed the country of some of its strongest and greatest men. Some of the ablest lawyers at the bar, the noblest humanitarians, the best and most progressive business men of today are the progeny of parents who could neither read nor write when they came to the United States.

The country needs as many healthy European immigrants as will come here, and the only tests that should be applied are those of health and morality.

Again, let me quote from an editorial appearing in this same paper:

If the same test were to be applied to common laborers in the cotton States, that section would be paralyzed industrially, as the North will be to no smell extent if the Burnett bill becomes a law. However repugnant total ignorance in the foreign born may be, the second generation finds them well on the road to assimilation.

It is amusing, Mr. Chairman, to find that the great objections that are made to immigration as a rule come from gentlemen who reside in sections of our country to which no immigration goes.

As an example of this, I wish to refer to some figures which I have, showing the foreign population in the districts of three of the prominent supporters of this bill. I find that in the district of the chairman of our committee, Mr. BURNETT, there are 197,409 people, and out of that number only 1,572 foreigners, about seven-tenths of 1 per cent. Then I turn to the district of my friend from Georgia, Mr. RODDENBERY, and I find his population 297,805; while out of that entire number there are only 555 foreigners.

Next, let me refer to the district which is represented by my colleague, Mr. Dies, of Texas, and I find that his population is 273,842, and there are only 4,981 foreigners. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. DIES. How many foreign population does the gentleman find in his own district?

Mr. SABATH. I find in my district a great many of them, and I desire to say that it was not necessary for me to secure the report as to my district, because there is no one in my district that objects to their coming there, for they recognize the fact that these people have helped to build up that section of the city, that they have helped to build up the entire city, and that the Nation as a whole has been materially benefited as a result of their coming. Yes; they have helped to build up the State from which the gentleman comes, the State which to-day has land valued at $150 an acre; land which could have been purchased for $1.50, $2 and $3 an acre before the immigrants commenced to settle and develop the State.

Mr. DIES. I thought, in view of the fact that the gentleman was quoting the number of immigrants in my district as an enlightenment of my views on the question, he might enlighten us as to the source of his inspiration by giving the number of foreigners in his district.

I have stated that there are a great many Mr. SABATH. in my district and my city; and, notwithstanding that, I have not, nor has anyone else, heard a single word in favor of the Dillingham or Burnett bills coming from my city. The people that come in contact with these people do not object to their coming. They are glad they have come, for as a rule they make We know in our own city-and the people in good citizens. all large centers to which immigration comes are agreed—that these people do the hardest work; that they are the people who do the work which the American laboring man, as a rule, does not care to do, and they thus secure for the American workmen better positions. Mr. DIES. M

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. Mr. DIES. I believe the Burnett bill would cut out about 250,000 illiterate immigrants, about 85 per cent of whom come from southern and eastern Europe. Does the gentleman believe that those 250,000 illiterate immigrants from southern and eastern Europe are capable of self-government, and does the gentleman believe that their coming will help to hold up the standard of American living and wages?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, I do; because they have been able to do so for many centuries. [Applause.] They come from sections of Europe where they had an excellent form of government before this country was ever discovered. As to wages, I wish to say that they do not lower wages. Statistics will prove that wages in the sections of our country which are blessed with immigration are from 50 to 100 per cent higher than in the gentleman's district.

Mr. DIES. To what country has the gentleman reference-

Italy?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; Italy, Greece, Bohemia, Germany, Ireland, Poland, and other countries.

Mr. DIES. Certainly the gentleman does not pretend that for a thousand years they have been capable of self-government as manifested in their form of government?

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will read up on their history, he will satisfy himself of that.

Mr. Chairman, personally, as the chairman of my committee has said, the Burnett bill would not directly affect to any great extent the class of people in whom I am interested. I venture to say that the people whom I directly represent would suffer but very little, as I have no Italians, no Sicilians, no Greeks in my district, and the majority of the people there come from a section of the country that statistics will show has only a small percentage of illiterates. The Bohemians have only a little over 1 per cent of illiterates, and the same thing is true of the Germans and the Irish and the Swedes and the Hollanders. There may be a larger percentage among the Jewish and the Polish people, but I can not give the exact figures as to these races. It is not because of the effect the passage of this bill will have upon the classes of people who reside in my district that I oppose it, but for the reason that I believe an effort will be made to substitute the Dillingham bill for the Burnett bill. and I feel confident that there is no one here who has studied the Dillingham bill who would be willing, if he be thoroughly familiar with the provisions of it, to vote for it. The chairman of the Immigration Committee has stated, and I have always found him to be sincere, that he is in favor of and will insist upon his bill, not only in the House, but I hope also in the conference to which it will go.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that great demands are being made by laboring people of this country for the enactment of this legislation. I venture to say that in my city there are more labor organizations than exist in any other city in the United States, yet I have not heard a single voice raised in support of this measure, nor have I received communications from a single organization in my city which is in favor of the most property of this restrictive legislation. It is true that I have had enactment of this restrictive legislation. It is true that I have had sent me some resolutions adopted by organizations in other sections, but let us consider these for a minute and see what a small percentage of the people they represent and how little importance should be attached to them.

I have before me now an open letter addressed to Members of Congress by Mr. John W. Hayes, general master workman, Order of Knights of Labor, Washington, D. C., in which he urges the passage of the Dillingham bill. Here is a man professing to be the leader of a labor organization, and yet this communication is printed by a nonunion firm, surely an indication that this organization does not live up to the doctrine which it preaches. And how many members has this organization, whom does it represent, and how large a percentage of our population, can anyone tell me that? Personally I do not know of a single Member of this House who has received this information from any of these organizations.

Here I find a letter signed by a Mr. H. E. Willis, stating that various railroad employees' organizations have adopted resolutions in favor of the literacy test, but every sincere friend of labor should hesitate before accepting this man's indorsement. This Mr. Willis is the same gentleman who was lobbying here last winter for the commission, or Brantley, workmen's compensation bill—a bill that has been denounced by practically every labor organization to whose members it has been explained. It is a bill which provides compensation in name only and which was not drafted in the interest of the thousands of unfortunate workmen that are killed and maimed each year, but solely in the interest of the railroads.

I might also mention two or three resolutions adopted by farmers' cooperative unions, of which I doubt if any of you have ever heard, and those adopted by the Order of Independent Americans and other organizations similar in character to this latter order, all of them composed of dissatisfied individuals who are steeped with prejudice and who will not permit themselves to look at this question in an unbiased way.

In contrast to the attitude of a few bigoted organizations let me quote from an article sent out last spring from Omaha, which says in part:

Western and Southern States are crying out for more farm workers. We need agricultural producers in Nebraska, and should do everything possible to induce them to come and till the soil. This is true of every midwest State. In an area comprising nearly the western half of Nebraska the last census shows that there are not more than six people to the square mile.

For eight years foreigners have been coming into America at the rate of over 1,000,000 a year, and nearly half of them were tillers of the soil in the old country. The West needs these men. If we expect to develop our agricultural resources we must have more farmers. Future growth depends upon increased agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, it is not true, as stated by some of these supporting this measure, that the incoming immigrants all flock to the large cities, there to increase the present congestion. It may be true that they go first to the cities, but their residence there is only temporary. Gentlemen, I state, without fear of contradiction, that there is nothing closer to the heart of the incoming immigrant than his desire to become possessed of a piece of land which he can call his own, and he does this at his very first opportunity. Hundreds, yes thousands, of these people are leaving the cities each year and settling on farms.

Statistics will show that our native-born Americans are leaving the farms in large numbers and are now seeking the smaller towns and cities. No one will deny that one of our greatest problems to-day is that of securing men to put into cultivation the thousands upon thousands of acres which are now lying dormant. The Canadian Parliament appropriates over $1,000,000 annually to encourage immigration to their country, and see the wonderful growth they have undergone during the past few

Let me quote from the statement made before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization by George H. Fairchild, senator of the Territory of Hawaii, on April 25, 1912, what he has to say regarding the admission of illiterate immigrants to Hawaii:

It would be difficult to find under the American flag a more progressive, better educated, and thoroughly Americanized body of men, but one generation removed from the European stock, than are the second generation * * * the sons of the sturdy but illiterate farmers brought to Hawaii.

I have before me a copy of a message that was sent to the House of Representatives on March 2, 1897, by that great leader of Democracy, the first Democratic President since the war, Grover Cleveland, in vetoing a similar bill. Time does not permit me to read his message, but he, together with thousands upon thousands of intelligent Americans, after a careful study of this momentous question, has gone on record against this unfair legislation.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. Mr. BURNETT. Is Is it not true that at the time Mr. Cleveland vetoed that bill the entire immigration to this country was not as much as the Italian and Greek immigration is now?

Mr. SABATH. In proportion to the population of our country, the immigration to-day is not any greater than it was then. Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. Mr. LOBECK. Was it not also a fact that at that time the price of labor in this country was so low that immigration did not come and there was not the demand for labor that there is now, and that was one of the reasons why they did not come?

Mr. SABATH. I think that is true; but right here I desire to say that from all the information I have and from all the information I can secure and from all the statistics I have studied, I can not find wherein immigration has ever reduced the price of labor, but, on the contrary, you may go over the immigration figures from year to year and you will find that whenever the immigration was large wages were higher.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?
